The first text on our Almanack for 1895 contains two vital truths which, remembered, cannot but aid to holy living and useful service. "Mine eyes shall be upon the faithful of the land, that they may dwell with Me: (2) he that walketh in a perfect way, he shall minister unto Me" (Psa. ci. 6, R.V.). The worth of the faithful of the land to the land no one can estimate. Ten righteous men would have saved the cities of the plain; for the elect's sake the days of trouble are shortened. God will guide and guard his own. And then, coming from the general to the particular, from the faithful as a body to the faithful in the person of one upright man, who walketh in a perfect way, we are told that it is he who shall minister unto the Lord. They must be clean who bear the vessels of the sanctuary. God will bring nigh to Himself in holy and exalted service every one whose ways please Him. The faithful will have no need to seek either service or honour; they will seek Him. God will exalt him.

It was remarked in one of these notes last week by a highly-esteemed contributor :—

> The falling away of the best young intellect from the Romish tendency, is sure to be followed by the crowd. Besides, we do not see how the Romish idea of a church can retain strong minds in a land where the Bible is the heritage of all.

There is, however, another side to this. It is quite true that where the Bible is understood and believed, Romanism can make no way. But the Bible is very superficially taught from the pulpit, and is very scantily read by the majority of professing Christians. There is little parental instruction; family worship is to a considerable extent a formality, and our young people grow up with slight knowledge of the letter, and still slighter apprehension of the spirit of Scripture. "Having the form of godliness, but denying its power" is the fashionable "cult" (to use the modern literary term).

"The prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means, and the people love to have it so." A man may know the truth of the Gospel, but if he does not wish to live it he will willingly be deceived into supposing that he can cast his responsibilities upon a "priest," until the word he knows in his head has ceased to touch his seared conscience and his hardened heart.

The narrative given by Mr. L. K. Shaw in our last issue, of "A Quarter of a Century among Homeless Children," must have stirred many hearts. The hand of God has been manifestly in the whole movement. Its growth has indeed been remarkable, no less than 2595 children having been dealt with during the past year, and this notwithstanding determined opposition from the Romanists. We trust it will be remembered that the needs of such an institution are great. Mr. Shaw and his helpers well deserve loyal and liberal support in their work at Strangeways, Manchester.

There was sorrow on the sea this Christmastide, and on the land too. We are only too familiar with dreadful accidents at our busy holiday seasons, notwithstanding all the skill with which our railways are managed, and the fidelity to duty with which they are worked. No calculation can forecast the effects of a terrific gale. Even if it be proved that the catastrophe at Chelford was a pure accident, this fact brings no one back to life, but it prevents the sense of indignation which rises when life is sacrificed through carelessness or bad management. The gale which drove a goods wagon on to the rushing express made havoc by sea and land, and at least 200 deaths are known to have been directly caused by it. The silent sea probably keeps the secret of many more. The one feature of the disaster which impressed us most was—how the gale had apparently broken down every loose and shaky wall, chimney, and house. Doubtless it has left many more in a shaky condition. A moral lesson is typified in this: those only who are well built in character can hope successfully to bear the exceptional strain which may come in a moment.

About the sole reference made to moral questions in the lengthy summary of events for the past year in The Times of Monday is a passing allusion to the recent "Empire" agitation. The leading journal sneeringly observes that "certain well-meaning people" raised in that agitation "a number of very practical questions in a way that is not edifying." Such is the verdict of a great organ of public opinion on some of the most hopeful moral uprisings of recent times. We feel thankful that The Times does not, in this matter, at any rate, represent the prevailing tone of public thought.

The National Anti-Gambling League are showing laudable courage in their crusade against the insidious and disastrous vice of betting. They have announced their decision to proceed in the police-court against the Jockey Club, and the course of the action will be watched with much interest by all friends of social morality. A recent publication of the League contains a concise summary of the bearings of the law and the dicta of eminent judges; it is well worth study. The Government have evidently been roused to a sense of their duty as to illegal lotteries; a Romish priest at Peterborough was lately convicted of selling lottery tickets, and was let off with the payment of costs on condition of his returning the proceeds of the tickets. After this warning, we hope severer measures will be taken with future offenders.

The committee of investigation into the municipal government of New York City have been able to produce evidence, proving, according to The Times telegraphic report, "that almost the entire police force, including several high officials, have been levying contributions, especially on the criminal classes, in return for protection." Such a humiliating state of things is the penalty which the righteous citizens of New York have to pay for the neglect of their civic responsibilities, and the handing over of civic rule to unprincipled professional politicians. Thanks to Dr. Parkhurst, the cesspool of corruption has been uncovered; it now remains with the people to see that it is swept out of existence, and that their newly-awakened vigilance is maintained.

According to an article in The Times of Monday, the Indian Medical Congress, a body composed chiefly of English officials in the employ of the Indian Government, has protested against the proposed legislation providing punishment by fine of medical men who may contravene the principles laid down by the resolution of the House of Commons of June 5, 1888, and now proposed to be embodied in Indian legislation. The incident shows the need of continued watchfulness against the reintroduction under subtle forms of the evils which flourished under the old Cantonment regulations in India. At the same time, the fact reported in our last issue is full of encouragement, that the Army Sanitary Commission, the highest medical authority of the Indian Empire, has finally surrendered on the main principle of the system, and has placed on record its opinion of the futility of the system from a medical point of view.

It is satisfactory to have assurances from the Government that they purpose proceeding next Session with temperance legislation. From a national and moral point of view, it would be a serious misfortune not to do so. The Prime Minister has publicly admitted that the drink traffic threatens to be a despotism amongst us; some of us think it is so already, and that every day adds to its power to hurt us. Pressure of an urgent and persistent kind must be applied by the friends of temperance until some power is put into the hands of the people for checking, if not destroying, one of the greatest curses of humanity.

When Mr. Cecil Rhodes assured the deputation which waited on him with regard to the sale of drink among the natives of South Africa, that he had too clear an idea of what was profitable to sell them any, he adduced an argument for temperance which is worth the notice of all business men :—

We want these natives to do our work on the line and in the mines, and do you think we shall be so absurd as to kill them, or allow them to kill themselves, by giving them drink?

If that argument were extended a little, we should soon get a bridle put upon the sale of drink. If it be bad for a black workman, can it be good for his white master? If bad for a workman, is it not bad for all black men, whether we have work for them or not? Might they not become customers and consumers of better things? But we are glad if Englishmen are sensible of any reason for at least refraining from destroying native races from the face of the earth.

One of the dangers of our times arises from our intercourse with heathen nations, and from our knowledge of their religions. This has, no doubt, a good side, but it certainly is dangerous both to morals and faith. The experience of Israel of old among the surrounding heathen, and the downfall of Solomon through his marriages with heathen women, have a warning for Englishmen who have frequent intercourse with India, China, Japan, and the islands of the sea. Toleration may mean religious indifference. Seeing the good in every religion may mean not seeing the exceptional and unapproachable good which there is in Christianity. Some forty-five years ago an eloquent preacher, when pointing out the things which led to Solomon's fall, said, "There are few signs in a soul's state more alarming than that of religious indifference—that is, the spirit of thinking all religions equally true. The real meaning of which is that all religions are equally false."

The bankruptcy and beggary of a State, even a small State, is a phenomenon, and Newfoundland seems to supply it. According to a prominent citizen of St. John's, the colony and people are ruined. No regular business is done; there is no money to do it with. There is no work and no prospect of any. "There is no means of conveying food to the wretched people round the coast, and they must apparently perish by hundreds." This writer expects that the horrors of this winter will be frightful, and that the country will be crippled for a decade. He thinks that the only redemption of the little State is to make it a Crown Colony, and put its affairs into the hands of a disinterested administration," which is not hampered by the enervating necessities and exigencies of party politics, but will work for the public good alone." Altogether a very painful look-out, both materially and morally.

Armenia still fills a large space in the public eye, and we believe gives a good deal of work to Foreign Ministers. The Powers seem bent on getting at the truth, and Turkey carries on her usual game of evasion and delay. The recall by the Porte of a high dignitary from the Commission of Inquiry is explained in a very suggestive way. The Porte found it necessary, after accepting the instructions given by the Powers to foreign delegates, "to issue to its own delegates fresh instructions which could not be conveyed to them by letter." Russia seems to have joined the Commission of Inquiry with a determination that some effectual remedial measures shall be taken—a point the English public must never lose sight of. The Anglo-Armenian Association "desires its members in all parts of the country to insist, by local meetings and requests to members of Parliament, upon the introduction of permanent reforms and the immediate appointment by the great Powers of a Governor-general for Turkish Armenia." To trust Turkey any longer to do justice to Christians is absurd; they must be taken out of her power. We think, too, that when Parliament meets the Government should lay before the country the despatches they have which bear on Turkish outrage.

There are signs that the harshness of Russian rule is to be relaxed in the case of the Jews. The removal of General Gourko from Warsaw and of Count Ignatieff from the Governor-Generalship of Kieff, both of them vigorous anti-Semites, is a significant act of the new Czar. When once Russia has entered on a more just treatment of the Jews, and finds that no harm comes from it, she may be willing to extend clemency to the much-abused Stundists. The law of toleration, once admitted, has a tendency to spread. Gentleness and consideration grow by exercise. That some wealthy and influential persons have exerted their influence on behalf of the Jews is certain, but we do not know of any who are similarly interested in the Stundists. The Christians have no princely money-lenders to speak for them. Their brethren must speak to God for them.

The Samoa Weekly Herald gives a full account of the Jubilee of the Malua School. It is an interesting and inspiring record of the work of half a century, done by the natives themselves. English Christians naturally look on what they give and do for the spread of the Gospel, but it is good for them to see what the natives do for themselves, and for others. Here, e.g., is a school which has stood for half a century; which did not cost the missionary society a penny to build, which has supplied nearly every village in Samoa with a teacher who has had a careful training for four years, so that he can either preach or teach. In fifty years, some 1200 students have been trained for pastors and schoolmasters, and some 700 women have been trained by the missionaries' wives. Moreover, many of these students went as missionaries to the New Hebrides, and the Loyalty Islands, and some of them died a martyr's death. To the north-west of Samoa there are 11,000 people who have been won from heathenism by Samoan teachers. The Jubilee of this useful school is to be marked by the building of a hall to accommodate 1000 persons.

FROM CHINA.

We were in a famine district. Men were hungry. They were selling or mortgaging their bedding, and seeking to keep warm under straw. This was trying as winter advanced. They were planning to sell their children; one had started, but his heart failed him and he turned back again. Famine hardens people, and this was a hard district. Only a year ago many suffered in village war. Now repeated bad harvests make food scarce.

I asked if we could not do something to relieve the poor of the church. The answer was gloomy. If we do not take care, all will be poor! It is not possible to do much in this place; there is no idea of community of goods. Even relatives do not aid each other here! I said, "Can we not get up a public opinion?" "Well," said the poor pastor, "we might try to save a widow who is wishing to sell her child."

So we began. The pastor announced, "Will you church members set to work to contribute for such a widow? There is a friend who will aid, but he won't like it if you do not act." This was said in the presence of all the assembled church, young and old. Just in front sat the relative who was better off, but did not feel for the needy. Here the interest deepens and Christian public opinion begins to work. He sits uncomfortable. He had made a little speech about action better than words, agreeing with my sermon. He was told to apply it to himself. But conscience works slowly, and happily the pastor took time. Presently the well-to-do relative says, "Do not make any collection." He is told he cannot stop this. One man slowly says, "A hundred cash." Pause. Now another hundred. The well-to-do relative is stirred. He rises, and says, "I will give a portion of my field to the widow." He mentioned enough to yield, say, ten dollars' worth of food a year. The announcement caused general satisfaction.

The work of the station did not cease till the preacher's salary was looked after, and the good man encouraged to try on another year. Also, a school is spoken of, and the chapel is to be repaired. Six members under discipline are to be re-admitted. Two new ones were baptized.

The present is a time of peculiar interest in China. One can almost see the strides being made in public opinion towards the knowledge of righteousness. I have just been spending time with a man who is tempted to lead his fellow Christians to the use of earthly weapons in self-defence against persecutors. I took pains to show him his mistake by many reasons. He showed a willingness to attend. Already peaceable methods have succeeded in several instances. J. Sadler.

JAPAN AND THE GOSPEL.

Dear Sir,—Rev. S. L. Nagasaka, of the Open-air Mission in Tokio, writing to one of the native Christian papers in that city an account of his fourth tour to the North-Western provinces, gives a graphic description of the opposition he met with. His experience plainly shows that in all climes and among all peoples the Gospel of the grace is, as of old, sure to meet with resistance at first. So ignorant are the people of Toyama that they look upon Westerns, whether missionaries or merchants, as sorcerers.

Mr. Nagasaka left Yokohama on October 6 and arrived on the same night at Takasaki, where he had a meeting which was arranged beforehand by the Christians of that town. The next Sunday he preached in the American Episcopal Church both morning and afternoon; he afterwards walked to a little place near, called "Maibashi," where he stood on the roadside and preached the message of salvation through the risen Christ. He was listened to attentively by a large crowd. He also visited Koyama and Kamida on the following three days, and preached there also with much acceptance.

On the 11th he went in a steamer to Toyama, one of the most difficult places in Japan for missionary work. While he was addressing a meeting in that place a number of rough people came in, who not only disturbed the audience with bad words and cursing, but threw about every thing they could get hold of, such as the sliding partitions, brasiers, etc. At last he was obliged to call for the help of the police; so great was the uproar that the police advised Mr. Nagasaka to adjourn to another house. When he and his friends came out they were surrounded by the people, who threw stones at them and shouted chau, chau; kill, kill (Japanese nick-name for Chinese). The people are so ignorant that they make no distinction between a Japanese in European dress and a Chinaman in his. The province of Hokuriku is the place where Buddhism is in full force, therefore Christians are often attacked in this way. Mr. Nagasaka was under the protection of the police authority while at Toyama, and he, being provided with a house to speak in, had no occasion to preach in the open air, as is his method when itinerating.

I feel sure I can count on the prayers of Christians in Great Britain for Mr. Nagasaka, who labours indefatigably to reach the people with the bread of life. His great desire is that their ears may be unstopped, and their stubborn hearts won to Jesus. Again I ask prayer for myself that I, on my return to Japan shortly, may be a bold witness for Jesus.—Your brother in Christ,

W. H. Omura.

Missionary Methods Abroad.

BY REV. EDWARD STORROW.

GREAT wisdom and firmness are requisite on the part of missionary committees in accepting some offers for service, and declining others; for the reputation of the good cause at home, its progress abroad, and the happiness and efficiency of coadjutors, largely depend on the persons sent out. And how much depends on their appointment to spheres which they are best qualified to fill! Much care should, therefore, be used, and prayer for Divine guidance should be fervent.

It is interesting to observe the various methods with which the missionary vocation has become associated. These need not be further indicated than to point out by way of illustration, that in the Turkish Empire, literature and education; in some parts of Africa, commercial and agricultural self-support; in China and Northern Africa, medical skill; in Japan, education; and in India, education, women's work and direct Christian teaching in every variety of form, from bazaar preaching, to teaching by the way-side, and in the zenana, and the utmost skill in dialectics—have each and all their place and use. The conditions of society, and the prejudices, weaknesses, and wants of large classes, justify these methods, for thus often can they be approached, and in no other way.

But the association of such aids with the more direct communication of Divine truth, needs to be carefully guarded, lest they become ends instead of means to an end, absorb too large a proportion of the time, strength, and resources of societies and missionaries, and weaken the great essential principle, that the final end and aim of missions is to preach the Gospel to every creature. Ample proof could be given that there is good ground for apprehension on this subject; for preaching, in any true sense of the word, has not, in many spheres, its due proportion either of attention or agency.

But whilst the ultimate aim of all missionary agency is to make known the one true God and Jesus Christ whom He hath sent, we should be careful not to assume that our English form of preaching is the only proper way of doing this. It is obvious that among many races, our ideal of a formal, prolonged, reasoned-out discourse, would be impracticable, and in many cases where practicable, would be repellent rather than attractive. Argumentative and highly-reasoned discourse has its true place when addressing some people of Eastern race; but to others the plain declaration of essential truth is most telling; and in many places preaching had better give place to conversation and quiet teaching in the hut, the field, or by the way-side. So, too, it is not always advisable to attack and denounce heathenism, however gross and irrational it may be, or to be tempted into barren arguments and side issues. It is more effective to declare positive truth than to pour contempt on popular error.

The greatest need in almost all mission fields in our age, is evangelising missionaries. That is, men, lay or clerical, learned or not highly trained, but with a passion for souls and the glory of God, who should make it the one aim of life to preach and to teach everywhere the spiritual truths of the Gospel in their relation to all men. If such bands of "Gospellers" could be found in larger numbers—happily there are some—who maintain their fervour, freshness, and tact year by year, the issues in many instances would be glorious, whether the itinerating were confined to a small district like a county, or extended into wider regions.

There are questions of a most perplexing nature which affect the conscience or the work of many a missionary. Here are some such:—Should he be content to labour on, even if no conversions follow? Whom should he baptize—all who offer, and at once, or only after some delay or training? How far should he extend pecuniary aid and protection to converts ruined and persecuted for their fealty to Christ? Which customs and usages existing among a heathen people may they be encouraged to retain, and which to abandon on becoming Christians? How far is it advisable to encourage the Anglicising process? Usually the answer should depend on the local features of the case, but these questions are named, to indicate the very great importance of selecting the very best men that can be found for positions often of great difficulty; and of constant prayer that they may be guided by the Divine wisdom.

The attitude of the missionary towards the converts he may gather is important, and not always maintained with sufficient wisdom. There is danger, for instance, that he cease to be the evangelist and missionary, and become the pastor of a flock, who make heavy and incessant demands in an indolent and quiet way on his patience, his time, and his resources. They need much attention, but if firmness is not exercised they are more likely to be nursed into valetudinarianism than strength, and an arrangement which should be but temporary, if existing at all, becomes permanent and harmful. Three things should be aimed at wherever a Christian community is gathered—the enforcement of the duty of self-support and self-sustentation; of all believers becoming in all practicable ways, propagators of the faith they have received; and a careful training of some as preachers and teachers.

Central institutions for the latter purpose are of great importance, and in them most effectively can the young men of a district or province best be trained, but where these do not exist more might be done than usually is. If a missionary selected one or two promising converts, made them his companions and helpers in itinerating, encouraged them to preach, and freely commented on what they said, suggested to them books to be read and subjects to be studied, a good supply of well-qualified evangelists and pastors would in time be obtained.

It is surprising how little is done in this direction in some spheres where converts are numerous, and in what a very subordinate position native agents are kept when there are any. The high ideal of the missionary as to ministerial character and qualification, makes him distrustful of others, and incapable of discovering the latent capabilities of many converts, as well as the gifts the glorified Saviour bestows; but when the best of these are trained and trusted, it is as surprising as it is gratifying, to find how worthy they often prove of the confidence reposed in them. Great care is advisable in furthering the wishes of anyone to engage in missionary work, and the subordination of some labourers to others is expedient and just; but if in one or two countries the labourers are too many and not well selected, in most others they are too few, and even the best of them are often kept in too subordinate a position. Missionaries have some relations to the bodies sending them out, which native ministers, trained in foreign fields by missionaries, and employed by them, or chosen by the native churches, cannot have; but due honour and confidence should be given to all labourers who prove themselves worthy, and native Christian communities should be encouraged to give to their ministers and evangelists a full equality of rank and respect with the same classes in England. When this is wisely done the effect is beneficial alike to the native church and its pastors. Confidence does not injure, but rather develops and educates the worthy. It is not good even for children to be kept too long in leading strings!

The recall of missionaries is of much importance and requiring more attention than it has yet received. Some carefully-prepared method is needed, whereby a society may, with as little friction as possible, dissolve its connection with anyone who has mistaken his calling and is inefficient. Such there have been: men weak, apathetic, or unamiable, and unpractical, who have done little work, or been even a hindrance to others, yet for years have held on to an office the duties of which they have failed to fulfil. Difficult though it be to dissolve connection with such, it should be done,—and the sooner the better.

THE MASTER'S PROCLAMATION.

BY C. H. SPURGEON.*

The voice of one crying in the wilderness, Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make his paths straight.—Luke iii. 4.

THE voice crying in the wilderness demanded a way for the Lord, a way prepared, and a way prepared in the wilderness. I would be attentive to the Master's proclamation and give Him a road into my heart, cast up by gracious operations, through the desert of my nature. The four directions in the context must have my serious attention.

Every valley must be exalted. Low and grovelling thoughts of God must be given up; doubting and despairing must be removed; self-seeking and carnal delights must be forsaken. Across these deep valleys a glorious causeway of grace must be raised.

Every mountain and hill shall be laid low. Proud creature sufficiency and boastful self-righteousness must be levelled to make a highway for the King of kings. Divine fellowship is never vouchsafed to haughty, high-minded sinners. The Lord hath respect unto the lowly, and visits the contrite in heart, but the lofty are an abomination unto Him. My soul, beseech the Holy Spirit to set thee right in this respect.

The crooked should be made straight. The wavering heart must have a straight path of decision for God and holiness marked out for it. Double-minded men are strangers to the God of truth. My soul, take heed that thou be in all things honest and true, as in the sight of the heart-searching God.

The rough places should be made smooth. Stumbling blocks of sin must be removed, and thorns and briers of rebellion must be uprooted. So great a Visitor must not find miry ways and stony places when He comes to honour his favoured ones with his company. Oh, that to-day the Lord may find in my heart a highway made ready by his grace, that He may make a triumphal progress through the utmost bounds of my soul, from the beginning of this year, even to the end of it.

* From MORNING AND EVENING DAILY READINGS. (3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster).

FRANCE.—From a sketch of the Free Church at Thiat, France, which has recently appeared in L'Eclaireur, we glean some interesting facts. This little town is situated in the centre of the district whence a large number of the Huguenot Protestants were ruthlessly driven or massacred on the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. The particular case which forms the subject of the narrative is by no means the only one of the kind associated with these revived churches which are springing up throughout this once spiritually-denuded district. Indeed, it is a question whether or no the converts brought in by means of the direct influence of the Scriptures are not more numerous than the proselytes gathered through the instrumentality of the evangelist.

APOCALYPSE—UNVEILING.*

The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto Him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass; and He sent and signified it by his angel unto his servant John: who bare record of the Word of God, and of the testimony of Jesus Christ, and of all things that he saw. Blessed is he that readeth and they that hear the words of this prophecy, and keep those things which are written therein: for the time is at hand.

It has been God's way from the beginning to encourage his people by showing them visions of good things to come. When our first parents were driven out of Paradise, He gave them a vision of the Cherubim. An encouragement and a glad assurance to their hearts that when the flaming sword was quenched, as it should be quenched in the precious blood of Him who was Jehovah's Fellow, then man's way should be opened to the Tree of Life.

When Ezekiel was to be sent to a people stiff of face and hard of heart, and when he had one of the most painful ministries that ever a servant of God was called to fulfil, God gave him that amazing vision of the living creatures, and the Man upon the throne (Ezek. i.).

When John the Baptist, who had come forth as the messenger and forerunner of the Lord, felt disappointed at finding himself shut up in prison, and Jesus making no headway to David's throne, he sent to ask Him, "Art Thou He that should come, or look we for another?" Not that he had lost his faith in Jesus, but he wanted to know from Himself whether He was the One, or whether there was still another coming after Him. And Jesus just gave John's messengers a sight of his ministry, and said, "Go and show John again those things which ye do hear and see."

And now, when John, the beloved disciple, is shut up in Patmos—John, who was one of those who had been told to "Go into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature"—God gives him for all his brethren, throughout all the ages, this blessed and wonderful unveiling of the things that were to come.

He shows them unto his servants. The reason why many do not see visions, or do not see anything in them, is because they are not servants. The Lord shows his secrets only to his servants. John wrote about Christ's first sign, the changing of water into wine, that "the ruler of the feast . . . knew not whence it was, but the servants who drew the water knew." We need not be ambitious to be rulers and people of importance. Only choose to be servants of God, for his servants serve Him, and they see his face. It is to his servants that this unveiling is made manifest, an unveiling not only of things but of a Person—the unveiling of Jesus Christ. If you take a red ink pen and mark all through this book the different characters in which Jesus appears, you will be astonished how much more you will know about Him.

"Blessed is he who readeth and they who hear the words of this prophecy." Many things have been written about the Apocalypse, many things which seem to be contradictory; but I never read any book concerning the Revelation without feeling conscious that the writer had received a blessing in reading it. A man may go to the top of a mountain and breathe the clear pure air, and yet not be able to tell of what it is composed, whether of one gas or more; but as he breathes it in it does him good. And you cannot come into contact with the air of heaven in this precious Book without your soul being blessed. It is the flower of Scripture, just as Genesis is the root. If you look at Bagster's Bible you will find that a third of all the quotations from the Old Testament in the New are in the Book of Revelation.

"John, to the seven churches which are in Asia"—the seven churches, the sevenfold church; that is, seven individual churches, and yet representing the Church in its entirety through all its earthly period. John wrote this Apocalypse for your benefit and mine.

"Grace unto you, and peace." Consider what was coming after. Think of the Nicolaitanes and Jezebel, and Balaam, and Balak, inside the Church; and think of the Beast and the False Prophet, and the Harlot and the Dragon, outside the Church. Think of all the scenes of violence and of evil which were going to happen; think of the desperate troubles through which the saints were to pass; and consider, that to Christians through all these centuries John comes with a message from the Throne, a message from the Triune God: "Grace to you, and peace." There is no such greeting in any other writing of the New Testament. It seems as if all the greetings were gathered up in this. "Grace unto you, and peace, from Him which is, and which was, and which is to come." There is nothing beyond that in time or in eternity. The Eternal God sends to you a message of grace and peace. To you, in your own particular circumstances. "Grace to you, and peace," from the Eternal God. He is interested in you, and He will bless you.

"And from the seven Spirits which are before his throne." This sevenfold Spirit of God is represented elsewhere in the same book as seven lamps of fire burning before the throne; and again as having seven horns and seven eyes—fulness of power and intelligence. These seven Spirits of God are before the throne waiting his bidding to come to the help of his Church as a whole, or of its weakest member. Perhaps you were "born again" last night; or you may be a patriarch in Christ. Equally to each, from God the Eternal and the seven Spirits, "Grace to you, and peace."

Jesus is our Peace, and this greeting is sent to you also "from Jesus Christ, the faithful Witness, and the Firstborn from the dead, and the Prince of the kings of the earth"; that is, from Jesus Christ in his three great offices—as Prophet when He was here; as Priest now that He has passed through the heavens; and as the Prince of the kings of the earth, coming speedily to take his great power and reign. And so this blessed One, the God-Man, sends to you his message of "grace and peace."

How shall we reply? When an address of welcome is read before the Prince of Wales he makes reply to it. Surely then, when we have such a greeting from the Throne, we must answer it; and when it is the everlasting God, and the sevenfold Spirit, and the Incarnate Son, who greet us we must worthily respond. And John, by the Holy Ghost, has done so in our name. Let our hearts go out with it. "Unto Him that loveth us, and hath washed us from our sins in his own blood, and made us kings and priests unto his God and Father, unto Him be the glory and dominion, for ever and ever, Amen." He has made you a king and a priest—you that were talking over his Word and feeling your way, by the guiding of the Holy Ghost, into peace with God, a few hours ago; He has made you a king and a priest unto his God and Father, and therefore you have a right to join with the maturest saint in ascribing unto Him "glory and dominion for ever."

"Behold, He cometh with clouds." The Psalmists often begin in a jubilant tone; but ere long they are down in the depths. It is so in this book. Our chapter begins by showing us the brightness beyond. God has not sent us adrift into this world, to go through all its sorrows, without giving us a sight of what lies beyond, the blessed and soul-cheering hope of the appearing of the glory of our great God and Saviour Jesus Christ. And so He says, "Behold He cometh with clouds." That is the consummation of all the exceeding great and precious promises—that He is coming; that, having come once in his humiliation, He is coming again in his glory. "Behold He cometh with clouds." He who went away in the clouds will so return.

"And every eye shall see Him." Oh the transfiguring joy of being like Him, when we see Him as He is. "And they also which pierced Him, and all kindreds of the earth shall wail because of Him." Oh, sorrow's crown of sorrow, when the wrath of the Lamb is come, and who shall be able to stand?

A bright and blessed hope in the heart of every true believer is this return of Jesus our Lord. No matter what his ideas and theories as to when and how the Lord is coming; everyone who loves his appearing loves his appearing because he loves Him. And every child of God has got this mark upon him, that he loves Him because he was first loved of Him. But there has been a long time of waiting for its fulfilment; and throughout the long ages not only have scoffers said, "Where is the promise of his coming?" but his own people have begun to wax faint. Yes, He is a long time in coming. "How long, O Lord; how long?" "How long, O Despot; how long?" For God is a despot! That is the Greek word. "O Despot, holy and true." If we can have a despot who is holy and true, we can very well do with despotism. We want to be governed by perfect love and righteousness, and then the more absolutely the better. We want nothing else. If God be God, He must be a despot. He must rule with unquestionable authority; He must be absolute monarch; and we must be absolutely happy under his absolute dominion.

And now God puts in his word. He interposes Himself by an oath. Just as in the Hebrews, when He could sware by no greater, He sware by Himself. Though the rulers of the earth appear to have it all their own way, yet He cometh with clouds, and the authentication of this assurance is the signature of the Almighty God. "I am Alpha and Omega, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come." The First Person of the Godhead, who thus spoke from the Throne, who is, and who was, and who is to come, signs his Name to the promise that "He cometh with clouds." It is God that is going to bring Him (1 Thes. iv. 14). "I am Alpha and Omega, saith the Lord, which is, and which was, and which is to come, the Almighty." Glory to his name! It is something to have an Almighty God, when there is not a throne in the world that is not shaking; when there is not a stable government on earth.

"I, John, who also am your brother and companion in the tribulation, and Kingdom, and patience in Jesus." You see how John's own heart has been strengthened. He is imprisoned on this barren rock in the Ægean Sea, but his heart has been strengthened with the promise of the Lord's coming again, and so he says, "I, John, your brother and companion in the tribulation, and Kingdom, and endurance in Jesus." Mark the structure of this passage—

"IN TRIBULATION AND IN THE KINGDOM."

Do you see how tenderly, how considerately, the Lord God Almighty thinks of his children? John tells of tribulation; he reminds us of what Barnabas told the converts at Antioch, that "Through much tribulation ye must inherit the Kingdom"; but he also says, "Your brother and companion in...the Kingdom." Do not forget the Kingdom! If you keep your eye upon the tribulation, whatever it may be, however great or however small, it will take the heart out of you. Remember that Jesus is King, and that because He is King you are a king. He has made you a king and priest unto God his Father; and so, when you look at the tribulation, remember the Kingdom. And then you can bear to come to the next word, "The endurance in Jesus." Down in deep dungeons, and upon the rack, and in all the sufferings which the devil through men has put on our fellow-saints who have been faithful to the Word of God and to the testimony of Jesus, these words wonderfully sustained them in the dark ages that lie behind us. How much they will be needed to strengthen and comfort in the dark days before! We may lay ourselves down on these precious words: "I John, your brother and companion in the tribulation, and Kingdom, and endurance, in Jesus." Do not forget—"in Jesus." We cannot get beyond that. Everything is in Jesus that belongs to us, because we are in Him, and He dwells in us.

IMMANUEL.

"God with us!" For patient years
He has been with you;
Or in gladness or in tears,
Tender, faithful, true.

Death and sorrow mark the way
That our feet have trod;
Dark the watch before the day—
Pain leads up to God.

Death and sorrow, strong and sore,
"God with us" o'ercomes;
Death and sorrow hurt no more
When Immanuel comes.

GERMANS IN THE WEST END.—The Christmas gathering of this branch of the London City Mission was held on the evening of December 28, in Lady Aberdeen's schoolrooms. Many encouraging words were spoken. The fact that this work, while yet not eighteen months in existence, extends its Christian influence over 600 families, speaks for itself of vitality and growth. Mr. J. P. Werner, superintendent of the Mission, presided, Rev. G. D. Mathews, Messrs. G. R. Cole and Romeiser spoke, and the meeting was concluded by an earnest appeal to the men from the devoted missionary, Mr. Layer, to yield themselves definitely into the hands of their Saviour. Tearful eyes told of responsive listeners.

PULPIT PREPARATION.

A symposium on this highly important subject begins in the January issue of The Free Church of Scotland Monthly. We note some of the leading points advanced:—

A minister in a provincial town says: "The first of all requisites for the work of the pulpit is self preparation—the cultivation of spiritual tone in ourselves. The personality of the preacher has much to do with his effectiveness, and the weight of this is due much more to the manifest relation in which a man stands to his work than to any ability or scholarship. We need therefore to have a clear realisation that we are sent of God, that our ministry is a divine ordinance for a divine work, that the word which we preach is a divine message, and that the Holy Spirit is present in power to enlighten and aid the messenger, and to give saving and sanctifying effect to the message. We should enter the pulpit as men who have received a message from God, and who can therefore speak with certainty and authority. And in order to this, not only clear and assured convictions with regard to what the Lord has spoken, but also much personal fellowship and converse with God in meditation and prayer, are indispensable.

"Whether such questions as those of the higher criticism ought to be introduced is very questionable. The preacher himself ought to have clear views of what is truth, and also of the reliable value of the source from which he obtains it; but in this, as in other departments of study, the mass of men must depend upon the conclusions of experts. They have neither the time nor the training to go into such subjects for themselves; and it seems strangely out of keeping with the function of an ambassador to discuss before those to whom he is sent questions as to how far the source of his message is reliable. Such matters are for the study and the class-room and the occasional lecture, which will afford opportunities to such as have difficulties, but the preacher must speak as one who has received his message. It seems trifling with men who have come together professedly hungering for the bread of life to meet them with dissertations as to whether we have a message. In the vast majority of pulpits at least, in town as well as country, such subjects are certainly uncalled for and out of place, and likely to suggest doubts and difficulties rather than confirm faith.

"If our preaching is to be experimentally useful to our audience, we must seek a wide and varied acquaintance with the thoughts and feelings and lives of men. Personal experience will always be of the greatest value; but it must be remembered this is, after all, only the experience of one man, and that a man somewhat separated by his very calling from many of the experiences of the world. Knowledge both of the life of the world and of the lives of Christians is of the first importance as a guide to how we ought to preach. The truth for all is the same, but the circumstances in which men have to apply the truth and live by it are very different. Each class in society has its own peculiar duties, temptations, difficulties, and trials. What will be instructive and helpful to the educated may be as an unknown tongue to the uneducated, and no greater wrong can be done to an audience by a preacher than to gratify his own learned tastes by preaching over their heads."

A minister in a lowland country parish gives the following outline of his weekly modus operandi:—"Roughly speaking I devote the forenoons to pulpit preparation, the afternoons to visitation, the evenings to meetings or to quiet reading by the study fire. On Monday forenoon I choose my text. When it has to be sought for, the search is hard indeed! But as a rule there are before the mind a few texts, one of which lays hold of me, and I am compelled to preach from it. The sermons which result from such a text are to my own mind fresh and helpful. Having fixed on a text, I examine it in the light of a critical commentary, and then allow it to grow in secret. Tuesday is devoted to preparation for a Bible-class of young men and women, which meets on the same evening. Wednesday is occupied in preparation for the prayer-meeting. It is not until Thursday that I sit down to prepare the Sabbath morning discourse. I read, in the first place, all that I think will be helpful: and having drawn out a short sketch, I begin to write it out fully. On Friday it is finished. Saturday forenoon is given up to the preparation of a children's address, and also an address for the evening service. I have a short service for the young within the forenoon service, when, beside an address of about ten minutes, a simple prayer is offered for the young, and a children's hymn sung. I find the address to the children the most difficult to prepare, especially to get variety of illustration. For this I have found biography the most fruitful source."

A city minister thus closes his contribution: "We are slow to learn that the power of preaching lies not in its greatness but in its foolishness. It is hard for the natural man to become a fool for Christ's sake in the place where it seems most fitting that he should be wise; but I am sure that it is the common experience of ministers to find most help and comfort in preaching when they feel least able of themselves. It is on such occasions that we get a rich portion for ourselves while trying to feed others, and at times our great regret is that we cannot go back to the pulpit and share the new spoil with the people. It is a happy day for the minister when he carries out of the pulpit richer treasure than he took into it. The prayers of our people will do much to secure for us this blessing, and it is certain to return upon themselves in added blessing."

A minister in the Highlands writes: "I seldom if ever feel at a loss for sufficient matter when I have my mind well filled with the subject before entering the pulpit. There is one thing I never lose sight of, the cardinal and fundamental doctrines of the Gospel—that man is a guilty, helpless sinner in himself, and that Christ is an almighty Saviour, suitable and sufficient for all; and I always keep in the forefront of my preaching the atoning sacrifice of the Cross and the all-cleansing virtue of the blood of atonement. There is one thing I seek to keep in view in every discourse, and it is this, that I should preach so that if any of my hearers were never to hear another sermon, they might have clearly the only way of salvation presented to them."

THE PIONEER MISSION.

Mr. E. L. Cordon recently gave a deeply interesting account of the work of the above mission at the Monday evening prayer meeting at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. He stated that the object of the mission is to strengthen weak and struggling churches, and to encourage true and noble-hearted people to keep the Gospel light burning in dark and needy places. Many such places have been taken up by the mission, and are now doing good work.

Pastor E. A. Carter, hon. director of the mission, has just added the chapel at Frereton, Stoke, to his list, having introduced Pastor Peter Miller to the friends there. Mr. Miller is commencing his work with every prospect of success and great blessing. By the unanimous wish of the friends at Sharon Hall, the Liverpool branch of the Pioneer work, Pastor Frank Russell has taken the oversight of the large and important work there and everything encourages the hope that he will do good work for God.

At the present time the mission needs about £400 to carry on and extend its important work of opening new and helping weak churches. The hon. director, 173, Brixton Hill, London, or the treasurer, Mr. R. Hayward, Oreston, Bolingbroke-grove, Wandsworth Common, S.W.

DISTRESS IN IRELAND.

A correspondent in Rosscommon writes to us with respect to our recent extract from a correspondent of the Daily Chronicle, in which he stated that starvation and dire distress were imminent in the West of Ireland owing to the failure of the potato crop. Our correspondent says that the writer fortunately has overstated his case. "The crop of potatoes, speaking generally, is not a success this year, but this is only so in low-lying and heavy ground; on the other hand in places where the land is high and the soil light, the crop is quite a fair average one, offering no cause for especial complaint, so that it is a mistake to speak of unqualified ruin. The private assistance, which you advocate, in supplying a few bags of potatoes for seed in springtime, would, I think, attain all that the necessities of the case demand."

FACTORY LIFE.—The associations of factory life are not conducive to the cultivation of ideas of propriety, gentleness, and nobility in your children. Entry into the mill is marked by a loss of childishness and the acquirement of a precociousness that oft mars the best influence of the teacher who feels "Just as the twig is bent, the tree's inclined."—R. Waddington.

HALLOWED MEMORIES.

Reminiscence and anticipation make up the little span of life. A retrospective glance is often helpful, though it sometimes fills us with shame and regret, yet it gives reality to the present, and determination to the future. The ancient warrior Moses in nearing death makes mention of the "goodwill of Him that dwelt in the bush." The manifestation then granted was, he felt, a guarantee of continued support.

Some may be standing at the bush to-day. Are there young Christians in our midst, with life before them, with all its allurements, pleasures, and prospects? As you stand still a moment to gain breath for a fresh start, what is your discovery? You have been progressing, yes; but in what and to what? Since God first appeared to you, what has been your career? Your strength has been expended. Has it been for nought, or for that only which is everything? Have the promises been kept (for they were made), and many of them? Have the days been bright and full of hope, and good work done for God; or has it been sad failure and frequent falls? It is good sometimes to pull up suddenly, lest we be forced to draw rein and ponder the way of our feet.

"The goodwill of Him that dwelt in the bush" was doubtless our portion, but did we leave Him behind? Did we not expect to find Him at our side in danger, and then forget Him in the time of gladness and prosperity?

What sacred memories hover around the bush! Can you not call to mind some hallowed spot, some Christian friend, a precious saint-like mother or a special red-letter day of blessing. The days of thy youth were different to what they are now, yet the goodwill of Him that dwelt in the bush is the same. The very memory of the bush rekindled the love to God in the heart of Moses, and he was young again.

Samuel must have often gone back in thought to the little couch in the Temple chamber and the will of God; Matthew must many times have thought of the seat by the lake side; Peter and John of the still Galilean waters by which they had often sat and mended their nets; the woman of Samaria of the well of Jacob; Paul of the journey to Damascus. All these places and occurrences must have at certain intervals stirred the very hearts of those with whom they were connected.

So the old Christian looks back—over many years his course has run, the sands of time are fast sinking. How is it with you? Have goodness and mercy followed you because of your steadfastness to Jehovah, or with Jacob are you constrained to confess "evil have been my days"? You are now halting on your staff ere you cross Jordan. Turning back, what do you see? A long crooked road, perhaps, uneven and rough, sprinkled with cares, loaded with sins, such a lot of work done, yet so little worth anything, so much wood, hay, stubble, so little gold, silver, and precious stones.

But the bush is not consumed—the Saviour's goodwill is still with you, let your remaining days be worthy of his patience and love. Thus in the thought is bound up anticipation. Duty must be clothed with loving intention. We must not rest with being servants, but aim at friendship. Duty must put on Divinity. Our motto, old or young, must be, "That I may know Him." Christianity is not merely a doctrinal system, a catechism which when once learned is done with. There is always more to attain to—a growing into Christ. We must be expectant without being impatient, as one has said, patient but never in a state of stagnation; waiting yet ever ready to advance; full of confidence but never proud; full of certainty yet never arrogant. This is faith. "We kneel upon the verge of time." Our days are numbered, whether few or many. There will be no glorification in heaven where there is no confession here.

With the goodwill of the Master, what avails persecution, misunderstanding, scorn, poverty, even death itself? Yea this will be best of all, for then time will be eternity, the weak one strong, the sinner a saint, and the Saviour all in all.

Exeter. G. C. Williamson.

CITY OF LONDON BIBLE CLASS UNION has arranged a special mission, January 7 to 11, at the Y.M.C.A., 186, Aldersgate-street, at 6.30 p.m. each evening. Several brethren from Oxford and Cambridge Universities will speak, and the meetings will be under the guidance of Mr. A. C. Furse. Prayer is desired for this special effort to reach the unconverted in wholesale City warehouses.

A HEAVENLY ARITHMETICIAN.

They were husband and wife, and had left their holiday till late in the year, because the summer had been so wet, and they had been told the autumn would make up for it by being dry and sunny.

But they had passed two weeks already in the humble cottage whither they had betaken themselves with their little purses and large hopes, and as yet they could only say—

The rain it raineth every day.

They had caught colds, and lightened their purses, and seen little beyond the narrow window of the stuffy little room in which they shivered and grumbled, and from which they watched the movements of the old cottager opposite. They could hear her cracked voice trying to sing the songs of Zion, her favourite being—

O happy day that fixed my choice
On Thee, my Saviour and my God!
Well may this thankful heart rejoice,
And tell thy wonders all abroad!

She had one lanky sunflower and a honeysuckle in the tiny plot of ground outside her cottage, and these received unremitting care and attention. She appeared to talk to them, especially to the sunflower, and was once overheard saying—

"You poor thing, you're just like some folks—do all one can, it makes no difference to them, they're just as miserable as ever. You did ought to hold up your heavy head when the sun's waiting to kiss ye!"

Another time she was tying up the honeysuckle—

"Ah, you bonny creature! A mask of bloom you've been all the summer, and here you are—I declare if you a'n't just loaded o' buds again, you blessed thing! Why, seems you can't do enough to show your gratitude to 'Mighty God for making you a tender flower as can't stand alone. You're bursting o' love, you are!"

At six in the morning the two opposite could see the old body brewing her tea; then the bent head and the quavering voice, "Praise God from whom all blessings flow," told of grace; and at the close of the frugal meal they heard her singing her inharmonious praises again.

"I wish that old Judy would shut her door, or else sing in time and tune," growled the husband.

"She cannot do either, dear; she must see all that's going on, and she must tell God how thankful she is. It would be a bit of a change to go over and chat with her; she would introduce a fresh element into these dull days. I'll run over and see her," replied his wife.

"Good morning to you! How happy you look, and I'm sure you are. My husband declares you are counting!"

"Yes, dear, he's quite right—a little bit of heaven's arithmetic—just counting my mercies, that's all," was the cheerful response of the heavenly arithmetician.

The face of the caller fell—she was hardly prepared for this. "I cannot see what you have to count, then," she said, "We grumble all day, and we have each other; we are on a holiday, and we are pretty well served where we stay, and though we are not rich, we are hardly poor. You live alone, you have to bear this dreadful weather, as we do; and you have but few years to live, while you can never hope to be any richer than you are."

"Ay, dear child, where shall I begin to answer you—such a long list as you've made out?—but mine is longer. I'm seventy-nine, think o' that, dear, and every morning, and all day, and evening and night, the angel of his presence comes down from the Father o' lights, laden with blessings and messages to tell me of my best Friend! Every breath I draw is a mercy, and now I've ever so many more to add—I must go on counting—for you've come over to tell me of yours, dear child."

"Indeed, I did nothing of the sort. I came over just to have a chat with you, to help pass the dull day."

"The first thing you did, honey, was to begin counting your mercies. You said you grumbled all day, and then you began telling me how much better off you were than I. You said you had each other, while I'm alone; you said you were having a holiday, I have not had one all my life; you said you were well-served, I've always done things for myself. You said you were not poor, I'm very poor, as the world puts it. I've just two shillings a week; the loan of this cottage, and them two purty flowers, there; but——."

"Stop!" cried the lady, "you make me ashamed. I am sure God sent me over to you, that I might learn from you how very much I have to be thankful for. And yet you are not poor at all; you are really rich, for you look on the bright side of life, and you make God your friend."

"Ah, my dear," replied the cottager, "I'm no scholar, but our parson says I'm the best at figures in all his parish. I'm overwhelmed with mercies, and go on counting them—there's no time left for counting anything else, for I'm never done."

"But I thought," was the reply, "that you had lost your husband and children; that you suffer great pain; and that you are quite alone in the world. Do you count these as mercies?"

"Surely, they are nothing less," was the reply of the old saint, "I praise God for having given me a good husband for forty years; for sending me children who never caused me sorrow; for leaving me here still to thank Him for daily blessings and life spared. Eh, my dear, dear lady, when you talk of loss and poverty, you begin at the wrong end. Parson says they are comparative terms; so they are. It all depends on what God is to you."

Her listener ran across to her husband:

"Dear," she said, "that old Judy is a saint. We shall have a happy, happy holiday after all. She is busy counting her mercies, and I can't see she has any. Let us begin counting ours."

"Just see how the sun is coming into the room. Shan't us go for a walk? as they say about here."

They ran out like children, and they came back tired and happy, thanking God for his mercies; above all for his love, for each other, for life, for health, for friends, for a holiday, and actually for fine weather! For the weather-prophets were right for once, and the two finished their holiday with glorious days of sunshine, and with joyful, rested hearts.

"We've had our innings, Polly," said her husband; "I never spent such a jolly, natural, simple time in all my life. We have to thank Judy, I believe."

They went to wish her good-bye—they were great friends by this time, and said, "How silly we were to think that wet weather, or a small purse, or any of these things, had anything to do with our happiness! They are quite outside it—a contented, thankful spirit, 'a heart at leisure from itself,' and a habit of taking God with us into everything, can brighten the dullest lives."

"Go on counting your mercies," said Judy. "Don't go near the thorns and the ditches—keep among the flowers in the green pastures, and watch the sunshine on the still waters. There are mercies all round you—in the shower as well as the sunshine; in your losses as well as your gains; in absence as well as presence. Don't grumble, dears; just go on counting your mercies, and you won't have no time left to complain of affliction. God bless ye both!"

And He did. They were very happy after they had truly learned the lesson set them by their old friend, whom they still call "the heavenly arithmetician."

NEW ZEALAND.—Writing from Wanganui, Mr. Gordon Forlong says: "The Christians here are building a large, new, and particularly good hall for missions and undenominational preaching. It has sheds for conveyances and horses—a most desirable thing in small towns, as people coming in from the country to attend services do not know what to do with their horses and traps. God's work is prospering here at present."

COPENHAGEN.—Mr. William Wright, of 5, Nojsomhedsvej, Copenhagen, writes:—"I continue my visitation work and meetings in the open air; during the winter months I address gatherings on the staircases of the houses and in the rooms of the poor, as well as in churches and mission-houses. Through the work of the midnight mission for men we have secured the closing of eight houses of evil repute, and the majority of the Government has determined that the whole of them shall be closed by law."

INVALIDS' HOME, DAVOS.—In our last issue we gave particulars of the Invalids' Home, which has for some years been kept by Mrs. Lord. The information was supplied by a friend who knows the wholesome Christian influence of the Home; and we inserted the paragraph in the hope of facilitating its continuance, should Mrs. Lord decide to retire from its management. That lady, however, requests us to say that her authority was not given for such announcement. While it remains a fact that owing to ill-health she will have to withdraw from the work, her plans are as yet quite undecided.

STUDENTS IN CHEN-TU.

The object was the distribution of Christian literature. Mr. Murray, of the Scottish Bible Society, acted as general. On Friday evening, September 14, twelve thousand sets of books were deposited at the entrance of the examination halls with four or five women runners or police standing guard. As the night service consisted principally in guarding the books the bachelors were duly installed, with orders to all others to be on hand early next morning. At six o'clock on Saturday morning seven missionaries and a large force of native helpers surrounded Mr. Murray ready for the word of command. Two books were arranged for each student, a Gospel and a booklet.

The outlook on all sides was exciting. Several thousands, principally coolies and friends of the students, had already gathered in the outer court. Beyond a pardonable curiosity the best of feeling prevailed. There was no shouting, pushing or disrespect of any kind shown, either by official clerks or people. This is worthy of mention, as it signifies the absence of hatred of foreigners by the Sy-Chuanese. The first hour was quiet. Suddenly there was a creaking of rusty hinges, followed by the cry, "The gates are opening." The quiet scene changes to one of confusion. A general rush is made for the point of exit. Above the din comes the command, "Boys, arm yourselves with books and away."

While we were waiting outside a different scene was going on within the halls. Students who had finished their essays were quickly packing their clothes, quilts, and, alas! too many their opium pipes, into a basket. Three days and two nights they had been cooped up in a brick stall about three by five feet. There was not space to lie down without curling up the extremities. One by one they leave their prison, and join their companions in the inner court, waiting for the opening of the doors. They also hear the welcome sound of creaking rusty hinges, and every man grabs his basket. The doors scarcely open before the 10,000 coolies without make a rush to relieve the students of their burdens.

A thousand or two coolies having squeezed through, the tide turns and out they come, coolie and student, an almost indistinguishable mass. To every student a set of books was the command. But who are students and who coolies? At first a good many coolies got books and the student went unobserved. The surprise was very great. Are these the students we have heard so much about? Yes; rough, ragged, and dishevelled as they appear, every man of them holds a B.A. degree.

A little experience enabled us to spy the proper man. Nearly every basket had a string attached. The man who carried the basket was the coolie, and the man who held the string was the student. This string prevented the coolie running away. A basket without a string indicated that the student was too poor to hire a coolie. From seven o'clock to twelve they poured forth with few interruptions, and long before the 17,000 students had passed out, the books were all gone.

It is usually considered that most of the opposition to Christianity in China has its origin among the literati. We watched carefully the expression of each face as we handed over our books, to find whether pleasure or displeasure predominated to test the state of feeling in Sy-Chuan. The writer observed one man refuse the books with hatred and scorn; five or six, when they saw the titles, flung them back rather savagely; fifteen or twenty said, "Do not want"; but, with these few exceptions, the students received the books most graciously.

Every nook in the province was, no doubt, represented. Seventeen thousand students holding B.A. degrees were assembled in these halls to write an essay, in expectation of receiving an M.A. degree. Say 10,000 of these received a set of books. Into 10,000 homes will go a portion of the "Bread of Life." These homes are homes of influence. A son with a B.A. and privileged to write for an M.A. greatly honours not only his own family, but the town or city where he lives.

Books received at such an important time and under such exciting circumstances will doubtless be read. They will be passed around among the friends and neighbours. The story of the Cross will be heard for the first time. The seed will be sown; and who dare limit the number that shall in their own unenlightened way enter into the Kingdom of God?

BEGINNING THE YEAR WITH GOD.

PRAISE AND PRAYER AT ST. MARTIN'S HALL.

As intimated in these columns for several weeks past, three meetings for praise, prayer, confession, and intercession were held on New Year's Day at St. Martin's Town Hall, Charing Cross. Those who were present felt it to be indeed a happy privilege thus to surround the mercy seat and definitely to begin the year with God.

At the eleven o'clock meeting the body of the large hall was well filled. Mr. J. E. Mathieson was president, but the proceedings were of a very free and informal character. The spirit of prayer was given in large measure; a number of brethren and sisters in the body of the meeting took part, as well as those on the platform. After a brief interval of silent petition, the chairman led in earnest, audible prayer for a blessing on the engagements of the day. Having read and briefly commented on Psalm lxxxv., Mr. Mathieson said the chief object of the gatherings was to look upward to God, and then to look forward, expecting that He will come and revive his Church throughout this New Year. That revival must begin in the hearts of his people; then all other hindrances will be removed. God has given us, in the promises of his Word, many strong reasons why we should look to Him, and expect such a time of refreshing from his presence.

Prayer was made by two brethren on the platform, mingled with deep confession for past shortcomings, and desire for a more thorough consecration of heart and life.

The following letter, addressed to the chairman of the meeting, was read by Rev. F. B. Meyer:—

My dear Sir,—Although my name is inserted as one of the conveners, the state of my health denies me the privilege of being present at any of the precious meetings for praise and prayer on New Year's Day in St. Martin's Hall. Most heartily am I with you in spirit. May London be so blessed that it may not become a curse to the world, but a blessing to the whole earth.

In The Illustrated Missionary News for December, it is stated (page 190):—"It is not perhaps generally known that, counting clergy and ministers of all denominations, Bible women, catechists, etc., there are as many missionaries working among the four millions of London as there are among the 800 millions of heathen and 200 millions of Mohammedans abroad. Therefore, if the bitter cry of outcast London is loud and stirring, the bitter cry of outcast heathendom is 250 times as loud and 250 times as piercing."

God has set London, as it were, on a most conspicuous mountain, manifestly to shine before her own people, and to the ends of the earth. Alas! London vice is unblushingly rampant amongst her own people, and must be shocking to thousands of foreigners visiting her haunts. It has been my high privilege to know for years some of London's blessed slum workers, and I believe they will yet hear the Lord of the harvest saying, "Well done; enter thou into the joy of thy Lord." May God bless them now and greatly add to their numbers. May we all be enabled to ask great things for London and great things for the whole world, and may many absent ones of us be praying with you in spirit, though far away.

Very sincerely yours,
Reginald Radcliffe.

Waterloo, Liverpool, December.

Mr. Meyer said that a cordial letter had also come from Mr. Martin Hope Sutton, of Reading, who was unable to be present, but was represented by his son and grandson. Mr. Arnold, of the Evangelical Alliance (who was on the platform), had sent a special request that prayer should be made on behalf of the suffering Stundists in Russia. Mr. Meyer then briefly exhorted the meeting with a view to the guidance of its proceedings into profitable channels. We want to cease from man, he said, and hear the voice of God. We must get above all thoughts of party or sect, and be in the mount with the Master as one undivided flock of God. Let us even forget ourselves in our intense desire that God should bless his whole Church. Let there be the free utterance of petition by sisters or brethren as the Holy Ghost shall direct. Three things may well be remembered in our petitions. First, the crying need for greater unction in the pulpit. There is much clever preaching, but all through the ministry there is a lack of heavenly unction. Second, we desire an outpouring of the spirit of prayer among all Christians. Our Church prayer meetings are poorly attended, and we need to feel more our entire dependence on God. Thirdly, we desire to see more of the working of God in the conviction of sin. Religiousness is one thing; true regeneration work is another.

Thus exhorted by Mr. Meyer, the meeting betook itself to prayer. The first voice to break the silence was that of a Salvation sister, and she was followed in rapid succession by other friends. After a time, Mr. Meyer suggested that some should quote definite promises which could be pleaded with God in subsequent petitions. A number of passages were cited from different parts of the meeting, most of them containing some gracious promise of blessing conditioned on the obedience of the believer. Another wave of earnest intercession flowed through the assembly, sometimes several essaying to pray at one time. Now it was a strong masculine voice that led the soul yearnings of the company; anon it was the tender, pathetic pleading tones of a sister.

By and by, Mr. Meyer called for a brief space of silent waiting on God, so that all known hindrances in the hearts of those present might be definitely cast out, and a fresh baptism of the Spirit claimed for prayer and service. Then we were exhorted to cease praying about ourselves and besiege the throne of grace for blessing on London and on the world at large. The remainder of the prayers, which were many and importunate, were framed on this suggestion, and when the hour of One was close at hand the proceedings closed with the singing of the Doxology.

AFTERNOON MEETING.

The meeting resumed at 3 o'clock, under the presidency of Mr. R. C. Morgan, with a full attendance. In some brief opening observations, the Chairman said that a telegram had come from Whitehaven, intimating that simultaneous meetings were being held there. He said that we want to take the word "God" as a watchword for the New Year. "In the beginning, God." As Abraham said to his questioning son about the sacrifice, "My son, God." That word "God" answers all questions. We need a great revival alike in pulpit and pew. May God reveal Himself to his people in an unmistakeable way during this year.

Some special requests were read and presented in prayer by Rev. F. B. Meyer, whose petitions were very earnest and comprehensive. In throwing the meeting open for prayer, Mr. Morgan said he had been reading in William Law of the means of grace it was to pray for those against whom one had a grudge, or who had a grudge against them. If we were to get such a hold on God (added the chairman) as to begin praying for those we do not like or who do not like us, there would be a revival in our midst straight away. In the numerous petitions that followed, special mention was made of the bereaved families of sailors lost in the recent gales. Prayer was asked for those in high social station, and for a rich blessing in Christian families, so that the coming generation might more worthily serve the Lord than their fathers. Towards the close of the two hours the Chairman called for briefer and more definite petition, some of the prayers offered having the common tendency towards diffusiveness and embellishment. This request was partially observed, so that during the last minutes of the meeting, the desires of many hearts were revealed, and many aspirations after fuller and more faithful service found utterance. Mr. Meyer finally exhorted all in silence to appropriate for themselves the blessings that had been asked for—the filling of the Spirit for character and work; a present blessing on each church or gathering of believers represented; for the subsidence of controversy and division, and a baptism of love among God's people everywhere; for the empowering of all evangelists, missionaries, and workers during the year; for family blessing; and for the hastening of the Lord's return. A parting song of praise concluded the afternoon.

In our next issue we hope to give notes of the addresses at the evening meeting.

THE CITY OF BOSTON, MASS., recently voted "licence," by a majority of over eleven thousand. Twelve cities in the State have voted "no licence."

A LAGOON MISSION.

Dear Sir,—The Chiriqui Lagoon needs the prayers of all God's people. I question whether this place is as much known as it should be. It is situated in Central America, and is the disputed territory of the U.S. of Columbia. This Lagoon, which could safely harbour all the fleets of the world, is most lovely and most needy. It is studded with islands, Bocas-del-Toro, Old Bank, Careening Cay, Coco Cay, and several others. On these islands and cays, along the coast of the Main and up the numerous rivers and creeks live many hundreds of English and Spanish speaking people, to say nothing of the French and Chinese. I am commissioned by the J.B.M.S. to take charge of the little church in Bocas, and to evangelise far and wide beyond.

For years all our travelling has been done in canoes. This is at all times fatiguing, especially when one has to sit for eight hours on end, cramped up, and exposed to the full glare of a tropical sun, and likewise to the tropical rain.

Around the coast are numerous settlements in which no Gospel work is being done—Fish Creek, Waruma, Chiriqui Grande, Crickamola, and others, at which places many people have settled from various islands of the West Indies. How glad these people are to hear God's "whosoever." At Crickamola a thankful soul came up to me and said: "Here we are living and making a few dimes, but when Sabbath comes we have no one to speak a good word to us." I could have wept over them. We distribute Gospel portions in Spanish and English, and these are eagerly taken and read. The people mostly live without God, and many without the knowledge of Him. Some hundreds are apparently trying to hide from God and good men aback of the dense mangroves which everywhere skirt the shores. These must be sought out. Concubinage is most common. We take the Word of God to them, which teaches the better way.

In order to be enabled to do more and more efficient work we much need a more commodious and safer mode of travelling than by canoe. God's honoured servant, Rev. J. H. Sobey, who was formerly in charge of this work, often felt the same. We must have a steam launch. One can be got, costing sixty pounds only, which would amply meet our present requirements. Will the Lord's people help us to raise this amount? Bibles, Gospel portions, and tracts would be most welcome. These can be sent direct to me at Bocas-del-Toro, U.S. Columbia. For further information about this work, I would refer the reader to Dr. H. Guinness, Bow, England, or to Rev. E. J. Hewitt, Secretary J.B.M. Society, Jamaica, W.I.—Yours sincerely,

A. W. Meredith.

MISSIONARY PRAYER MEETING.

On New Year's morning the library of the Mission House, Furnival-street, W.C., was crowded by friends representing missions in many lands and of various societies. Among those who led in prayer and praise were Revs. D. Jones, of Patna (B.M.S.), W. Major Paull (Bible Society), B. La Trobe (Moravian), and Edward Jones (L.M.S.), Mr. Hugh M. Mathieson (Presbyterian), and Mr. A. H. Baynes (B.M.S.).

Rev. D. J. East, for many years principal of the Training Institution, Calabar, presided, and delivered an address, in the course of which he spoke of the present time as critical in the history of missions. All societies seem to have reached a momentous crisis, involving anxiety and serious thought. Committees, Boards, and Councils are compelled to ask—shall we go backward or forward? Why is this? Probably it is that the members of the various churches may learn to put missions in their true place. They are not merely charitable institutions, to be supported or not as men choose. Gifts to missions are not eleemosynary bounties, but sacred gifts laid on God's altar.

Proceeding, the speaker showed how the Jamaica churches give nobly to missions. He was inclined to look on missionary enthusiasm and liberality as a kind of barometer of the spiritual life, whether in churches or in individuals. The world, he said, is open to receive the Gospel; men are pressing forward to offer for the service; the warfare between light and darkness becomes more close and fierce; shall the missionary enterprise go back for lack of funds? Retreat is death. We have no choice but to win or perish, for the relinquishment of the work would be the blight of Christendom.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 6.—LUKE XIX.

Zacchæus (1-10).—For long better things had been working in his heart. John the Baptist may have first started the shuttles that wove the outward reformation of which he speaks, but for some time his servants had been hastening to the houses of those whom formerly he had injured, to make reparation. But he required more, he needed salvation, such as only Jesus could give. How eager he was for Christ, allowing no crowd to intercept. The one man who most needed the Saviour in Jericho was discovered by Him and saved. The Lord is quick to discover the souls that need Him, and He does not hesitate to come to their homes.

The Parable of the Pounds (11-27).—Jesus has gone to receive the kingdom of the world from his Father's hands. We are his servants, called to administer his property until He come again. The equal distribution of a pound to each must indicate some common bestowment, such as time, or life, or the grace of God. Each is called to lay out his share to the best advantage. Are we doing this! There is an evident distinction between the faithless servant and the enemies of the king; he deprives the one of his trusteeship, whilst the others are slain.

The Triumphal Entry (28-48).—This is the master motive, that the Lord has need. This being so, we can hold nothing back from Him, whether child, or money, or our own life. Ah! what bliss it is to be needed and used by the Master. Through the ages this lowly and glad procession of rejoicing disciples has been passing through the world. Their song is an echo of the song of angels over the plains of Bethlehem. (41) What a contrast. Songs and tears. The disciples' joy in Christ, his sorrow over those who know Him not. The time of our visitation may come velvet-footed, stealing on us as the spring-tide, or like the advent of Jesus to the world that did not recognise Him in his lowly guise. (46) The heart is God's true temple, let us keep it sacred to Him. Ask Him to keep it sacred for Himself.

MONDAY, JANUARY 7.—LUKE XX.

The Vineyard Keepers (1-18).—They are first described in their attack on Christ, and then sketched in his parable, which was suggested by their attack. Men do not need the external proof of a Divine commission; the heaven-sent messenger bears it in the aspect of his face, the accent of his voice. It was so with John the Baptist. There was no need for the Baptist to argue for his claims. They were presented, and as the people streamed into the Jordan valley, they were acknowledged. His verdict as to God, and sin, and duty, was accepted as decisive. It was the same with Christ. The masses of people that followed Him and hung upon his words had no doubt that He was the Heir of the vineyard. The principal men professed to doubt it, because they were reluctant to surrender their claims to name and place and the other produce of the vineyard itself. (9) The whole point of this parable lies in the 14th verse. There was no doubt that the son was the heir; the main contention was to appropriate the vineyard as their own. (10) These servants represent the prophets of the Old Testament. (16) This destruction came when Jerusalem fell. "The others" probably refers to the Church, in which Gentiles are so largely represented. (18) You must either be broken in penitence or crushed in judgment.

Cæsar's or God's (19-26).—The image of God has been stamped on us in creation, and renewed in regeneration. We are his; let us render ourselves wholly to Him. We should so live that there be no doubt as to whose we are. (26) If He answered so wisely for Himself, He will teach us also what to say in hours of perplexity.

Christ's Answer to the Sadducees (27-47).—Those whom we call the dead are the living. Death is but a passage, a step. We live up to it, through it, and on the other side of it. There is not even a moment's cessation of life. Whether here or hereafter, we live unto Him. (46) Those who make gain of religion are not to be trusted. There have always been hypocrites, and will be, but it is the height of folly to reject good money because there are bad coins in circulation.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 8.—LUKE XXI.

Fate of the Temple (1-9).—The gifts of sincere devotion will outlast the most massive structures. The gift of the widow outweighed those of wealth, because God estimates the value of our gifts by what is left behind, and she had nothing left. It is great faith which dares to give its living to God. (8) When we ask speculative questions, the Master bids us take heed to ourselves. (9) His advent is ushered in by wars and tumults, not by a millennium of peace.

The Shaking of Earth and Heaven (10-28).—Creation groaneth and travaileth in pain. Earthquakes, famines, and pestilences show how greatly the material universe has been affected and disintegrated by sin. The devil will not surrender his kingdom, any more than the bodies of men, without rending it first. (12) The testimony which the saints have given from prison and dock has reached the great ones of the earth, and reverberated through palaces and courts. (14) What calm should fill our hearts when we are anticipating contumely and gainsaying. (20) These words were true of the Jerusalem of that time, but they have further reference to the close of the age. (24) The times of the Gentiles are now passing over. They were those described by Nebuchadnezzar's image, and will close when the stone without hands has fallen upon the feet of clay and iron. (25) The restlessness of human politics and kingdoms is well described as the roaring of the sea. The ceaseless fret of the ocean is a true type of the turbulence of human life, but through the storm the Redeemer draws nigh to the tempest-tossed boat, whispering "Peace."

The Parable of the Fig-tree (29-38).—The summer of the world is coming in the setting up of the Kingdom of God. Then the flowers of human life will blow, the fruits of character mature, and the storms will be over. (32) In their limited significance the Lord's words were fulfilled within forty years from that moment, but this was only the miniature of things that are yet to be revealed. (34) Note that cares are as dangerous as surfeiting. (37) Probably He slept with his disciples in the open air, for He had nowhere to lay his head, though it is not impossible that He was welcomed to the home of Bethany; but the number of his disciples, and his desire to be with them, may have made that dear resort impossible.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 9.—LUKE XXII.

The Supper (1-23).—The plottings of open foes are less to be feared than the treachery of a false friend. How calmly our Lord went to his death, carefully observing each part of the ceremonial law, and by obedience preparing and nourishing his soul. (10) Be on the outlook for symptoms of God's will. (11) Let each provide a guest-chamber for the Lord. That which is prepared as the vestibule of death shall presently be shaken with the advent of the Spirit of life. (15) He desired the expression of human love, but above all to feed on his Father's strength through the emblems of the Passover. (18) Jesus bound Himself with the vow of the Nazarite, which is yet unfulfilled, because the kingdom of God is not yet fully come. He will not fail nor be discouraged.

The Disciples (24-38).—How unseemly to wrangle thus within the circle of the cross. Yet do we always go to the Supper with pure and loving hearts? To serve is Christlike, it is through service that we reign. What a glimpse this is into the prayer-hours of our Lord, that He prayed for his own by name. Temptation rids us of our chaff, but not one grain can be lost. We shall turn again, and out of our failures shall learn the secret of strength both for ourselves and others. (35) Our Lord in these metaphorical words suggests the troublous and difficult times which were at hand; and at the same time recalls the instructions which He gave when He first sent out the twelve. We are now called to very different ministry, that which lay on the other side of the Cross.

Gethsemane and the Arrest (39-62).—It was Christ's custom to pray. He knew what was about to befall. It was the will of his Father that He should redeem man, and in this He was agreed, for this He had come into the world. The only question was, if there were a less difficult path, by which to arrive at the same goal. If there were none, He was prepared to drain the cup to its dregs. What a lesson this is in prayer! The answer did not come in the removal of the cup, but in the impartation of additional strength. (51) Christ asked that his hand should be freed for a moment that He might stretch it forth to save. (55) We must avoid the outer circles of temptation if we would escape its eddies.

The Mockery (63 71).—Christ embodied his own teaching in his perfect passivity. So long as remonstrance might avert the wrong, He strove to turn them from their evil way, but when in spite of all they had virtually condemned Him, He held his peace, except to indicate his dignity and deity.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 10.—LUKE XXIII.

Pilate and Herod (1-12).—The true Passover Lamb was well searched to see if there were spot or blemish, or any such thing, and unanimously declared to be without fault. Pilate's practised eye could detect nothing worthy of death. In his heart, he knew Christ was guiltless, but he feared the Jewish hate. (8) Herod's moral nature had been extinguished by long courses of immorality and cruelty. He treated the incident with flippant levity. The gorgeous raiment was an imitation of the royal apparel of the Jewish kings, and may have suggested the true words, afterwards affixed to the cross, "This is the King of the Jews."

Barabbas (13-25).—The world will not have Christ; it prefers the murderer. The heroes of the world are those from whose hands it has suffered most wrong. Pilate was swept down by the torrent of vehemence. Had he been strong at the outset, he would never have had so stern a fight, or been so ignominiously and disastrously defeated.

The Daughters of Jerusalem (26-31).—Ever more thoughtful for others than for Himself, the Lord forgot for a short space His griefs that He might address words of warning and entreaty to these women. He was the young green tree in the forest glade, consumed in the awful heat of Divine justice, they were the dry wood which would soon crackle in the fall of their city.

The Dying Thief (32-49).—From his cross, Jesus pleads as priest. The intercession for men, begun there, has continued through the ages. Each time men have sinned against Him or his, there has gone up, "Father, forgive." This dying thief had perhaps heard Christ speak to the crowds in Galilee, and the blessed words came back to him. His faith was dimmed by much ignorance, but it touched Christ. Dost thou only ask to be remembered at some future date? "Thou shall be with Me to-day in Paradise." Paradise is the third heaven (2 Cor. xii. 1-4). (44) Nature was affected by the sin of the first Adam, and by the redemption of the second. (45) The work of Judaism was complete. Through the rent veil our souls draw near to God.

Joseph (50-56).—The precious body is well cared for—emblem of the care of the Body, the Church, which is of inestimable value in the sight of God.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 11.—LUKE XXIV.

Not Here (1-12).—How many seek the living Christ amid the wrappings of ceremony and creed! He is not there. He has gone forth, and we must follow Him where the Easter morn is breaking. Let us set our affections on things above, where He is. Words which He spake came back again to memory. How much that we hear and read lies in our heart's soil unfruitful, waiting the summons of some great experience to give it life.

Slow of Heart to Believe (13-43).—This exquisite idyll of the Resurrection is too lifelike and natural to have been invented. The sorrowful walk, the reasonings, the wonder that any could have been in Jerusalem and not have known, the lingering hope, the despair that the third day was waning, the clue of the morning wonder which had not been followed up, the burning heart, the invitation to the evening meal, the revelation of the Lord, the haste to bear the tidings to the twelve—each of these touches is full of beauty and pathos, and we stand in the chamber of the little inn beside them. We, too, recognise the risen Lord. (36) When we speak of Jesus, He is near. (38) He condescends to our weakness, and suits Himself to our need, and goes out of his way to satisfy our incredulous hearts.

Parted from Them (44 53).—The Word of God is the best guide unto the knowledge of Jesus. Let us ask for the opened heart that we may understand the Scriptures. Those who have learned must teach. But to say what we know is not enough, unless it be in the power of the Holy Ghost. (50) Those hands have never been withdrawn; still from heaven itself they rain down blessings on upturned hearts. Oh, for grace to bless God, when we take his gifts back to Himself!

SATURDAY, JANUARY 12.—JOHN I.

The Word (1-18).—Christ is the speech of God. He preceded all things, and is therefore eternal: He made all, and is therefore divine. Life, Light, Love, are with Him. To be outside Him is to miss them all. To be in Him is to possess them, though all earthly streams be dry. (10) Before we can know who or what Christ is, we must receive the new nature through which alone the spiritual faculties of sight and hearing come to us. But directly we believe, we receive Him and the right of calling ourselves his. (14) Jesus is full of grace and truth, let us receive out of his fulness continually the replenishment of our need.

The Messenger (19-42).—That John was greatest of woman-born is proved by his profound humility. He was only a voice crying in the wilderness, and was not worthy to unloose the shoe-latchets of the Lord. (33) The blessed dove at last found his rest in the meek and holy nature of Jesus. We all need that He should not only descend, but abide. (36) Spirit-taught John designated Jesus as God's Lamb. The sacrifice of Christ is the heart of his work. To declare that, is to touch the secret of his advent to our world. He came not to live, to teach, to do works of philanthropy; but to die. (40) John was to decrease. The disciples whom he had won were destined to pass over to the Lord. To hear the Bridegroom's voice was his reward.

The Disciples (43-51).—The kingdom spreads from life to life, and from heart to heart. The cries, "We have found," and "Come and see," are always full of fascination to hearts and minds weary in the quest of the Secret of Life, and the Chief Good. But such are always destined to behold the shining ladder reaching up into heaven. Greater and yet greater things are ever breaking into vision.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 13.

FEEDING THE FIVE THOUSAND.—Mark vi. 30-44.

GOLDEN TEXT, Luke i. 53.

THE "desert place" in which this miracle was performed was near Bethsaida (Luke ix. 10). There appear to have been two Bethsaidas, both at the north of the Sea of Galilee, but one on the west of Jordan and the other on the east. Close by the eastern Bethsaida is the plain of Butaiha, uncultivated and solitary. Here this event occurred.

Several things led to our Lord being here. (1) The need of his apostles (30, 31). Their missionary tour had been full of incident, and they wisely told Jesus everything. Every teacher must meet his Lord and tell Him the same. If this fact were kept in view, would not our work be better done? But more retirement was needed than could be obtained where the people thronged Him. He therefore withdrew them for rest and intercourse with Himself. No servant of God can do without such seasons. Withdraw from the multitude in order to minister successfully to them. (2) The news of John's death just brought to Him (Matt. xiv. 12), and of the explanation Herod gave of the miracles of Jesus (Mark vi. 14-16) rendered it wise to depart out of Herod's dominions. His unwavering confidence in the Father's care of Him did not make Him less prudent.

But even here the multitude followed him (33). Their course took them round the head of the lake, and across one of the fords of Jordan. They were actuated by different motives. Some came on account of his miracles (John vi. 2); others may have been on their way to Jerusalem to keep the Passover, which was nigh at hand (John vi. 4); while not a few simply followed the crowd. If popularity were the only thing Jesus required He had it now. But the mixed motives of the people did not prevent Jesus regarding them with "compassion," and seeking to instruct them (34). He regards the people still in the same way. Let us seek to share his compassion.

Then follows this miracle, which is the only one related by all four evangelists. It teaches that our Lord cares for the bodily needs of men, and reminds us that all our supplies are from Him. The miracle of multiplying the loaves is not greater than that process of nature by which the seed sown produces the abundant harvest. The commonest things are miracles to those whose eyes are opened to see them. Let this lesson be enforced. Temporal blessings yield the greatest delight to those who receive them with grateful hearts from God.

But the miracle is a parable also. The need of men, the supply, and the co-operation of the disciples in the work of distribution—all these are true to-day. To overlook this would be to lose the most important lesson of the story.

The disciples of Jesus are still surrounded by a needy multitude. They want bread (36). It is an imperious want that must be satisfied. Other things they may have if they can get them; but their very life requires this. You know the bread which the soul of man needs? (John vi. 26, 33, 35.) The "desert place" truly describes this world, which yields no supplies for the deepest needs of men. Have we experienced this hunger? And do we recognise, as Jesus did, that multitudes experience it still?

There are two ways of dealing with this pressing need. One is that of the disciples (36). But to send them away is not to satisfy them. Is it not the aim of some Christian men to get away from the centres of population, that the deep need of the people may not be seen? It is strange that many should be so ready to send others into the midst of the distress and moral corruptions of the heathen world, and yet are eager to take themselves into pleasant suburban districts, where poverty and vice are practically unknown. The Lord's method is different (37, 38). It was a strange command in view of their very slender resources. The extent of their store was not enough for themselves. How could they, with so little, feed so many? Yet the command is to be obeyed, not to be questioned. What a blessing it would be if we could learn that the command of Jesus makes the impossible thing possible. The effort to obey would find Him sufficient to meet our need. Should we not learn that the slenderest resources are no excuse for doing nothing. If Christ is with us He can take the weak things and the things that are despised, and even the things that are not, and with these can achieve wonders.

The preparations for the feast are suggestive (39, 40). Order is heaven's first law. The whole five thousand were arranged in ranks, so that the slope of the hill looked like a terraced garden. By such an arrangement it was easy for the disciples to reach all. If the people saw what a little store was put into our Lord's hands, then their readiness to be arranged in ranks expressed their faith. From the loaves and fishes they could expect nothing; all their expectation must have been from Him. The giving of thanks (41) was no mere formality to Jesus. Why should it be to us?

It is important to note that, though it was Jesus who performed the miracle, the disciples were needed to distribute the bread (41). They had to be continually taking from Him and handing to the multitude, and so long as there were people to be fed there was plenty in his hands to meet their need. This is our work still—to stand between the perishing multitudes and Jesus, to receive from Him and hand on to them.

Gathering up the fragments (43) reminds us that God's bounty must not lead to wastefulness, and that the disciples, by giving their all to Jesus for the satisfaction of the multitude, had their own store increased (Prov. xi. 24).

MY PRIZES.

THE New Year is a grand time for prizes, and during the past months many boys and girls have been competing for them, not only at school but in connection with magazines for children and young people. I should like to tell you of some prizes that I obtained when I was about the same age as the little friends who are reading this paper.

Many years ago my chief interest in life used to be in connection with rewards for which I was working. As I sit here writing, I can see on my book-shelves several handsome volumes bound in scarlet and gold, in blue and gold, and in dark green, which I received as the result of my efforts. I also keep very carefully in my drawer two bronze medals and some certificates which were awarded to me by the Sunday School Union; so you see I used to work a great deal when I was a girl. As I look at my lovely books I am so glad to have them, and often enjoy reading them; it gives me pleasure to possess the certificates and medals, but there are some other things I gained which are more valuable still. You wonder what they can be, so I will tell you, as they are still to be obtained by all who wish for them. I call them the four P's.

The first P. is Prayerfulness. In every competition, whether it be in writing, drawing, or answering questions, in knitting or sewing, all the work must be your own; no mother, or sister, or friend is allowed to assist you. And yet there is One who can, and may, help you. Have you asked Him? I remember one Sunday afternoon I had spent a long long time looking for a certain name in the New Testament. It was getting near the day for sending the answers in, and they were far from ready. I was very tired, and felt tempted to give up in despair, but, before doing so, I thought I would ask the Lord about it. I knelt down, just where I was, and prayed that if it were God's will I should go on with the question, He would show me that one name very soon. Then I rose from my knees, and opened the Bible, and there, right in front of me, the first word my eyes rested on was the one I sought. Oh, how joyfully I resumed my work after that. The beautiful, brass-bound writing desk I received when I had finished the task is not so new after years of use as once it was, but the lesson I learnt grows fresher and sweeter as time goes on and will last me as long as I live.

My second P. is Perseverance. No matter how clever you may be, no matter what advantages you may enjoy, you will never succeed in life without this quality. If your endeavours in connection with prize-winning teach you perseverance, it will be of more value to you than all the rewards that ever were offered. Everyone cannot win the prize. Dear boys and girls, do not be discouraged when you fail.

If at first you don't succeed,
Try, try, try again.

I used to say those lines over to myself, when I looked in vain for my name in the list of successful workers. I advise you to do the same, and be quite sure that "patient continuance in well-doing" can never be waste of time.

Precision is the third P. This is one of the first things necessary for success in writing. It is no use having something to tell unless you understand how to express yourself; it will not avail you to know the answer to a question unless you can give that answer in the right words. It is quite as much a fault to write too much as too little, and a great deal of practise is needed to enable you to hit the happy medium; this practise you can get by entering for a competitive examination. When you are going to begin any composition, do not sit down and scribble off the first thing that comes into your mind; think your subject carefully out, and then write your thoughts as briefly and accurately as possible. Keep to the point; by so doing you will save not only yourself, but also those who correct your papers, useless trouble.

P. number four is Punctuality. "Time and tide wait for no man," and the postman and Mr. Examiner do not wait for any late competitors. So, dear children, be sure that your stories, answers, needlework, etc., are ready by the date mentioned. "As the twig is bent, the tree will grow"; if you be punctual as a child, you will be the same when you are older. There are many grown-up people who never do anything at the proper time; if they had gone in for competitions when they were children, they would have learned better habits.

Prayerfulness, perseverance, precision, and punctuality—these, then, are my treasures, which are more valuable than all the trophies of my happy, busy childhood; but there is a better prize even than these that I am hoping to win some day, and you may win it, too. What is it? You will see if you look at 1 Corinthians ix. 25.

"Georgie," said Frankie to his little cousin, "father gives me half-a-crown when I'm a good boy. What does your papa give you?"

"Nothing," answered Georgie; "but I don't mind that, for I am going to have a whole crown when I get to heaven."

Have you this glorious crown in view, dear young friends? If any of you have not, do not think more about other prizes until you have entered the lists for the great prize, which "the Lord, the righteous Judge, shall give ... unto all them that love his appearing."

"AS A TALE THAT IS TOLD."

REV. W. HAY AITKEN AT ST. JAMES'S HALL.

Last Sunday afternoon and evening the services in St. James's Hall, in connection with the West London Mission, were conducted by the eminent Church of England missioner, Rev. W. H. Hay Aitken.

At the afternoon service Mr. Aitken preached with great power from Psalm xc., "We bring our years to an end as it were a tale that is told." This psalm, said the preacher, is ascribed to Moses; whoever the author was, he had studied human life with care and had drawn his conclusions from the study. There are times in the experience of all of us when the words of the text come home to us with special force. We revisit the scenes of our youth; we read over again a bundle of old letters; we meet a friend whom we have not seen for years; we muse in a country churchyard where lie the bodies of some who were dear to us; we watch by the bedside of a dying relative—in all such and similar circumstances we feel how expressive and full of meaning are the words of this Psalmist, "We bring our years to an end as it were a tale that is told."

Certainly the close of the year is such a time as this. The thoughtless, the frivolous, and the pleasure-seeker, may dance the old year out and the new year in, but thoughtful men

WILL FIND BETTER EMPLOYMENT.

If there is any particular period in the whole course of the year that suggests reflection, surely its expiring moments should do so. Memory wanders back and surveys its hopes and disappointments, its good intentions, perhaps its broken vows and frequent falls. We think of its scenes of happiness and mirth, of sorrow and loss. As we look back it seems as if all the feverish interest has gone out of the picture; the tension, the nervous excitement, the enthusiasm, the prolonged sense of sustained interest are all gone. There only remains the cold, calm recollection. We look back to January, and how far away it seems; yet the intervening months have not taken long to live. Those of us in middle life, at any rate, know how rapidly the time seems to slip away, though it may appear a long time when we look back. As we go back upon the past we find that we are really looking at things in the light of history. There is great advantage in this. When we are living our life there is so much that interests us as to make it not surprising that our judgment should be biassed to a certain extent. If we could only see things while in the act of living, as we see these very things when once we have lived them, our lives would be very different. The farther back we go the more distinctly clear our moral discernment becomes. If we could only live the present in the light of the past! If we could gauge our actions, our motives, our thoughts, our imaginations, our intentions by the clear light which seems to permeate the past chapter of our history, how much better fitted we should be to face life's dangers, to rise above its infirmities, and to acquit ourselves as before God and man upon life's battlefield.

We may helpfully meditate for a little while upon the analogy suggested in the text between the living of a life and the telling or hearing of a tale. We may read a tale or a book in two ways. One man may read it simply for the gratification which he may derive from the excitement of the story. Another man, while not insensible to any proper gratification of that kind which he may experience, will keep his eyes open for the higher lessons that the tale may impart. There may be literary merit which claims admiration and suggests instruction; there may be character sketches full of vigour and truth; or the moral lessons may stand out strongly. As he lays down the book, he feels that he has enjoyed the story, but he has also

GOT A GOOD DEAL OUT OF IT.

So it is in life. Are there not multitudes of people who live only for the mere sake of living? The interest and cares of the life; its joys, hopes, and disappointments, engross all their attention, and they look no further. By-and-by, when the end is reached, there comes the mournful sense that all that is worth having is gone. Thank God there are also those who believe that life is not merely a prolonged diversion. It is full of interest to them, but there is something higher than a mere enjoyment of the ordinary interests of living. It is full of interest because it is full of blessing, and presents innumerable opportunities for service. Life is a joy because the man who lives may become what God intended him to be. So he gets both the satisfaction of living, and the deeper satisfaction of attaining to life's purposes.

Another point in common between the reading of a story and the living of a life is found in the haste in which some proceed towards the end. How rapidly the novel reader learns to read. He has trained himself to skim the pages, so that he is proficient in getting over the ground. Thus he curtails the very enjoyment he seeks. It is so with many lives. In the excess of excitement which they throw into their lives many men shorten the life which they desire to enjoy. "A short life and a merry one" seems to be their motto. I have known cases where men have been old at thirty—not old in years, but in the breaking down of all their higher and nobler capacities; in the shattering of their constitutions and in the loss of that buoyancy of spirit that should carry us on to advanced years. Hear the mournful words of Lord Byron, written while he was a comparatively young man:—

> My days are in the yellow leaf;
> The flowers and fruits of love are gone;
> The worm, the canker, and the grief
> Are mine alone.
> The fire that in my bosom preys
> Is lone as some volcanic isle;
> No torch is kindled at its blaze—
> A funeral pile!

There is no more ominous word than "fast," which means a great deal more than do many slang words. It means that it is possible to get through life in such a hurry as to curtail that which one would suppose it would be to our interest to lengthen. When the end is reached there is collapse—all is lost. Do we not well to ask if this is the best thing that life can do for us? Is there nothing higher than this feverish haste; nothing better and more manly than this perennial round of frivolous excitement? Remember that he who thus throws his life away, throws away a chance wholly unique. Only once there is given to us the possibility of living out this brief life as God intended that his creature man should live.

Take another point. As we read through a story we never know what is to turn up on the next page. There may be quite a change in the plot—some new incident or unlooked-for circumstance. Do we not all feel like that in life? Even so great a man as Paul had to confess that he knew nothing of the things that were to befal him. Do any of us feel curious this afternoon, and think we would like to have a look beforehand at 1895, and see what is going to be written? Well—I do not know. If an angel from heaven had the power to unfold the scroll of the coming year and to let us have a look at it, I think I should close the book rather than see it. It will come in its own time. If some of us knew our lives beforehand, there would be something very dreary in the living of them. Let us be thankful that a kinder Providence keeps it concealed. But the fact that we know nothing about the next page in our life makes the Christian feel all the more how much he needs the presence of One who can rob life of all its terrors, and how foolish a thing it is to live without such a One to fall back upon. It seems passing strange that this single consideration does not with every man make God a necessity. And when the curtain of life is falling, and the shadows are closing around us, and the only thing that we know is that the thing is unknown, just because it is unknown, we need to reach through the invisible into the world that is unseen, where God stretches out his hand to us that we may grasp that hand of infinite power, and say, "Come what may, it is well with my soul."

All stories lead up towards the end. When it comes then the plot is revealed. There were many things you could not understand while the tale was being told. Why did the author introduce this or that chapter? To you, it seemed rather to confuse the plot, and was very bewildering. As you draw near the end you begin to understand it better, and at the end all is plain. So in the great story of life there may be much in our human experiences that we cannot understand.

THE PLOT IS NOT YET COMPLETE.

One of the special characteristics of our modern life is a certain hot and petulant impatience. Much of the unbelief of the time, I am convinced, is due to this. We are in such a hurry to get everything explained. Why does God allow this? What is the meaning of that mysterious problem? Why should little children shiver in the cold and biting east wind in the streets of London? So men go on, quoting these things as evidence against the general theory of Divine love. There are great problems and great difficulties in life. When our Lord was here He had to say to his impetuous disciple, "What I do thou knowest not now, but thou shalt know hereafter." Life must have its mysteries, or there would be no room for faith to act. We say to our children when they challenge our action, "Wait a bit; by and by you will understand it all." Christian brother, have you been exercised by the spirit of the times? Have you felt the bewildering effect of haste, and of the thousand moral, intellectual, social, and other difficulties that are brought before our minds? Be patient; the story is not ended yet.

> God is his own interpreter,
> And He will make it plain.

Among the many joys of the hereafter I look forward with delightful anticipation to the time when my dear Lord will conduct me through all the mysteries of this strange world, and show me how wise He was in doing that in which we are endeavouring, perhaps, to justify his wisdom. When we see the end we shall break forth in a glad song of holy praise, and dare to say, without fear of being challenged, "Thou hast done all things well."

The end is coming; what is the end to be? Suppose we put it to ourselves this afternoon. There are all sorts of different stories—tragic tales, plenty of them; pleasing tales, dull tales, and instructive tales. As the story of our life closes, and we look back on it, how will it leave us? I have come across many tragic tales in my time—men who started with fair promise and splendid prospects, but one accursed sin trifled with, marred and ruined their whole career. But there are also interesting tales. It seems to me that every Christian life ought to be full of interest. There should be nothing tedious or humdrum in any Christian life. There ought to be a certain modest heroism about everyone who names the name of Christ.

I look upon Heaven as a great library, where the story of human lives will be treasured. Each book now being read by the eye of God, and being written by the pen of the recording angel, will be for all eternity before the eyes of our fellow saints, who shall read of the divine grace and love in what He has done for man, and of the triumphs won by the power of the Holy Ghost. But what about the tragic stories? A friend of mine was reading a French story of the modern realistic school. He had not read a dozen pages when he threw aside the book and cast it into the fire. He said it was the only thing to do with such trash. There are those now telling out the tale of their lives in the ears of God, and the presence of his holy angels, whose life, it may be, will be treated somewhat after that manner. Is it so that the only thing that can be done with the completed lives of some of us is to be thrown into the Gehenna of fire and despair, like "rubbish to the void"? Is your life a tale that angels would refuse to read; that the prurient imagination of devils might be expected to dwell upon; that would make hell glad and heaven mourn? Or shall it be, by the power of God, a life that will find its place in the heavenly library throughout eternity; which men will read and re-read as contributing to the great purpose of all existence—the glorifying of the Creator by the creature, the satisfying of the heart of God by blessing those whom He has made for Himself?

ANTI-SEMITISM IN GERMANY is still inventive of slanders against the Jews. The "blood accusation" having become altogether discredited, a Hanoverian editor has alleged that the teaching of the Talmud allows Jews to violate their oath when they can thereby bring injury to Gentiles. A criminal prosecution followed this bold statement, in the course of which Professor Noeldeke, of Strasburg, was called as an expert witness. He declared that the Talmud contains no such teaching, and the calumniator was condemned to fourteen days' imprisonment.

RAMABAI, THE WIDOW'S FRIEND.

IT will be interesting to your readers to hear what the Gospel of Christ has done for one of India's widows, and what is now being done by her means for this helpless and degraded class. It has become the fashion nowadays in a certain circle to think that the state of the women in India is not at all so bad as is sometimes represented, and now that "Sati" (or widow-burning) has been abolished, the widows are not at all so hardly treated as well-meaning but one-sided fanatics suppose. If this be so, why so many suicides amongst child-widows? Why should a Hindu be excommunicated by his caste fellows if he dare to marry a widow? Why bodies emaciated and disfigured by starvation and cruel blows? No, no. Let those who speak and write so come out to India and acquaint themselves thoroughly with facts before they presume to express an opinion which only betrays their ignorance.

PANDITA RAMABAI, the one woman in India who dared to stand forth and be the widow's friend and defender, in the face of threats, danger, and misrepresentation, had her first call to this work at a very early age. As a little girl of eight she was playing in the courtyard of her father's house, whilst in the same yard a child-wife was sitting at her spinning-wheel. Presently, having occasion to go into the house, the little wife left her cotton lying beside the wheel. This was too great a temptation to the monkeys, with which the neighbourhood of Muttra abounds, so they leaped into the yard, snatched up the cotton, and disappeared with it. The loss was a mere trifle, simply not worth speaking about, but the mother-in-law, always glad of an excuse to abuse this little wife, who was in reality a slave in the house, refused to believe the story about the monkeys, and not only beat the child cruelly herself, but complained to the husband that he had brought a thriftless and extravagant creature into the family, who would ruin them all. This enraged him to such an extent that he rushed out, dragged his wife into a room, from which for about half an hour Ramabai heard the most piercing and agonising screams proceeding.

Such an impression was produced on her mind and heart by this incident that although over twenty years has elapsed since that time, she yet recalls these screams with a shudder. Day by day and year by year she pondered over the unkindnesses and cruelties she often saw practised on girls and women, sometimes for no fault whatever, and the reasons given amongst the people did not satisfy her, viz., that women are made wicked and deserve all they get, or again that it is their fate.

Ramabai is the daughter of a Marathi priest whose views were far in advance of the age in which he lived. He had determined to teach his wife first of all; but this was so hotly opposed by his friends that he left civilisation and retired to the forest, where he could carry out his views without hindrance. In this forest home Ramabai was born and grew up carefully educated, by her mother chiefly, until she was seven years of age. Until she was sixteen she was allowed to remain unmarried, and to wander about from one sacred place to another with her parents, her education still continuing, so that she came to be looked upon as a prodigy. When her father and mother died, she went along with her brother from place to place delivering lectures and studying the state of the women, but it was not until she was eighteen years of age that she felt it laid on her heart irresistibly to do something to help them.

Her first idea was to go from house to house and persuade the women to have their daughters educated, as she herself had been so raised by this means. Meantime she was carefully searching the Hindu sacred books and found in them no hope for woman. In them women are degraded, their only chance being in worshipping their husbands as gods, and as Ramabai had no husband she wondered how she was to manage. Besides, her heart and reason revolted to see the estimation in which woman is held in those books, so she turned to see what the Brahma Samaj doctrines were. There she found that ideas are taken alike from the Vedas and from the Bible (leaving out the essential part of the Christian doctrine), but that still there was no satisfactory arrangement for women. From this she was led on to study the Bible, but merely from an intellectual standpoint; her heart was not in the least engaged in the matter.

Her marriage at this time to a learned lawyer changed the current of her thoughts, and her fixed life purpose of helping the women of India became more vague and indefinite, but her brief spell of wedded happiness was soon over; within nineteen months she was left a widow, her husband being taken from her suddenly by cholera, and she was left to learn from bitter experience what it is to be a widow in India. Her infant daughter Manu, or more fully Manoràma, by her helplessness claimed a mother's care, and drove from her mind recurring temptations to suicide, and by degrees it dawned upon her that now she was called and consecrated by suffering, not only to help the women but specially to devote her life to the "widows" of India.

Her husband's relations wished her to remain with them, but she knew what that meant, and absolutely refused. Never, she said, never; I will look to God alone, and He will help me. Fortunately her father and brother had educated her well, so that she was able to earn her own living by teaching, lecturing, and writing books. She was led to Poona, where she hoped to open a school for widows, but being penniless she went round lecturing and begging money from friends and her own relations to start the school, but nobody would help. The idea of helping "widows" seemed to them ludicrous if not sinful, and her scheme altogether preposterous.

Then she decided to study medicine, and, being duly qualified, keep a school by her own earnings;

this also was not practicable, as then there were no colleges (medical for women) in India.

It was at this point in her career that in studying the Bible she came upon the story of the "Woman of Samaria" and Christ's treatment of her, and she could not shake off the effect that his conduct upon this occasion had upon her mind, so vastly different from what she had been taught to believe was the right treatment of such women. A second article will show how Ramabai was led to England, and her subsequent career to the present day.

INFLUENCE.—If you influence a child, you thereby influence all whom that child will influence. If you influence a man for a moment you influence him for ever.

ROSS BIBLE CARRIAGES.—Mr. John Coates has issued the thirteenth annual report of this work, in which he describes efforts made by Gospel Tent and Bible Carriage agencies. He says: "We have visited scores of villages in the neighbourhood of Gloucestershire, Worcestershire, Shropshire, and Herefordshire, calling at thousands of houses and cottages, leaving silent messengers at each. During the year we have travelled 1550 miles, and have had the joy and happy privilege, in company with fellow-labourers Colonel Sprate and Captain Weaver, of holding 119 special mission services—not a mission closing without evident tokens of souls being eternally blessed. In many of the places visited the pure Gospel is rarely heard." Communications for Mr. Coates should be addressed "Northleigh," Ross, Herefordshire.

The Evangelist.

"WILL FATHER BE A GOAT?"

IT is related of James Stirling that, speaking once of his early drinking habits, he said:—"Though I was the greatest coward that ever entered the devil's battlefield at the onset, by the time that the third discharge of the drunkard's blunderbuss (glass) was over, I was bold as a lion, wiser than Solomon, stronger than Samson, richer than Crœsus, and more eloquent than Demosthenes.

"But things were sadly changed when next morning dawned on my trembling frame—mute as a mummy, feeble as a child, stupid as a mule, my pockets empty as a cuckoo's nest in March, a coward in my own home, and to my conscience, afraid to look my wife or children in the face, so horror-stricken that when I commenced work among the men I would cry out, 'Oh, if hell be worse than this, what will an eternity of it be? It seemed as if I was to be borne down on the dark tide into hell itself."

James had a praying wife, who constantly wrestled with God for the soul of her drunken husband, and pleaded that he might not die the death of a drunkard in one of his drinking bouts. Her unwavering persevering faith had its reward. She was one night, as was her unbroken wont, reading and praying with her children, when the drunken father reached his home. But the important incident is best told in his own words:—

"I had been all day in the public-house, and at night when I reached home my wife, as usual, was reading a chapter to the children. It was the twenty-fifth chapter of the Gospel by Matthew, and when she concluded a verse with the words, 'He shall set the sheep on his right hand, but the goats on the left,' our youngest boy, of four years old, who was lying with his head in his mother's lap, looked earnestly into her face and asked seriously:

"'Will father be a goat, then, mother?'

"This was too strong to be resisted. The earnest innocent look of the child, the bewilderment of the poor mother, and, above all, the question itself, smote me to the heart's core. I spent a sleepless, miserable night, wishing rather to die than to live such a life. My resolution was taken as it had never been before. Not all the men on earth could tempt me to drink, clear or brown, thick or thin."

After this he went to his pastor, who pointed him to Jesus, and showed him the way of salvation. Then a temperance society was formed in the place, and, the minister heading the list, the third name on the roll was that of James Stirling!

One of his children, who was at the meeting, seeing his father sign, ran all the way home to his mother, crying, "Mother, mother, father has put down his name!"

"Thank God!" cried the devout, but sorely-tried wife, "If he has signed it, he'll keep it. Thank God! he has signed it, and I'll sign it too, and ye must all sign it, for oh, surely the time—the set time to favour us and many poor families—has come!"

It had indeed come to the Stirling home. When the husband returned home that night the family indulged in prayer and praise; and, trying to read the parable of the prodigal, James Stirling found it to be too much for him, and burst into tears. Then, on his knees, he poured out his soul to God, and the gracious spirit of forgiveness was sent to heal his broken heart. He left the mercy-seat, forgiven and healed, and there was once more joy in heaven among the angels of God for that another sinner had repented.

Many tried to draw Stirling from his God and his pledge, and, among other reports, said he had returned to his sinful ways. But prayer was his anchor and God was his guide for thirty years. At the age of eighty-two he fell asleep in Jesus, and had kept his pledge to his dying hour. His minister had asked him when he signed, "Well, James, for how long have you signed?" "For evermore, sir, with God's help." And he kept his vow. G.

THE BISHOP OF LIVERPOOL has promised to take part in the annual meeting of the Sunday Closing Association, which will be held in the Town Hall, Liverpool, on Wednesday, February 13.

MEMORIES OF AN OLD WORKER.*

About the middle of last century two bold laymen were doing a very remarkable work in Scotland. "The Haldanes," as they were called, appeared to attribute their "life" and "fire" to God's Word alone. The elder brother was a well-known "laird" in Scotland, the younger brother a naval officer, I believe. Scotland was lying in a spiritual valley of death; the majority of the preachers even were lovers of ease; and reports appear to agree in the fact that the Scottish "manses" contained more good boon companions than God-sent saints. The Haldanes carried the Lamp of Truth into scores, we may say hundreds, of districts; and as no churches, no halls, could be found they wisely employed such opportunities as naturally presented themselves. The brothers would suddenly be found in a large parish church listening to the sermon; the service being over, they went out quickly, and mounting one of the large gravestones they gave out that the minister had preached upon, made no reference to the minister, but preached a stirring, pure Gospel sermon from the same text. All the congregation gathered round them, and frequently sat upon the old gravestones, the minister appearing among them. Whole districts were thus roused. Old Bibles were well read, doctrines discussed, and "Sunday sermons" were the topics that occupied Scotchmen. Let anyone read "The Lives of the Haldanes," written by a member of the family. So great was the commotion, that the "General Assembly" of Scotland took cognizance of it, and admitted that those gentlemen had done a good work in parishes; but they politely requested them not to preach on the same texts as the "ministers" selected, and I think they also requested them not to preach in the churchyards.

THE HALDANES CEASED TO DO SO,

and their spiritual power seemed from that time to go down. God had evidently given to them both a field and congregations, and at the precept of men they withdrew, and little fruit appeared afterwards. Scotland reaped fruit, however, from others; a number of brave young converts preached in the towns and villages, and in 1840 many old independent ministers in Scotland were converts of the Haldanes, and probably some parish ministers. We remember asking an old wealthy merchant in 1850, what marks distinguished the Haldanes from ordinary clergy when preaching. Only one difference; "the ministers preached exactly the same words, and truths; but the Haldanes appeared to us to believe every word they preached, while the ministers appeared to preach only in a professional way, and never disturbed us."

The Free Church Disruption shook Scotland in the year 1843. Upwards of 400 ministers threw up their manses, churches, salaries, and "livings," owing to a question of the "headship" of Christ; a vast procession of ministers left the General Assembly Hall of Edinburgh, and "shook the dust of the Establishment" off their feet. Scotland was roused from one end to the other; indolence and lethargy gave place then to energy and vigour. 400 preachers, with their wives and children, took poor, cheap lodging-rooms not far from the old manses. The hillside became the apostolic temple again. Old, dusty town-halls were swept out, and the martyrs became the heroes of all parishes.

The new parish minister was treated as frequently, and Scotch courage, which never goes very low at any time, spoke out publicly in favour of the sufferers. It is believed that many ministers who left the "Church" unconverted men, preached to themselves powerfully, and were converted under their own ministry. "Christ our only Head" was the burden of their Gospel song at first; but as they warmed, converted laymen gathered round them, and prayed in faith and zeal. Then thousands of young persons were brought to the truth, and cold, half-dead saints warmed up. The parish churches had few attendants at that time, and many of them would have been closed if the "plate collections" alone had been the source of revenue; but State aid kept them afloat.

As the hearts of the people warmed, and conversions continually appeared, money began to flow in freely. The collections were unprecedented in Scotland. New churches and manses sprang up in every parish. Some rich parishes helped poor parishes: money from quite unexpected sources poured in, and the parish manse often in its shady nook looked like a fossil belonging to a former age; the bright faces of the new converts, and the bright new manses, gave signs of new birth everywhere. Oh that the sunshine had been retained longer! Gradually, some preachers

FELL INTO THE OLD WHEEL-RUTS.

Clerical dignity, which had been lost in the excitement, began to revive. "Beware," said someone to Dr. Chalmers, "that you do not compromise your ministerial dignity," and the reply was in words such as these: "Beware you do not spiritually die whilst cultivating ministerialism." Preachers are liable to become "presidents" instead of bold apostolic fishermen—plain men with no outward display, but full of fire, and able to throw their nets well. Their adorable Lord was on the shore cooking, ay, cooking, for his weary and hungry brethren; where would the Lord have been if the Apostles had been in castles and palaces, with plenty of men-servants and cooks around them. He would have been out looking after the John Bunyans, who had none to cheer them, and none to help them; and who were imprisoned like poor Bunyan by the actually so-called "apostolic" followers.

A true-hearted English clergyman, who is still alive, I think, told me that in or about 1846 he heard many Free Church ministers in Scotland preach, and the power of the Spirit he felt, and many other strangers must also have felt. Some years later he trod the same ground, and heard the same men; the tide had gone down; "They are getting as low as we are," he said. Many such warnings speak to all our hearts.

THE WORLD'S COMFORTS

seldom rouse saints; Lot was shaken out of Sodom because he would not shake Sodom; Jonah was shaken into the sea because he would not shake Nineveh. Are some of us waiting for such reproofs and troubles? Our prayers perhaps are powerless and formal. When the apostles prayed, they shook even the building they were in.

Poor Jonathan and his armour-bearer had wonderful faith in God, and no faith in the power of the Philistines. In their fight for God they required an earthquake in order to alarm God's enemies, and the Lord sent them an earthquake. What can faith do when it takes exactly God's way, and runs upon God's written railroad? Paul and Silas were "fast in the stocks" and could cause no spiritual earthquake outside, but faith was strong, very strong, and they sang praises in their troubles, and God

SENT AN EARTHQUAKE TO CHEER THEM UP.

They sang at midnight, and an earthquake came; where were the chains and bands then? Let us never fear worldly troubles, but let us fear luxury and ease, idleness and palaces, ostentation, great riches and honours; and if we fear them, we will soon extinguish their power. Leaving comfortable manses, at the Disruption, hurt no one and blessed many; but furnishing new and better mansions grieved the Holy Spirit and pleased the flesh. Sloth and indolence walked in.

*In The Christian of August 2, 1894, I endeavoured to give what appeared to most of us the origin of the London work from 1852 to 1861.

FROM VILLAGE TO TOWN.—Mrs. Skipworth, Ownby Mount, Searby, Lincoln, has conceived a little plan which might well be adopted in many a country village in aid of the poor in our large cities. She writes:—"I have just started a working party in our village for starved East-end poor. All our folk are labourers' wives, so can give little but time to make clothing. I want money and materials, old or new, large or small, to make the most of for this purpose. I have collected some money to start us off, and hope to be able to keep sending up boxes to be given away through Mildmay workers."

AGGRESSIVE WORK.—11.

Whilst busy in the Master's service in a crowded provincial railway station, some time ago, I gave a tract to a well-dressed gentlemanly looking middle-aged man, and asked if he were saved. He looked at me with a sort of smile, and began to turn away sneeringly. I continued speaking as I moved slowly in his direction. He gradually stopped, and asked me a question, which I answered. He again spoke, and I noticed he was beginning to be interested. I therefore breathed more freely, and felt I was getting hold of him. He talked like an educated man, but as a sceptic, who had no respect for either the message or the Messenger. He evidently had a kind of contempt for Christians and Christian work, and expressed surprise that I should anticipate good results from such a childish occupation.

I informed him that I was a merchant—that I had been engaged in this Christian work for a great many years, and consequently my experience was considerable. We talked together for about three-quarters of an hour, until he became quite friendly. I then handed him a Gospel booklet, and we shook hands and separated. A day or two afterwards, we again happened to meet in the same railway station, and resumed the same line of conversation. This time his contempt appeared to be gradually passing into respect, and again we talked for a considerable time, for we were both on holiday, and therefore had plenty of time to spare. A few days passed, and we met once more in the same railway-station, for I had long since found a busy railway-station an excellent place for personally dealing with many people who are hanging about, watching what was going on or waiting the arrival of friends.

Upon this occasion, I gave him Sir Arthur Blackwood's "Shadow and Substance," which I think he promised to read. As we stood conversing together he became increasingly friendly, and would hardly leave me. Although I turned from him now and then to give a tract or speak a word to some passer-by, yet he patiently waited for me, and then wondered why I should be so persevering in this strange work.

We met several times afterwards, and eventually he told me a good deal about his early history; that his father was a religious man, and he himself had been brought up in the midst of these truths, but had wandered away. Having a liking for the stage, he became an actor, and had appeared upon the boards of most of the principal theatres in the land, and still followed that profession. He was decidedly a superior sort of man, with a handsome countenance, and broad square shoulders.

From time to time I had spoken to him very plainly about sin, the Saviour, eternity, and the absolute necessity of being born again, but oh! how helpless one feels in leading anyone into the Kingdom. He had heard the Gospel simply and faithfully put. The good seed of the Word had been sown; and we can go no further, but pray for the blessing, and believe that the Word shall not be spoken in vain. According to our faith, it shall be unto us.

One day we shook hands and bid each other good-bye for the last time, and I have never seen him since. But may we not hope to meet in that land where there are no farewells, and on that stage where the curtain never falls, and the footlights ne'er go out—where the day dawns and the shadows flee away? IN A NIGHT REFUGE recently three trained nurses were found at one time. They had all come to dire poverty through drink. Nor is it surprising to find on inquiry that from this respectable and important class, peculiarly exposed to this temptation, many individuals should become its victims. In hospitals and in private homes the exhaustive work to which they are subject renders them specially open to the temptation to resort to stimulants.

THE PRESIDENT of the W.T.A.U. writes:—"Our executive is taking active steps in connection with the Pledge-signing campaign, which was suggested by the National Temperance League. This will fully engage the time and strength of all willing workers, during the early weeks of 1895. It is to be hoped that the result will be, not only a large increase in the number of pledged personal abstainers, but that many who have hitherto been indifferent will be aroused to the importance of Temperance legislation."

MR. RABINOWICH'S WORK.

THE London Council for aiding Mr. Joseph Rabinowich's Mission to Israel has issued a very readable report of the work during 1894. A translation is given of a striking paper in which Mr. Lerner, a journalist at Odessa, describes a visit to Kischeneff. The chief interest, however, for most friends of Israel will centre in Mr. Rabinowich's own statement, from which we make the following extracts:—

"The year was an especially significant one. The Lord enabled me to find good soil in Jewish families, wherein to sow the precious seed. There were always in my way circumstances preventing me from preaching Christ in some private Jewish houses. A few months ago I and my son John visited some very poor Jewish families, the men of which are regular attendants of our meetings. It is difficult even to describe the joy and surprise of those poor Jews when they saw us, and how cordially we were treated by them.

"Very soon the news spread that 'Rabinowich, with his son, was visiting the poor Jews,' and in a short time we found ourselves surrounded by old and young, who left their work wishing to hear something from me. It was quite a sight to watch the faces of the Jews, eagerly listening to the old, old story of the love of God revealed in his Son. Every now and then such words were heard as 'Yes, it is quite so, it is quite true.' Distributing some Gospels and tracts which they took willingly, also giving some material help to a few very poor and sickly-looking Jews, we departed to another district inhabited by a still poorer class.

"I am glad to say that the Lord has not delayed in showing me results and good fruit of my visits, and the precious seed sown. One of the families visited, consisting of a man and his wife and four children, have given themselves wholly to Christ, and expressed a desire to be baptized. Those who see this little man marvel how the power of the holy spirit of the Gospel, in whatever language it may be, has touched his heart and mind. He does not know any other language than the Jargon. In this he studied the Bible; but what a burning love and zeal he and his wife have to Jesus and his teachings! Their poor lodging, for more than six months, became a place where many Jews gathered together to read the Bible and study the prophets. In spite of persecutions and trials, he continues to stir up the Jews by his true witness to the Messiah of Israel. For the safety of himself and family, I counted it necessary to help him to find lodgings in a Christian neighbourhood. May the Lord increase the number of such believers.

"During the year, we received very comforting and encouraging news from Jews who have come to the Lord Jesus through my sermons; they tell me that they work among Jews in various places of Russia, trying to bring them also to Christ. I am requested by many Jewish Christians to send New Testaments and sermons for distribution among their fellow-believers, which I do most willingly every now and then. I count for the Lord's name's sake and his Gospel during these ten years, but nothing in comparison with that spiritual pleasure I enjoy in the encouraging news reaching me from Jewish Christians from far and near.

"During the summer holidays, my two sons made a most interesting tour to Cherson, Kieff, Kremenchuk (Little Russia), with the intention of bringing the message of Christ to the Jew and Gentiles, as well as trying by every good opportunity to distribute my sermons and tracts in the Russian and Jargon languages on steamers and in railway carriages. By the way, they visited some of our Christian Russian friends. One of the gentlemen was a Mr. Scherbinin, a great friend of Dr. Baedeker. At Kremenchuk, my son John was asked by Mr. Scherbinin to call on the inspector of the Jewish school there (Talmud Torah), which he did gladly. At the house of the inspector, my son had a most interesting talk with him, convincing the inspector and his wife to believe in the Lord Jesus as their Messiah. I am glad to say, the tour both my sons made in the summer was much blessed, and they themselves were made a blessing to many.

"During the year the Lord has enabled me to hold 68 public meetings, and we had more than 2,700 attendants; besides, I am preaching almost daily at my house to Jews purposely coming from various parts of Russia. These are orthodox Jews, wishing to acquaint themselves with the truth in the Gospel and find out how much it corresponds with the teachings of Moses and the prophets. This is the most difficult part of my labour among the Jews."

The secretary of the London Council in aid of this interesting work is Mr. J. E Mathieson, 47, Phillimore-gardens, W., and the treasurer Mr. C. E. Greenwood, Elim, Coper's Cope-road, Beckenham.

THE Y.M.C.A. IN INDIA.

IN a letter to Mr. Oatts, of Glasgow, Mr. David McConaughy writes from Madras:—

"Since my return, I have had my hands more than full. Our work appears to have entered upon a new phase—one of organised opposition. Ever since the last week of prayer for young men, when a number of Hindu associate members openly asked for prayer, and subsequently several were baptized, many of our associate members have shown less disposition to attend our meeting; some have given expression to unfriendliness. But just before my return from England in August, one of our associate members, Mr. S. Ramanujam, M.A., B.L., a pleader in the High Court of Madras, was baptized. He belonged to a community which has the reputation of being more orthodox than the Brahmin, the Comatees, no one of whom has ever before become a Christian, it is said. You would hardly believe what a sensation this step of Mr. Ramanujam caused throughout India. And here at once a move was made to counteract the influence of our Association, by forming a Young Men's Hindu Association, on lines as similar as possible to our own, but, of course, lacking the very heart of the matter. One of the native rajahs has contributed 5000 rupees toward a building for the new Association. Our membership has thus been somewhat diminished, but the reaction will not be long in setting in.

"It is a time for us to push ahead more aggressively than ever, quietly ignoring the opposition, making our privileges more valuable than ever, and our work more real and effective. This we are seeking in every possible way to do. The arrival of Mr. Davis will bring us timely reinforcement.

"We have just celebrated the third anniversary of our Vepery branch, which continues to make satisfactory progress, although receiving but little assistance, apart from the volunteer work of the members in that section. If there were nothing to show for the work of the past four years and more other than the transformation of one home in which I was yesterday, I should feel that our investment had paid an hundred-fold. Two yeare ago this month, Vyramuthu, a young man in that home, became a Christian. Since then six other young people—his brother and his wife, his two sisters, and both their husbands—have followed his example in following Christ. All of the seven have been publicly baptized within these two years and are shining for Jesus. On Sunday evening after church they carry on open-air preaching in a village near where not long ago they themselves were living as heathen, while I assist them with my magic lantern. Vyramuthu himself, now the assistant secretary of our Vepery branch, is growing in grace and in knowledge of Christ. He had been down in Ceylon last month for a well-earned holiday, after my return. The steamer by which he was to return to the mainland touched at Jaffna earlier than advertised, and so he missed it. As there was no other for another fortnight he made up his mind to cross, with his wife and baby, in a small boat. Although his father-in-law objected, he carried his point, and actually spent a whole day on the open sea in a little boat, crossing from Kangasanturai to Point Calimere. Then another day was spent in like manner in going from there up the coast to Negapatam, whence he proceeded to Madras by rail. I mention this as showing the sort of stuff that some of our Association men are made of in India.

"Our negotiations for the building site are being pushed on as rapidly as is possible, now that we are in a position to purchase, and before this letter reaches you I hope we will have the ground secured. If only we can proceed at once to build, it will immensely strengthen our hands at this critical juncture. It will take £5000 to carry out our plans to completion, but we propose to erect the first section of the building as soon as half that amount can be obtained. Since our English friends have given the ground, we are looking to America for the funds to build."

THE CHILDREN'S HOME.

THE annual Christmas festival in connection with the Children's Home and Orphanage, Bonner-road, N.E., was held last week at Exeter Hall, Strand, under the presidency of Mr. Fletcher Moulton, M.P. The platform was given up to the inmates of the Home, of whom there were about 800 present, while the body of the hall, as well as the spacious gallery, were filled with friends and supporters of this institution. The mission of the Children's Home, which was founded a quarter of a century ago by the Rev. Dr. T. B. Stephenson, is to rescue children who, through the death, or vice, or extreme poverty of their parents, are in danger of falling into criminal ways. It receives children of any age, of any sect, without election. It is conducted on the family system, is a religious and industrial institution, is a training school for Christian workers, and is dependent on voluntary subscriptions. Within the last twenty-five years over 3400 children have received the benefits of the institution. About 900 are now in residence, while about 600, in situations in this country or abroad, are under careful supervision. Over 2500 children have now passed through the Home. In connection with this work the Gordon Hall Mission is carried on in the East-End of London; an agency for the protection of girls is at work, a refuge being available night and day, a servants' free registry is open, and lodgings are provided for respectable young women during the intervals between situations; also a mission to the poorest children of East London is very successfully carried on. The entire work is greatly in need of more liberal support.

The programme opened with a selection of music by the military band of the Gravesend branch Home, after which the Christmas carol, "O lovely voices of the sky," was sung by a choir of 300 children. At intervals performances were given by "young hand-bell ringers from Gravesend." Altogether the musical programme was well selected, and the rendering of the various pieces, vocal and instrumental, was heartily applauded by the crowded audience. The Chairman, in the course of an address, expressed the view that it was good for us to see side by side with the civilisation of which we boasted so much what existed in the way of misery, crime, wretchedness, and degradation. A great philosopher had said, "I think a man can do good by charity if he thinks enough about it, but it is very difficult." Happily, there was no occasion for them so think whether they would really be doing good in giving to this charity. There was nothing experimental about it. No new system was being tried on the children, only the system of a loving home. For twenty-five years that system had been in operation, with the very best results. As to the happiness of the children, they had only to look at the hundreds of bright and healthy faces on the platform, and to realise the good that was being done they must contrast those happy faces with the miserable and pinched faces of the half-starved ragged and dirty children of the slums of London. He was very grieved to hear that for the first time in its existence the Home was in grave difficulties. The income for this year had not come up to the expectations of Dr. Stephenson, and unless their friends made a special effort it was probable that one of the houses would have to be closed.

Dr. Stephenson, the founder and principal of the Home, emphasised the latter remarks of Mr. Moulton as to the great need for funds. Rev. S. Gregory also delivered an address on the work of the Home.

MR. DAVID LEWIS, J.P., of Edinburgh, has in the press a book on the Gothenburg system. He regards the system as the "greatest hallucination of modern times."

FALMOUTH.—A wonderful work of grace has been going on for the past two weeks at the Falmouth Bethel of the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. Both British and foreign sailors have testified to the saving power of God at the services. Night after night souls have been led to Jesus. As a counter-attraction to the public houses the missionary and workers arranged teas for Christmas and the two following days. A large number signed the pledge, and several received blessing.

LONELY WILLIE.

In London, some years ago, the late Sir Robert Carden was sitting on the magistrate's bench, quietly listening to tales of sorrow and wrong which needed to be set right, when a kind-hearted constable brought in a poor woe-begone little fellow, who, to all appearances, looked more dead than alive. To the magistrate's question, who he was, the police man replied, "Sir, I found him in the middle of the night in the City, curled up on a door-step. He was not asleep, but lay coughing and spitting up blood. He was too weak to walk, so I carried him to our office, warmed him, and gave him a cup of tea." For this kind act the magistrate commended the policeman, but aside he said, "The lad is dying." Then, calling the sergeant, he gave orders that the boy should be taken to a lady called Miss Macpherson at the Home of Industry, and she would be a mother to him, for both his father and mother were dead.

The mother had died first; then the sick father was without food, and the little boy was sent out to beg. He had a sweet smile, and when he passed kind ladies, they could not resist giving "the pale-faced wee chap" a penny. It was the month of February; he had stayed out too long one day, darkness came on, so Willie lost his way. Soon he became tired and sleepy, so crept into St. James's Park, and there, under a bush, lay wearily down and fell fast asleep. When he awoke the ground was covered with snow. That night Willie caught a heavy cold, and the result was the bad cough which brought blood from his lungs.

The kind constable had tears in his eyes when, in bringing him to us, he told this sad tale. That very night he wandered away, Willie's father had died: so now he was an orphan and friendless. The workhouse officials had buried his father, and the landlord had shut up the almost empty room where he had lived. Willie was between ten and eleven years old, but as he stood there before us, he could neither speak nor smile: he could only look at us with his sunken blue eyes, which seemed eloquently to plead for him to be taken and lovingly cared for. Need we say that he was at once received, and very soon a warm bath and a comfortable bed soothed and rested the little wanderer.

After a fortnight's nursing his memory returned, when his story was proved to be only too true. His father had been a printer by trade, but fever visited his home, and his youngest boy died. Then the mother was soon after taken ill, and she passed away, too. Then the father sickened, and he breathed his last quite alone, while Willie had gone out that day to beg a few pence to procure the necessary food, and he was the only survivor of the family.

During the first two weeks Willie's life seemed to be ebbing away, and the doctor feared he might succumb during one of the terrible fits of coughing. It was during one of these attacks that about fifty little fellows in our Home saw little Willie lying in our arms quite exhausted. They all crept off to another corner of the hall, and were quite hushed. When he had recovered a little a boy came forward as spokesman for the others, saying, "We don't want Willie to die, and we have asked the Lord Jesus to let him live. We have gathered all our pennies and halfpennies and farthings; here they are for you to buy medicine to make him well." "Bless you, dear laddies," our heart quickly responded. "We are sure your prayers will be answered." Willie's blue eyes opened as he lay on our knee; he heard it all, and smiled, then turned to them and looked his thanks.

This lonely and apparently dying orphan had won every heart in the Home of Industry. His features were small and delicate-looking; his smile was sweet, and expressive of grateful love; he had a wide forehead, and having lost the hair at the front of his head, through a saucepan of scalding water having fallen over him, he looked weird and old for his years. Even the roughest lads were touched by Willie's suffering, and they all sought to step softly and speak with subdued voice, that they might not excite or disturb him.

Willie did recover in answer to the prayers of his companion waifs, and was ere long able to go to the Home of Industry Training Home in the country. There the loving Father blessed the care taken of him, and when the bright summer-time came, he lost his cough, and grew plump and rosy. The next spring he was able to go off with a party of children to the Distributing Home across the ocean in Canada, where he grew fond of his lessons, and able to read and write. Here he learned many a sweet little hymn and text of Scripture. His favourite verse was, "He loved me, and gave Himself for me." These were the words that cheered and comforted him, when he first heard the message of Jesus' love for him. The poor lonely laddie could never forget the love that had been shown to him by the sergeant who found him on the night of his dire trouble, by the judge on the bench, and by all the kind friends at the Home.

Still, there was more love waiting for the little orphan. One day a kindly old Scotchman and his wife called at the Distributing Home and asked the kind ladies to let them see the little men they had in training. All were eager to be seen, and very anxious to be chosen so that they might become brave young farmers. Visions of being able to drive a pair of horses to market were often before their eyes. Many were the plans discussed amongst the youngsters about the time "when I get a farm all of my very own."

Our once delicate orphan Willie was chosen by the kindly Scotch farmer, who took him not only to his home, but to his heart. He gave him a good education, and had him trained to understand farming; later on he apprenticed him to the trade of cabinet-making. He had no children to whom to leave his house and land, so by-and-bye, having proved Willie to be conscientious and reliable, he made his will in his favour and considered him as his own son.

Meanwhile Willie married a Christian young lady in Canada, and they live in a neighbouring town to the old homestead. The aged farmer often enjoys a visit from them; he takes great delight in Willie's children, and teaches them to call him Grandpa.

As a young man Willie showed much interest in music, which taste was ever encouraged by the old Scotchman. Many pleasant incidents are told by our visitors, who went continually to visit him from the Distributing Home. He would take them to his own room, and show them his shelf of books, his violin and flute, etc. The grace of God enabled him to keep the love of music in its place.

This is one case of the six thousand who have now become worthy citizens of the Canadian Dominion. It may be, kind reader, that your thank-offering might flow out in the desire to save such an one, bereft by death of all his kindred; £10 gives this start in life. We have known a West-end boy, whose father had given him a good education, but was suddenly stricken down by sore sickness, and passed away, leaving no provision for his wife and son. The home was sold to pay doctors' bills and the burial. The mother took a situation, and the lad was sent adrift to look for work. Day after day he wandered through the streets, till a kind Providence led him to us, and now in Canada he has passed his university course, and is ordained as an Episcopal minister, and much beloved.

He and more than a thousand others are married and settled, some with large families of their own. Many own their own house and land; others are engaged as tradesmen or in professions; a few have been called as missionaries to the heathen.

"THE TEMPLAR" proposed that a million Canadians should sign the following pledge on New Year's morning:—"I promise to abstain from the use of all spirituous and fermented liquors as a beverage."

REV. F. B. MEYER has seen a great temperance, or rather total abstinence, movement at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road. In one week alone he took 105 pledges, and it was his great desire that this number should be increased to 500 by the end of the year.

THE YOUNG ABSTAINERS' UNION will hold its annual meeting on Saturday afternoon, Jan. 12, in the smaller Queen's Hall, Langham-place, Regent-street. Addresses will be given by Canon Barker and Rev. Norman Bennet. The Sydenham and Woolwich Y.A.U. Glee Unions will sing. The chair to be taken at 3 p.m. by the president, Mr. T. F. Victor Buxton.

A UNIQUE POSITION.—At a recent meeting at Alva, Rev. J. Horne, Glasgow, said, "I believe I hold a unique position as a minister—that is to say, all the members of my church are abstainers, and must be. We have not a single man or woman who is not teetotal. I lay down my own rules and principles, and folks who come have either to succumb or leave, and for every one I lose I gain six."

A GREAT "ROBIN" TREAT.

"Robin" dinners for poor children whose lives are dull and dreary, and who know little of the brightness and joy of Christmastide, were commenced some seventeen years ago by Rev. Charles Bullock. The idea took hold, the work grew, and the co-operation of clergymen, ministers, ragged school and mission workers was enlisted. Thus the movement spread, assumed large dimensions, and the Robin Dinner Fund was formed. In the first winter, 300 guests were entertained, but last season there were no less than 24,000—not repeated treats, but separate guests, for the greatest care is taken to prevent the same children appearing again and again.

On Thursday last the first Robin dinner of the present season was given. Last year the great event came off in the People's Palace, Mile End, the guests being East-enders. This year the locale has been changed, for there are pitiful poor within sound of Big Ben as well as further east. With the cordial consent of the vicar of St. Martin's-in-the-Fields, St. Martin's Town Hall was secured for the inaugural gathering. Eight hundred youthful guests had been invited, and an hour before the time appointed they blocked the footway around the doors. Over a hundred of these (as Mr. Kitto told us in the course of conversation) came from narrow streets and byways within shadow of the hall—i.e., round about the National Gallery and St. Martin's Church. The children came from Board schools, Church schools, and Ragged schools in six parishes, St. Giles's, Soho, and Westminster sending contingents of hungry little ones. The master of ceremonies (if I may use the phrase) was Mr. John Kirk, of the Ragged School Union, whose tact and experience, backed as he was by a host of ready helpers, secured good order and comparative quiet.

The long tables were crowded with hungry but hopeful young guests, whose clamour at first seemed deafening. When, however, grace had been said—preluded by a few simple words by the vicar—all settled down to serious work on the roast beef and other viands, and for a time the clatter of knives and forks, in the hands of the inexpert, filled the room. The advent of the plum-puddings was hailed with great enthusiasm, while oranges and apples gave welcome refreshment. During the meal, and at intervals throughout the evening, the boys' band of the National Refuges played in stirring style.

Even the most ravenous boy cannot eat continuously, and so at length the hungriest mite seemed satisfied, and the dinner was over. Then the tables were cleared, and bright earnest words were spoken by Revs. J. F. Kitto and J. H. Scott, of Spitalfields. Sweet singing followed by Madame Alice Gomez, Miss A. Norledge, and Master Sterndale Bennett, with violin solos by Master P. Lewes, and a shadowgraph and conjuring entertainment by Prof. Bertrand and others. With these simple pleasures the children seemed immensely delighted, and evidently enjoyed, as few of them had done so fully before, a thoroughly happy evening.

A devoted worker writes with regard to such Robin dinners: "Our poor children have not much to brighten their lives . . and anything that comes to them like a ray of sunshine has a beneficial effect." With this all who know the lives of these little ones at home will cordially agree. To such the Robin Dinner is a fund of delight. These treats the Robin Dinner Fund Committee hope to give in many parts of London as well as over the land—but funds are needed. We think it right, however, to note that this Robin Dinner Fund should not be confounded with another society, which unfortunately has taken a somewhat similar title. The secretary of the Robin Dinner Fund is Mr. C. Ashton Bullock, Home Words Office, 7, Paternoster-square, E.C. Pearl Fisher.

BAPTISTS AND TEMPERANCE.—It is stated that that ninety-two per cent. of all the Baptist ministers in Scotland are abstainers, that eighty per cent. of the churches use pure fruit of the vine at the communion, and that all the students are on the side of total abstinence.

SOME PARENTS do not show to their children how much they are loved. After infancy passes, they quietly drop out of their intercourse with their children all tenderness, all caresses, and marks of fondness. The love is unquestioned, but like the vase of ointment unbroken, it gives out no perfume. But would it not be better for parent and child to break it?—Selected.

EVANGELISTS IN AMERICA.

DEAR SIR,—Amongst your readers I know there are a great many Aarons and Hurs, who seek to remember labourers on this side the Atlantic, and I thought they would be cheered by knowing something of what God is doing in this land.

Mr. Moody has been preaching in Birmingham, Ala., to immense audiences, and is now holding crowded meetings with blessing at Lowell, Mass. Major Whittle has been preaching for some time in New York City, and Mr. George Needham has been addressing large audiences in some of the cities of the Eastern States on prophetical subjects. Mr. Leonard Weaver, once so greatly blessed in Bible Carriage work in England, has been having times of great blessing in some of the smaller towns of Pennsylvania. Mr. Merton Smith is preaching in some of these Western towns, and is now holding meetings in Quincy, Ill. Major Cole, known to many of the readers of THE CHRISTIAN ten years ago, is being wonderfully owned of God in Wichita, near the Indian Territory. It is said that hundreds are turning to God, and many are joining the churches.

In some of the prisons where I have preached, I have seen numbers of criminals broken down, and many in after-meetings have asked to be prayed for. Since I left St. Louis I have been preaching at Sedalia, away in the far West, and it has been my privilege to address sixteen audiences a week. Many, as far as we can tell, have been brought to a saving knowledge of the truth.

I reached the Moody Institute, Chicago, last Saturday, and had three meetings in Mr. Moody's Church on Sunday. In the evening we were busy dealing with the anxious in the inquiry rooms. Twice each day it is my privilege to address the students, and at night to preach in various places in the city. I am looking forward to sail on the Lucania from New York, on Dec. 29, and to reach London early in January.

Yours heartily,

Chicago, Dec. 18. CHARLES INGLIS.

CATHARINE OF SIENA.*

SOUL-WINNER AND PEACEMAKER might have been the title of this inimitable story of a life lived in God, in close imitation of the Lord Jesus when on earth. Times of disorder and violence and moral depravity have often been marked by the brightest manifestations of God's grace and power in souls utterly yielded to Him. The turbulent period of the fourteenth century produced in Catharine of Siena a proof that God's strength is perfected in weakness. She was the daughter of a dyer, and her father and mother were a devout and spiritually wise couple, to whom their daughter (one of twenty-five children) owed much, but to the direct guidance of God she owed far more. Brought up in the Church of Rome, her mind was coloured by its teachings. But her heart was true to God, and the influence of this frail and delicate woman, whose health must have severely suffered from the austerities she practised, was mighty in her earlier days with individual souls, and later with pontiffs, and governments, and peoples.

The following is the last prayer which she recorded in writing, dated Rome, Feb., 1380:—"Eternal God and Master, who didst form the vessel of the body out of the dust of the earth, who didst create the body so humble a thing and then fill it with so great a treasure, the soul, made in thine own image, O Eternal. Thou, Lord, art the great Master who canst create and re-create, who canst break and bring to naught this fragile vase as Thou wilt. O Father, I offer again to Thee myself, my life for thy Church. I commend to Thee thy Church.

"Eternal God, I commend to Thee also my beloved children, and if it be thy merciful will to take me away from earth, I pray Thee leave them not orphaned and comfortless, but visit them by thy grace, and make them to live in the perfect light. Unite them to each other in the bonds of love. I beseech Thee, Lord, that none may be lost; that I may not be robbed of any one of them.

"Forgive my sins, my ignorance, and my negligence towards them, inasmuch as I have not done all that I could and ought to have done for them. I have sinned, Saviour; have pity on me. I offer to Thee and cast upon Thee my loved ones, for they are my own soul. If it be thy will, for their sakes, to let me remain in the body, Physician Supreme, then heal this body; repair it; for it is all broken to pieces. Grant us, Eternal Father, O grant us thy heavenly benediction. Amen."

It has been said that this book has cast a false lustre on Popery; but in justice to Mrs. Butler we must say that, without writing in any controversial tone, she has represented Catharine not as the product of Rome, but as a spiritual element in a worldly system.

A TELUGU TOUR.

A SHORT account of a month's tour among the Telugus may be of interest. Mrs. Scott, her Bible-woman, myself, and three preachers started out about the end of August, and toured to the northern part of our field. It being the rainy season, we could not take our tents with us, so we put up in bungalows built for the convenience of travellers.

Our first stopping place was Jadacherla, where we remained for six days. People of all classes flocked to hear us in the villages around, and hundreds came to the bungalow to hear Mrs. Scott play on her baby organ. After the singing and playing was over, they would sit from two to three hours listening with rapt attention to the old old story. Since I came to this field I have not seen so much interest manifested, though only eleven miles from Palmoor. It was a joy to us to hear them confessing the truth, and saying they would worship idols no more.

Balanuggar was our next place. We remained here five days preaching the Gospel. The first day the people seemed quite indifferent, and did not wish to hear; but a number, after hearing us, brought others with them, so the following day we had quite a large crowd. After preaching nearly two hours there was not a voice heard in opposition to the truth, but all confessed the folly of worshipping idols. As we were leaving they asked us to return the next day, and bring our organ with us into the village, which we did, and gathered a very large and interesting audience. Mrs. Scott played and sang songs of Zion in English and Telugu. Then one of our preachers spoke for a long time with power, and, we believe, blessing to many.

Our next stopping place was Janumpet, and for five days the people were quite interested in hearing the story of redeeming love. When there was no more room in the bungalow for the people, they pressed in at the doors and windows, until we had to take our organ outside, and play and sing to them. After the playing and singing they would all sit down and listen for a long time to the words of life. For two days they kept coming all day, so we could not go out to the villages. Some at this place were desirous of baptism. The next two places we visited were Palmockla and Shumshabad. At these places the same interest was manifested, more so in the latter.

On this tour we visited over fifty villages, and hundreds of tracts and books were sold. One would think to see such earnestness that the day is not far distant when the Gospel of Christ will have full sway. But where are the messengers to tell them? Fields are lying waste, and there is no one to gather in the harvest! Those who have heard the message once need to hear it again and again, until the light enters their dark souls.

Mrs. Scott, I grieve to say, has gone home to her rest and reward. She died in her confinement on the evening of November 16. Dr. Timpany, of Secunderabad, was in attendance, and did all that he could with remarkable skill. Both mother and son have gone to the land where pain and sorrow are unknown.

Her warfare is over, the victory's won,
Her weapons are now laid by,
She has gone to receive an immortal crown
From her Saviour, who dwells on high.

THE LEWIS DISASTER.

For over it the wind doth pass,
And it away is gone.

DEAR SIR,—Never till to-day did I realise the truth of the above lines as I heard them sung, not in English, but in the still more melodious Gaelic version. The occasion was the funeral of one of nineteen brave fellows all lost together at sea on the morning of Saturday last. Of the many sad tales of loss thronging on us at this Christmas, our tale from Lewis here seems saddest of all. Early on Saturday morning fourteen boats, tempted by an apparent lull, put out to the haddock fishing from the north side of Broad Bay. The bay is not more than five miles across and is landlocked save to the east. Suddenly, almost ere the last boat had cleared the shore, a tremendous hurricane broke upon the fleet, accompanied by the intensest darkness. Everything went down before the fury of the blast, sails, masts, oars, everything, and the boats were driven helpless on a lee-shore. Eleven boats reached shore in safety at various points, but three went down with all hands, nineteen souls in all. Only three bodies have as yet been recovered. Nothing has happened in Lewis like it since 1862, when thirty-three men were drowned at Ness.

There are circumstances about this calamity that render it even more heartrending. All the men lost, except one, were from the village of Back, and from houses along the same line of street. Fourteen families have been directly affected, and more if you include those indirectly so. In all there have been left eight widows, some of them with very young children and in very destitute circumstances. Perhaps the saddest case of all is that of the loss of three brothers, making a clean sweep of the males of two homes and leaving utterly without help a widow and three young children, a mother and weak-minded daughter, a grandchild, and we may add a widowed sister and her three young children, whom the three brothers practically supported. A father and son have been lost from each of four families, leaving these in some cases with no breadwinner. Two only sons, the support of their aged parents, are among the lost, and all the others were young men the mainstay of their families.

They fell victims to their industry and hardiness. The weather had been broken for some time, and, eager to embrace every opportunity of gaining support for themselves and theirs, they had been watching for the first lull in order to put to sea. Their minister tells me that a finer set of young men could not be found. They were exemplary in every way, the support of their parents and of their church. An elder and a deacon were among the number.

But enough. The brave fellows sleep their last sleep—sixteen of them as yet beneath the broad bay waves, three of them within the sound of them, beneath the sod where to-day we laid them. Our duty is to the living. Will your readers help? To-the day, Provost Smith, of Stornaway, and I visited all families save two. A local relief committee has been formed, and there will likely be a town one formed. Meantime, subscriptions towards a relief fund will be received by Rev. H. Cameron, F.C. Manse (Back), Provost Smith (Stornoway), or myself.—Yours truly, DONALD J. MARTIN.

SOUTHERN MOROCCO.

DETAILS have reached Gibraltar of a sad accident, followed by outrage, in Morocco. In the last week of October some missionaries attached to the Southern Morocco Mission arrived from Scotland to fill positions at Morocco City and its environs. The party consisted of Miss MacArthur, her sister, and two other ladies, and Messrs. Patterson and Nairn. They arrived at Magazan, where they stayed six weeks, and then set out for Morocco City, accompanied on the road by a Mr. Wilson, a merchant of Magazan. Mr. Nairn and Miss MacArthur were attempting to ford the river Azimoor, near Morocco City, when their horses became restive. Miss MacArthur was thrown into the river, and disappeared; while her companion was carried away by the current for some distance. The lady was picked up by some Moors in sight of her friends, and carried off to a spot some way from the river, where they hid her, demanding 40 dollars before they would give her up. Mr. Wilson advanced the money, but before she was restored to her friends she died. Had Miss MacArthur been restored at once her life would undoubtedly have been saved.

New Year Poems.

Year after year, wave upon wave,
Of Time's vast changeful sea,
Still bears us on towards the shores
Of God's eternity.

O mariner, sinking midst the storm
Of guilt and sin's despair,
Cling to the everlasting arms,
Thy God is everywhere.

He knows the dangers of the deep,
For He has crossed before,
And now He yearns to pilot thee
In peace and safety o'er.

Rejoice, though winds and billows rise,
All frothed with trouble's foam;
On these thy heavenly Father rides,
And guides thee to his home.

Onward we sail, midst breakers' roar,
Towards the flowery land,
And loved ones who have gone before
Are beckoning from the strand.

Bright sunbeams sparkle here and there
Reflections from above,
And o'er these waters angels glide,
To aid us by their love.

For though perchance the shades of care,
Or mists of grief may rise,
God's glory shines with dazzling light,
In heaven's ethereal skies.

Then homeward bound we gladly sail
Across the ocean's surging breast,
From longing to reality,
From faith, to sight, to rest.

For will not He who guides the birds
The restless waters o'er,
Bear clinging souls who trust his love
To his effulgent shore?

Then welcome, whatsoe'er betide,
These storms will soon be past,
The Love that launched us on the main
Will land us Home at last.

Harriet Julia Evans.

"The time is short,"
Too short for useless grieving;
The days are fleeting fast;
Do thou God's will, to-day, for ever, leaving
Humbly to Him the past.

"The time is short,"
Too short for vain regretting
To shadow heart and mind;
Go forward, in the strength of Christ, "forgetting
The things which are behind."

"The time is short,"
Too short, tow'rd any living
To cherish enmity;
Lay it aside for his dear sake, forgiving,
As He forgiveth thee.

"The time is short,"
Too short, in fevered fretting
To spend thy strength for nought;
See thou fulfil the tasks of God's own setting,
For nothing else take thought.

"The time is short,"
Too short to bind about thee
Fettering hopes and fears;
Cannot God plan thy little life without thee?
He ordereth the spheres!

"The time is short,"
Too short, in lingering wonder
To strive to turn and spell
Life's future pages; thou shalt own, up yonder,
"He doeth all things well."

"The time is short,"
Too short to tarry weeping
E'en by the graveside. Take
Dear memories with thee, flower-like, whiter keeping
Thy garments for their sake.

"The time is short,"
Too short for listless dreaming
O'er vanished fancies fair;
Around thee hearts are breaking, tears are streaming,
Thou'rt needed everywhere.

The year is dead. As echo to his moaning
The winds are wailing with the midnight bell.
Passed like a soul, to come no more for ever,
Old year, farewell.

The same old thoughts—again we think them over,
Grieving for many a worse than wasted day,
And bowed in penitence and holy purpose,
We humbly pray.

Lord, cast our sins in mercy's boundless ocean,
That, like the past, they may not rise again!
Renew our souls to meet the spotless future
Without a stain.

Without a stain, like snow on New Year's morning,
After a storm when burnished skies are given,
The snowy world a sea of sparkling crystals
Reflecting heaven.

In sunshine and shadow,
In summer and spring,
In autumn and winter,
Shall Jesus your King
Bless and preserve you,
Graciously serve you, [throne,
Until the One that sitteth on the rainbow-circled
Like a jasper,* clear as crystal, and a blood-red sardine stone,†
The Everlasting Father, the All-Mighty, the I AM,
Shall bid you to his joy—the Marriage Supper of the Lamb.

MR. FEGAN'S BOYS.

I venture again to forward you some information as to the progress of Mr. Fegan's work in Canada, in which I have the privilege, as one of his Canadian committee, to take a humble part. Mr. A. H. Brace, the active superintendent of Mr. Fegan's boys in Canada, has recently submitted the following report after his annual tour of inspection throughout the country:—

"We are now fairly into the winter, and our visiting for the year is over. We have taken in the entire country—north as far as Muskoka, south to Lake Erie, west as far as the counties of Wellington and Bruce, and east as far as Prince Edward County. Nothing could be more satisfactory than the general conditions under which we found our boys placed almost everywhere we visited. Almost without exception we found them located in prosperous, happy homes, where every facility was afforded them for regularly attending church and Sunday-school, and during the winter months the day-schools in their neighbourhood.

"W. P., eighteen years of age, and an honour roll boy (one who has returned the fifty dollars spent on his outfit and ocean fare), has a nice sum now standing to his credit in our hands. During the past year two of our older boys have bought a hundred acre farm each—one in Muskoka and the other thirty miles from Toronto. Both purpose sending for their widowed mothers to share their property, and end their days in comfort.

"We have had several opportunities of conducting Sunday services, and preaching the Gospel in country churches, where numbers of the boys attend, with most encouraging results, successfully dealing with some who have grown careless about spiritual affairs. Numbers have joined the church, and others have professed faith in Christ.

"It is refreshing to note the large number of these lads, who, realising the poverty and distress of their old home and the struggles of widowed mothers to keep the wolf from the door, are now manifesting an anxiety to help those they have left behind. One fine young fellow, out about four years, has cheered us very much by his steady, plodding perseverance. An 'honour roll' boy, he has lately shown the greatest distress upon learning that his two little sisters were unprovided for, and has requested that we procure him a ticket for England, in order that he might go and look after them, leaving fifty dollars in our hands to pay their passage out here should he find them."

Those of the Lord's stewards at home, who help to place these lads in a position to help themselves, and to relieve the distress of their poor friends at home, are doing the Lord's work indeed, for which they shall receive his "Well done."—Yours in the Master's service,

H. P. Dwight,
Toronto. President G.N.W. Tel. Co.

CHRISTMASTIDE FESTIVITIES.

As usual, the Christmas season was a very busy time with the great host of Christian workers throughout London who conduct missions in poorer neighbourhoods. In keeping with the joyous character of the great Christian festival there has been a large distribution of "creature comforts," while the wants of the higher nature have not been overlooked.

It is, of course, impossible for us to chronicle in detail these festive gatherings; their number has been legion, and there is always a wonderful family likeness between them each recurring Christmastime. In the East-end such well-known workers as Miss Macpherson, George Holland, Mr. Charrington, and others have had their gatherings for the poor and needy, casting many rays of brightness and loving counsel into the darkened lives of those struggling with perennial poverty. There were the usual gala days for sailors at the Ratcliff Strangers' Rest on Christmas Day and Boxing Day; while at the Welcome Home the unloading of the Christmas Boat was a notable event last Saturday evening. Mr. Buchanan Ryley, of Bow-road, had a large Christmas gathering, and many others ministered in like manner to the pressing wants of those around them. The British and Foreign Sailors' Society at Shadwell had a happy time.

In Central London we may mention the meetings of Field Lane Institution as representative of many others. The poor of South and West London were not forgotten, but we have not space to particularise.

CHRISTIAN COMMERCIALS.

The Commercial Travellers' Christian Association held its annual meeting in Exeter Hall on Thursday, December 27. Delegates were present from all parts of the country. The business gathering took place in the afternoon, Mr. Arnold Pye-Smith presiding. The Secretary (Mr. Leonard Courtney) read the annual report, which stated that during the past year 198 new members had been enrolled. Mr. Whittaker submitted the cash account, which showed a small balance in hand on each of the several funds. The General Secretary had visited all the branches during the year. He had also made a larger number of calls upon commercial travellers at their private houses, and had received very much encouragement in his difficult work. The committee rejoiced that through the instrumentality of the Association, conversions had taken place, and backsliders had been recovered. The devotional meetings in connection with some of the branches, as well as of the parent association, had been better attended.

The evening meeting took place under the presidency of Mr. Thomas Knight. Prebendary Webb-Peploe spoke of the solemnity of the fact that where men were habitually called to travel they were necessarily called to witness, and they must be witnesses either for God or for God's great opponent. One marked characteristic of the present day was intensity, and especially was it seen in the sphere of earthly business. If such were the case with things temporal, was it not infinitely more important that it should be so with things that were eternal?

Rev. Dr. Downes said he liked the association because it guarded the interests of human souls; because of its potent influence among many of those whom it sought to save, and because it ministered to those who were specially imperilled by surrounding vice. It was only when a man got the music of God's love in his heart, and when the protecting power of Christianity filled his soul, that the sirens of the world lost their power to charm.

Rev. John Urquhart confined his remarks principally to the subject of Bible inspiration. The greatest battle of the time was centring around the Bible, and he had no doubt that as travellers went from place to place they often heard the subject alluded to. He had no fear for the Bible, but he had fear for the people to whom the Bible could be everything, and for whom it could be made nothing. Mr. Urquhart counselled his audience to stand firm to the Bible when they heard men questioning and denying it.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIAN MADNESS CONCERNING MONEY.

DEAR SIR,—Mr. Bazett seems to have fallen into the mistake of supposing that money put by for a rainy day (as the phrase is) is hoarded and useless. As a general rule, it is in the hands of bankers or agents, who work it, and live thereby. In bad years, such as last, they cannot safely work it, owing to a general state of mistrust, and much distress is the result.

But when due thrift has been exercised in good years, its exercisers are not only enabled themselves to tide over an evil year, but they are also the means of preventing distress amongst those whom they are not compelled to throw out of employment. As in the case of Joseph of old, whose forethought—divinely directed—saved the improvident Egyptians, such men, in spite of "the conclusion of the modern school of political economists," are, in their generation, the saviours of society.

Mr. Bazett has assumed that "all who can work will work" (the italics are mine); this, however, was not the case even in the purer early days of the Church (see 2 Thess. iii. 6-11); and it certainly is not the case now, when the "Body" of TRUE believers is something almost if not quite invisible.

I have dealt chiefly with the views of political economy propounded in the letter under consideration, for I consider them to be most dangerous in their tendency.—Yours faithfully,

M. ALVES, Lt.-Colonel.

London, S.W.

DEAR SIR,—"An Enquirer's" search after the Divine command to the believer concerning the disposal of worldly possessions and increase had not resulted in a complete mastery of it at the moment of his appeal through your columns, perhaps because, although there is explicit guidance and counsel, as in every time of need, however backward we may be to claim it, there is no arbitrary teaching: the whole tenor of the precious Word of God is as "a lamp unto our feet and a light to our path," while the holder of it is left free to use brotherly help and example (2 Peter i.).

It is perfectly clear that there are and have been wealthy as well as poor Christians throughout the ages, the difference only being "not many rich," because "uncertain riches" are too often a stumbling block even to those who, after conversion, become rich. The believer, without dispute, whether rich or poor, consecrates himself to God, which must include what he has; but he is not therefore deprived of liberty or authority in the matter. Upon his walk depends his happiness in the recognition of his service. If Christ is his Saviour, he becomes, as certainly, his Master, and he is required to be a faithful servant. Perplexities clear away step by step as the new life develops. The poor is not forbidden to rise to affluence any more than the rich is commanded to descend to poverty, but all are to be ruled by the same law of love to God and man, and where that is free in the former it will be as free in the latter. There will then be no room for accumulations—the liberal deviseth liberal things, and by liberal things he shall be established. The very rich is not liberal because he bestows much, any more than the poor is mean because he gives little, although often erroneously so esteemed, and it must be the same in mental or physical gifts. In every case where God's gifts are not fully acknowledged as his, so in proportion does the erring one go short of the fulness of blessing. A miserable man may be much flattered and extolled, by his associates even, but he is miserable, all the same. Our heavenly Father does not honour because men do, nor does the Holy Spirit comfort, causing his face to shine. When the apostle says 2 Cor. ix. 7, et seq., and 1 Tim. v. 8, and vi. 17, 19, as quoted by "An Enquirer," all misapprehension on the question seems to be overtaken and satisfied, when sanctified.

A well-known deceased Christian met this question by "insuring his life" for a sufficient sum to provide for the support of those he would probably leave behind. One of the brothers Haldane sold his possessions and gave all with himself to the Lord. The people of Israel were God's chosen, as Christ's people are now, but they might not deprive their heirs of their inheritance, and they were ordained of God to be a spiritual people. "God is a Spirit, and they that worship Him must worship Him in spirit and in truth."

It is very certain that amongst the "born again" living Christian community now, "My son, give Me thine heart" is too often but feebly responded to, so that selfishness lingers with a sad influence upon the Christian character.

My own personal experience of more affluent bygone days was that the niggard parsimony of the wealthy, who then figured conspicuously as the chief benefactors of Christian life, had a most depressing and injurious effect upon my own liberality, whereby God was pleased, of his mercy, to take away the increase which should have been dedicated more freely to my blessed Saviour's cause, upon which now I can only "praise and extol and honour the King of Heaven, all whose works are truth and his ways judgment, and those that walk in pride He is able to abase." CHARLES ELLIS.

Lyme Regis.

DEAR SIR,—I am glad to see that several of your correspondents are now grappling with this vital question.

"Nemo" correctly points out that the command is not against laying up treasures, but runs, "Lay not up for yourselves treasure..."

I think, however, that he is mistaken in saying that the responsibility of administering capital is one that may not be shifted upon others or upon the community. I believe that every Christian who may become possessed of anything beyond the wage of his daily labour, has the option of following the example of the widow who cast her two mites into the treasury, or of investing it, as in the parable of the talents, if he feels equal to the stewardship and does not feel that it may lead him into the temptation of dipping his own hand into the trust fund or its proceeds.

In the parable of the talents the Master specifically confides to his servants certain talents to administer (in addition, no doubt, to their regular work for which they receive their daily portion or wage); after a time each servant returns the talent intact, and the two who have made profitable investments lay also the entire proceeds at his feet.

Not one of them ventures to treat either the capital or the interest as his own to live upon, or to supplement his earnings as our Christians do, and the reward which the two faithful investors receive is not "barns filled with plenty," as in the Old Testament quotation which "Nemo" introduces, but a higher reward, suited to the spiritual man of the New Covenant: namely, more cities to govern righteously, greater responsibilities and higher service.

"He who would be greatest among you, let him be the servant of all," until, compelled by infirmity, he shall cheerfully exchange the rôle of dispenser for that of recipient of God's gifts to men.

Into what bowers of delight we shall transform our workhouses, with what new interest we shall study old age pension schemes, when we know that all whom we love and honour are heading straight for Christlike destitution! With what new force will these old words then strike us, "Whatsoever ye would that men should do unto you, do it unto them"!—Yours faithfully,

London. JAMES LEAKEY.

THE ALLEGED "BUDDHIST LIFE OF CHRIST."

DEAR SIR,—In your issue of March 15 you refer to the alleged discovery of a "Life of Christ" in the region from which I write. Mr. Nicholas Notovitch, a Russian traveller, now living in Paris, says he has found in the Buddhist monastery, Hemis, near Leh, in Ladak, a book called "The Life of Issa," or Jesus. He says that near the monastery he became ill: the Lamas took him in, and while for some days he was being nursed by the monks, they brought and translated to him the said book. With great interest I read your remarks on this discovery, and started at once to Hemis to find out the truth.

I may say I have often visited the said monastery, and have more than once lived among the Lamas, who all know me very well. On my arrival there I asked the Abbot and some old monks if they had ever nursed a European in the monastery. They answered: "No; every year many Europeans visit our monastery; but should a gentleman become ill, we would, without any question, carry him to Leh, to be nursed there." Then I asked if they had ever shown or translated books to Europeans. Their answer was; "When visitors like to see our books, we willingly show them the library; we are willing also to read one or two lines to them, but never a whole book; and we do not know any other language so well that we could translate or explain correctly one of our books to foreigners." My third question was: "Have you among your books a volume called the Life of Issa, or Jesus?" Answer: "We know the name 'Issa' from the Mohammedans, and the name 'Jesus' from the Christians; we have many books, and some monks among us are obliged to read them all in the course of some years, but till now we have not seen in our collection any book on the Christian religion."

Now, in the summer months, many European travellers visited Leh and Hemis, and all were more or less eager to know the truth about the new "Life of Christ." They all called at Hemis, asked the Abbot there, and got the same answer as I. Besides that, many inquiring letters were received at Leh not only by the missionaries, but also by the Abbot, of the monastery. This man himself, showing me one day a letter from London concerning the matter, asked me to answer in his name, that he did not know anything about Mr. N. Notovitch and his book. I wrote the answer, and when Mr. Notovitch heard what the Abbot was saying, he did not write nicely about "Weber and Co," as he called us. He says the missionaries are envious because, though they have lived in Leh many years, they did not find the book.

To show that this was not the case, I asked the British Joint Commissioner, who had meanwhile arrived here, to take the matter in hand, and to inquire about it, for the sake of truth. He told me he had already asked the Abbot, and afterwards, when he got a written statement, he kindly sent me a translated copy. In this, the Abbot, who has now held charge of the monastery for fifteen years, writes:—"Nor has any person of Russian nationality ever came to the monastery in a lame condition. Nor have we any manuscript or print of any kind referring to the Christian religion."

I think the matter is settled herewith, and I say, Sapienti sat.; but as I hear that an English translation of Mr. Notovitch's book has been prepared, I would ask you to warn the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, by publishing my statement,—Believe me, dear Sir, yours, etc. JUL. WEBER, Moravian Missionary.

OPEN-AIR MISSION FOR IRELAND.

IN connection with this Mission, Messrs. Williams, Knapman, and Coghlan have concluded a series of meetings in the Independent Chapel, Galway, kindly lent for the purpose. From the commencement the presence and power of the Lord in the salvation of souls and the refreshing of his own were abundantly manifested. Numbers not only came to the meetings, but were enabled to testify to much blessing received. During the closing week it was considered advisable to hold special meetings for the Christians, in addition to the evangelistic services. Above all, the workers' hearts were gladdened by seeing at each meeting Roman Catholics of respectability and position; some of these have clearly and avowedly trusted in Christ.

A conference was held in the Assembly Rooms on "Power for open-air work," which was addressed by Rev. Robertson (rector of Newmarket-on-Fergus), Rev. W. Harper (Athlone), Rev. J. Hoff (rector of Kilbride, Wicklow), and Pastor Eland (Athlone). During the following week the mission was continued at the request of the Christians.

Surely the hearts of the Lord's people must be cheered at the quiet and good-humoured hearing given to the Gospel in the Market Square during the last few weeks, as proclaimed by the preachers and a number of local helpers, including several ladies. Earnestly do we ask for the prayers and sympathy of all who are interested in the spread of that only remedy for Ireland's need—the Gospel.—Yours sincerely, FRAS. GREVILLE ELAND, Pastor.

Baptist Church, Athlone.

SIR EDMUND LECHMERE, BART., M.P., who died lately, occupied the novel position of proprietor of the village public-house, which he supplied with home-brewed, unadulterated beer, made from pure hops and malt. In order to encourage the sale of tea, coffee, and non-intoxicants, Sir Edmund allowed his representatives a commission on everything sold except beer, cider, and spirits.—S. Wales Daily News.

THE ANTI-OPIUM MOVEMENT.

Mr. J. G. Alexander, hon. sec. of the Society for the Suppression of the Opium Trade, spent a busy and a successful fortnight just before Christmas in the north of England and Scotland. Besides conferences with the Anti-Opium committees in Newcastle, Edinburgh, Glasgow, and Aberdeen, he held meetings in those places, and at Perth, Broughty Ferry, Laurieston, Crieff, and Warrington.

The story of Mr. Alexander's experiences with the Opium Commission in India, and of his interviews with leading statesmen in China, was listened to with much sympathetic interest; the meetings, of which several were held in drawing-rooms, being often of an extremely influential character. In Edinburgh and Glasgow Mr. Alexander addressed large Sunday afternoon Bible-classes of young men on the claims of the heathen world, as they had come before him in India, Burmah, and China; in both these cities also he was able to speak to the students of the Free Church colleges on the same topic.

At the Crieff meeting, the chair was occupied by a gentleman of local influence, who testified, from nine years' experience as a tea-planter in Assam, to the ruinous effects of both opium-smoking and opium-eating upon the Assamese labourers and the coolies imported into the province from other districts. At Perth, a missionary from Calcutta pointed out that China, with a population little more than that of India, consumes, on a moderate computation, thirty times as much opium every year, a fact which goes far to account for the circumstance that, whilst all missionaries from China unite in testifying to the ravages of opium, many Indian missionaries know but little of them. At the Carrubbers Close Mission, Edinburgh, the Russian Prince Galitzin, who has travelled widely in the Chinese Empire, expressed the conviction that the recent Japanese victories over the Chinese are in no small degree due to the opium-smoking habits of the Chinese soldiers, amongst whom the Prince has spent many months. He said that, whilst the Japanese had undoubtedly been well led and well armed, the Chinese were incapacitated for any effectual resistance by the opium habit. A similar opinion is expressed by Dr. Dudgeon, of Peking, in a letter just received by Mr. Alexander. The Japanese, it will be remembered, stipulated for the exclusion of opium in the treaties by which they first threw open their ports to Western commerce, and have rigorously maintained that exclusion ever since.

ROME IN AMERICA.

Since the appointment of Monsignor Satolli by Leo XIII., to serve as Vice-Pope in the United States of America, the Roman Catholic bishops and clergy have been deprived of some of their native American liberty and independence. A few weeks ago, when the Roman Catholic Bishop of Nebraska was condemned in an American court of justice, and obliged to pay the costs, the editor of the ultramontane Watchman was a little too exuberant in his criticisms. He unwisely contrasted the law courts of effete monarchical Europe with those of the republican United States, and expressed his satisfaction that in the United States the law made no difference between citizen and citizen, and that justice was not warped in order to let a bishop escape. The good man soon discovered that Vice-Pope Satolli, who is the spiritual superior of every Roman Catholic American, had no such opinion of the splendid religious equality of the law courts of the United States.

The editor was informed that he had violated the Roman Catholic canon law, which has precedence over all national and civil laws. This information was followed by the threat of spiritual and temporal punishment, the former in the shape of excommunication, and the latter in the shape of loss of custom by the issue of a prohibition of The Watchman as an anti-Catholic newspaper. By this double threat the editor was brought to his knees, and he published a humiliating retractation of his offending article.—The Echo.

THE ARMENIAN MASSACRES.—Frequent meetings are being held in various American cities, mainly under Church auspices, in which all denominations unite in protesting against the alleged Turkish atrocities in Armenia and in criticising the refusal of the Sultan to allow the representative of the United States to make an inquiry.

THE Y.M.C.A.

The Newcastle Association, N.S.W., has opened a fine new hall.

The Melbourne Association, as a result of the recent crisis, has lost its building and gymnasium, the mortgagees having foreclosed.

Mr. Henderson-Smith, the Scottish travelling secretary, begins his year's work in the Border district; later on he goes north to the Inverness district.

The Sydney Association suspended most of its meetings during Rev. John McNeill's mission. On being resumed, at its close, every branch showed fresh impetus.

In Glasgow, the new Southern sectional branch, begun with every prospect of success, has not belied its promise. Under the presidency of Mr. A. S. Johnstone, it continues to flourish and do good work.

The Coldstream Association held lately a three weeks' course of evangelistic services, conducted by Mr. Wm. Burnside. Owing to strong counter-attractions during the first fortnight the meetings were not so well attended as was anticipated. The attendance during the third week was much better, each evening showing an increase. At the last meeting, the hall was completely filled, and the greater number remained during the second meeting.

The Association (South branch) which for fifteen years met in Fentiman-road, and for six years at 234, Kennington Park-road, has now removed to temporary premises at 14, Brixton-road, a few doors from Kennington Park. The Sunday afternoon conversational Bible class, which for twenty-one years has been conducted by Mr. John Hayward, will be conducted by Mr. W. H. Libby. With the New Year will commence a class, on Tuesday evenings, for the discussion of questions bearing upon religion and practical every day life. This meeting will be under the charge of the hon. sec., Mr. C. Ford. An evangelistic service is also held every Sunday night at 8 o'clock, and the rooms are open every evening as reading-rooms and for games.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Y.W.C.A. of Sydney has held interesting missionary meetings this winter. At a recent gathering, one of the speakers was Miss Gow, of the United Presbyterian Mission, who gave some telling facts of the relative effects of the religions of "Reincarnation" and Christianity on the natives of India. A new branch of the association has been started at Berry.

The total membership of the Central Institute (316, Regent-street, S.W.) numbers 923, 379 of whom have joined during the year just closed. This institute opens the year with an excellent programme: Weekly mission services Wednesday, regular Bible-classes Sunday and Thursday, missionary and social evenings, Pleasant Saturday Afternoons, travel talks, educational classes, Swedish and musical drill, etc.

In the January number of the monthly journal, Go Forward, Miss Nugent, the editor, remarks: "We begin our New Year with true expansion. The Calcutta Y.W.C.A. Home is having its first New Year's day, the fruit of faith and sanctified effort of our sister, Miss Orlebar, to be taken in charge by Miss Bethune just as we begin the year. The 'World's Committee' is also now established. There are home expansions too, both in many new branches and in larger membership in many."

A mission recently conducted at Neath, South Wales, by Mrs. Penn-Lewis and Miss Florence Jackson, of Richmond, was attended with remarkable spiritual power and resulted in many conversions. As an outcome of the mission several "bands" have been organised—a "tract band" for weekly visiting poor districts; a "cottage mission band" for weekly cottage services; a "visiting band" to look up Y.W.C.A. members; a "singing band" to sing at evangelistic meetings. Smaller groups were arranged for street "fishing" and helping in after services. Each band is in charge of an experienced worker.

The Monthly Missionary Prayer Meeting last Thursday at Morley Hall assumed a particularly interesting character, owing to the presence of Miss Hill, on her way to assume the post of hon. sec. of the Madras Y.W.C.A. She had only reached London that morning from U.S.A., and Mrs. Noble, who presided, reminded the meeting how six months before they had met in that very room to ask that it might be laid on the heart of some lady to volunteer for Madras. Miss Hill was able not only to speak for herself as an answer to that prayer from a distant state in America, but also to tell of interest for the Y.W.C.A. development in foreign lands among the members of the branch she came from. Miss Hill is the first to go out sent by the recently-formed World's Committee of the Y.W.C.A.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The C.E. Society in connection with North-street Chapel, Leeds, has now 55 members.

The Christian Endeavourers of the State of Alabama held a good annual convention in Selma, in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A.

Upon receiving the papers telling about the great convention in Cleveland, U.S.A., the Endeavourers at Malua, Samoa, held a thoroughly interesting and inspiring "echo" meeting.

The report of the first annual meeting of the united C.E. Society for China shows good work and steady. By its means many churches have been kindled into new life and vigour.

At the first anniversary of the St. Paul's C.E. Society, Guernsey, Mr. T. Huxster, recording secretary, reported that thirty-seven members had joined during the year, making thirty-two active, eighteen honorary, and ten associate members.

A conference on the Christian Endeavour movement has been held in Keighley. There were two gatherings, both of which were remarkably well-attended. The first gathering was an ordinary Y.P.S.C.E. meeting. Later, a meeting was held, presided over by Mr. William Marriner Brigg, at which Mr. Asa Binns gave an address.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

There is a Bible class in Rutherglen with 465 members.

Miss Montgomery of Kelvinside, a generous friend of Free Church work, died at Moffat last week.

Dr. Charles Macgregor, of Lady Yester's Church, Edinburgh, has reached his ministerial semi-jubilee.

The Edinburgh City Mission is greatly aided by the local police in its important work of reclaiming the vicious poor.

The Religious Book and Tract Society of Scotland has 179 colporteurs at work from the north of Shetland to the English Channel.

According to a correspondent of The Glasgow Mail, the F.C. Secession Movement in the Highlands is causing great division in many hitherto united congregations.

In a recent sermon, a Dundee minister, speaking of the disgraceful condition of the slum quarters in that city, said he would fear for his own spiritual life if he had to live in such surroundings.

The death is recorded of Rev. Peter McNish, of the Evangelical Union Church, Wishaw. He was a zealous worker in the temperance cause. Another Scottish pastor who died last week was Rev. R. Macinnes, of the U.P. Church, Ayr.

We offer our sincere condolence to the Inverness community at the prospect of losing Dr. Robson, of the U.P. Church, who has accepted the call to Perth. The Congregation of Trinity Free Church, Glasgow, have agreed to call Rev. N. Macpherson, of Yetholm, in succession to Rev. J. J. Mackay.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER IN GLASGOW.

This veteran evangelist concluded, on the evening of Sunday week, a remarkable series of meetings in Glasgow. These were held in White Memorial Free Church (minister, Rev. James Paterson), Mr. Weaver began on Sunday, December 9, preaching morning and evening. At the latter service—though vestibule and aisles, pulpit stairs, and even the pulpit itself were crowded—large numbers had to be turned away. The old power, that made him so widely known and so much esteemed in Scotland, was manifest from the very beginning of the services. On week-day evenings well-nigh 1000 people gathered, wet or dry, to hear this aged preacher of the Gospel. On the last evening the building was crammed in every corner twenty-five minutes before the hour for commencing. The audiences were a marvellous testimony to the drawing power of the Gospel. They were mostly men, and as seen from the pulpit, men whose faces were battlefields. A special feature of the work was the unmistakable evidence that the Holy Ghost was convicting many who heard the Word, of sin. Richard Weaver seeks to build on no other foundation save that which is laid in Christ Jesus. He wounded only that he might lead to the Healer. His presentation of the love of God, as revealed in the cross of Christ, was as tender as his unmasking of sin was terrible.

It was deeply interesting to find that from far and near men and women came to tell of blessing received some ten, some twenty, some thirty years ago. Scarcely ever did he go into the city without someone, on street, or in car, telling him of having been brought from darkness to light by means of his preaching. To those of us who were privileged to work with him, a new emphasis was given to the words of our Lord: "He that reapeth receiveth wages and gathereth fruit unto life eternal."

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Ireland.—Gospel services have been held in the Presbyterian Church, Glenarm, co. Antrim; and in the Methodist churches of Inver, co. Donegal, and Battlehill, co. Armagh.

Rev. J. F. T. Hallowes has recently held an eight days' mission at the Congregational Church, Knutsford. Considering that the time and weather were unfavourable, a gladsome and lasting impression was made.

Mr. E. P. Telford began on Sunday a thirteen days' mission in the Soldiers' Hall, Woolwich. At the first service several soldiers were among the number who decided to follow Christ. Prayer is requested for a general revival among the 6000 soldiers in the Woolwich garrison.

Roscommon, Ireland.—During the last three weeks united mission services have been held here, the Presbyterian and Wesleyan ministers taking active part in them. Mr. Herbert Hurditch gave earnest addresses on five of these nights. He also held a couple of services in the village of Mount Talbot. The meetings were most encouraging, and there was evident interest awakened.

Mr. Joseph Whiting, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission in the Bible Christian Chapel, Herodsfoot, Cornwall. The meetings were well attended throughout, and the stirring discourses were listened to with the greatest eagerness. The presence and power of the Holy Spirit were manifested. Several anxious souls found peace through believing, and Christians received much blessing. J. H. GRIBBLE.

Gloucester.—A fortnight's mission has been held in the Sherborne-street Mission, by William Hobson, of Willesden, Jane M. Price, of Cardiff, and others. Much blessing has resulted, several having professed conversion, the spiritual life in others having been deepened. The meetings were fairly well attended during the week, and on Sunday evenings the attendance was about 250. Several children's meetings were also held during the Mission.

Mr. Opie Rodway has concluded his mission at Englishcombe, near Bath. This is a small village of about 120 inhabitants, more than one-third of whom came out night after night. His earnest and powerful addresses seemed to go to the hearts of the people, and on Wednesday night when he spoke of the power of united prayer the Holy Spirit wrought mightily. Many anxious persons came into the inquiry room, and some professed to find peace. On Sunday night we had a very solemn meeting, many anxious souls, and more decisions for Christ. K. B. MCLEOD.

Rev. Thomas Cook had finished a Mission at Waverley, Sydney, when the last mail left on the 9th ult. Waverley is a suburb of Sydney. During the Mission the heat was most intense, but, notwithstanding, the attendance was very good. The names of 290 converts were taken in the inquiry-rooms, and so great was the measure of blessing that rested upon the services that the highest expectations of the evangelist and his fellow-workers were more than fulfilled. Mr. Cook is now taking a holiday, but will resume his mission work towards the end of this month.

The Weaver Brothers have conducted a special mission in St. George's Cross Tabernacle, Glasgow. From the first service there was much interest, which deepened to the end. We believe that many will thank God for ever for this mission. Large congregations assembled every night, and on Sunday evenings the doors had to be locked in the faces of many who were eager to gain admission. Many truly anxious souls passed through the inquiry rooms, and some cases of special interest were dealt with, showing plainly that the Lord was at work in our midst. D. J. F.

Alloa.—We have experienced a time of real blessing here. Mr. Samuel McKenzie, evangelist, commenced with us on December 9 in Greenside Mission Chapel, and from the first it was felt that we had the presence and power of the Master. Many waited at the close to be dealt with, and every night the interest deepened until the close of the three weeks' mission. I am safe in saying that over a hundred have made profession of faith in Christ. Most of those who have been reached are young men and women. Mr. McKenzie commences in Alva next week, and intends to be in several other places in the district during the beginning of the year. THOMAS MABON.

Tiree, N.B.—In the spring of 1894 Misses Carmichael and Campbell, of the Faith Mission, began to hold Gospel services in this island. At the outset the results were not very encouraging, but their meetings were fairly well attended, except in one district, where very few put in an appearance. Notwithstanding discouragement, the evangelists persevered, and began work in other parts of the island. Two or three months ago the people began to take a deeper interest in their earnest ministrations, and their meetings gradually became crowded. At present they are in Balevullin, where they are having crowded meetings each night, and a good many have professed decision for Christ. Everywhere they go now the people turn out in crowds to hear the way of salvation. G. McD.

Lockerbie.—During the past fortnight a successful series has been conducted by Mr. J. W. Canning, of the Evangelization Society. The initiative in arranging the mission was taken by some of the Christian ladies of the town, and the ministers and workers of the different denominations entered cordially into the movement. Special Lord's-day services were conducted in the U.P. Established and Free churches, and on week-day evenings the meetings were held in the Easton Hall. From the first it was evident that Mr. Canning had caught the ear of the people, and large and interested audiences gathered night after night to hear the Gospel message and share in the blessings which it has pleased God to bestow. This mission fortnight has been to Lockerbie a time of refreshing from the presence of the Lord. Not only have God's people been quickened, but evening after evening anxious ones have remained for prayer and counsel.

Mr. Charles Minor, who has been evangelising in America, is now on his way home, and will be open for engagements after next week. His address is, care of Mr. Mills, 28, Seymour-buildings, Bryanstone-square, W.

PERSONALIA.

Professor Legge, of Oxford, has entered upon his eightieth year. He is still vigorous.

Mr. Robert Wilson, of Broughton Grange, is decidedly better, though not yet very vigorous.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes is now quite recovered, and intends to resume his work in West Central London on Sunday next.

Mr. E. J. Kennedy, so well known in connection with the Y.M.C.A., was ordained last week by the Bishop of Rochester. He begins work as curate at St. James's, Hatcham.

Rev. B. Fay Mills, the well-known American evangelist, is expected to visit England in the spring. A volume of sermons by Mr. Mills is about to be published in England by Mr. H. R. Allenson.

The Earl of Tankerville has, we rejoice to hear, recovered from his recent illness. His Lordship had congestion of one lung, which, on account of his advanced age (eighty-four), gave anxiety to those around him.

Mrs. Josephine Butler forms the subject of the character sketch, illustrated by an excellent portrait, in the current issue of Wings. As befits the organ of the W.T.A.U., her Temperance work is specially enlarged upon.

Rev. W. H. H. Aitken will conduct a mission at the Parish Church of Monkwearmouth, Sunderland, in February next. This church is of great interest as being the church belonging to the priory founded by Benedict Biscop in A.D. 674. In the library attached to the old priory the Venerable Bede pursued his studies.

Rev. Dr. Stauder, a missionary clergyman labouring among the Italians of London, has been plunged into grief through learning of the death by accidental drowning of his only son, Walter Anson, at Taranaki, New Zealand. He was a lad of much promise, and had gone to the Antipodes for the benefit of his health, and to learn agriculture. While at home he took a prominent part in the mission-house directed by his father and mother at 14, Heathcote-street, W.C.

Rev. Dr. Moulton has been appointed a magistrate of the borough of Cambridge. This is said to be the first occasion that a Wesleyan minister will be able to write the letters J.P. after his name. Dr. Moulton was a member of the New Testament Revision Committee. He is a D.D. of Edinburgh, and the author of a translation of Winer's Grammar of New Testament Greek, of a "Popular History of the English Bible," and of "Commentaries on the Epistle to the Hebrews and the Gospel of St. John." In 1890 he was president of the Wesleyan Conference.

Mr. D. C. Joseph, of the Evangelical Mission to Israel, Jerusalem, gave a very interesting lecture on Thursday evening last, at Lambeth Presbyterian Church, Kennington-road. Mr. Joseph has brought over with him a number of native costumes, and a young lady was arrayed in one of these, to represent the dress worn by women at Bethlehem from time immemorial. He had also with him, for sale, a variety of olive wood articles made by the Jews in connection with the Mission in Jerusalem. Mr. Joseph will be glad of opportunities to tell his story. His present address is 69, Alkham-road, Stamford Hill, N.

Rev. Urijah Rees Thomas, of Bristol, entered on the first day of the year upon his duties as president of the Congregational Union. It is a somewhat curious coincidence that when Dr. Barrett, his immediate predecessor, entered upon his term of office the death of his mother was announced; so, as Mr. Thomas begins his term the death of his father, Rev. David Thomas, D.D., is reported. The new President of the Congregational Union is a native of Stockwell. He was trained at Cheshunt College under Drs. Alliot and Reynolds, and ordained in 1862 at Redland Park Church, Bristol, where he has laboured for over thirty-two years.

Mrs. Reginald Radcliffe is arranging some recollections of her husband's evangelistic experiences at home and preaching tours abroad, including some events in his early days, as well as references to many devoted Christians whom he has met or with whom he has laboured. Any reminiscences of those days, in letters written at the time or communicated now from memory, will be welcomed with thanks, addressed to Mrs. Radcliffe, Inglewood, Waterloo, Liverpool. Mrs. Radcliffe has undertaken this pleasant but arduous task at the request of friends, and would like that much prayer should be made for strength and wisdom in preparing and arranging papers and memories covering a period of more than forty years. Her desire from first to last is to magnify the grace of God and glorify his Name.

OBITUARY.

PASTEUR VESSON.

THE death is announced of M. le Pasteur Vesson, President of the Consistory of Toulouse, Reformed Church of France. He was a man of excellent parts, and French Protestantism is the poorer for his loss

MR. E. G. D. MAXWELL.

Widespread sympathy must have been awakened by the accounts published of the terrible railway accident at Chelford on Saturday week. We observe that the first name on the list of the killed is that of Eustace G. D. Maxwell, the eldest son of Rev. D. A. Maxwell, vicar of St. Silas', Handsworth, Birmingham. He had just finished his first term at Cambridge, and was on his way home, after a short visit in Cheshire, when he was in a moment summoned to his Home above. A true Christian, full of active zeal for his Lord, meek, humble, and courageous, he has left, by the memory of his brief life, a legacy which should help many in their heavenward course. He was, we understand, preparing himself for medical mission service.

THE BISHOP OF HEREFORD.

The Right Rev. James Atlay, D.D., Bishop of Hereford, died on Monday morning, Dec. 24, at the Episcopal Palace, in his seventy-eighth year. He had been in failing health for several years, though of a physically robust constitution. In May last he suffered severely from general debility, and being ordered six months' rest went to Devonshire. He benefited from the change, but not suffiently to undertake public duties, and had since been much confined to his house. Last week he caught cold; bronchitis set in, and he took to his bed. All the members of the family were then summoned, and most them were present at the time of his death. For about ten years Dr. Atlay did good work as vicar of Leeds. In 1868 he was appointed Bishop of Hereford, and since then has marked his episcopate by unobtrusive and steady progress.

REV. D. THOMAS.

We regret to announce the death, at Ramsgate, of Rev. David Thomas, D.D., for many years minister of the Independent Church at Stockwell, the founder and first editor of The Homilist, and father of Rev. U. R. Thomas, of Bristol, who has entered upon the Presidency of the Congregational Union of England and Wales. Dr. Thomas, who was a native of Pembrokeshire, studied for the ministry at the old academy, Newport Pagnell. On leaving it in 1841 he was ordained to the pastorate of the church at Chesham, Bucks, where he remained for three years. In 1844 he removed to London, and until 1877, when he retired from the active work of the ministry, held the pastorate at Stockwell. In 1853 he started The Homilist. Many of the articles which Dr. Thomas contributed to it have been reprinted in separate works, notably commentaries on the Gospel of St. Matthew and the Book of Proverbs. Dr. Thomas prepared a "Biblical Liturgy," also the "Augustine Hymn Book," which contained many fine hymns from his own pen, some of which have found their way into those Hymnals which are in more general use.

REV. FRANCIS W. GREEVES.

This well-known Wesleyan minister passed away, on December 18, after a long and useful ministry, at his home, 1, Oakleigh-villa, Mutley, Plymouth. For thirty-six years, in the work of the ministry, he proved himself to be a workman that needeth not to be ashamed. His gentleness and sympathy secured the confidence of all who knew him. In 1886 he settled down in Mutley as a supernumerary minister, but his work was not yet finished. Until the beginning of last year he preached frequently in the Plymouth chapels. For some time past he has been a great sufferer; and yet, throughout his affliction, he has shown a patient and non-complaining spirit which could only be possible to one who was leaning on the strong arm of God. For a fortnight his sufferings were most acute, and his feebleness extreme; but through it all he never murmured. Toward the end he was freed from pain, and when his wife quoted part of the twenty-third Psalm, "Yea, though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death," etc, he smiled, and soon after fell asleep. In his best days he was a most attractive preacher, and the announcement of his death will be received with deep and widespread regret. Dr. Greeves, Principal of Southlands College, is his younger brother. Another brother is a clergyman near York.

MISS CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

A sweet Christian poet has been removed from our midst by the hand of death. Miss Christina Georgina Rossetti, "the Queen of the Pre-Raphaelites," had been ailing for some time in her home, 30, Torrington-square. Born in 1830, of Italian parents, she was a member of a highly gifted family. When she was twelve years old she wrote a poem on her mother's birthday, and at sixteen a little volume of her pieces was published. Her notes, whether joyous or melancholy, were always characterised by purity of diction and richness of colour. Latterly she suffered pain arising from cancer, but she awaited the end with resignation and hope, becoming one having great faith in God. Her most recent religious work was on the Apocalypse, a volume in prose and verse. In her book "From House to Home" she thus beautifully delineates the Christian's progress:—

Then life swooned from me. And I heard the song
Of spheres and spirits rejoicing over me;
One cried: "Our sister, she hath suffered long"—
One answered: "Make her see."

Multitudes—multitudes—stood up in bliss,
Made equal to the angels, glorious, fair;
With harp, palms, wedding-garments, kiss of peace,
And crowned and haloed hair.

Each face looked one way like a moon new-lit,
Each face looked one way towards its Sun of Love;
Drank love and bathed in love and mirrored it,
And knew no end thereof.

Glory touched glory on each blessèd head,
Hands locked dear hands never to sunder more;
These were the new-begotten from the dead
Whom the great birthday bore.

MR. GEORGE COWELL, BURTON-ON-TRENT.

Many will learn with sorrow of the departure of Mr. George Cowell, of Shobnall Grange, Burton-on-Trent, for many years writer of the "Wayside Notes" in The Gospel Magazine, a monthly which he edited in succession to his friend, Dr. D. A. Doudney, who died about two years ago. Mr. Cowell was a facile writer, of great power in the delineation of Christian experience. His daughter writes in the January issue of The Gospel Magazine:—"He was called to rest on Monday, December 17, at 10.40 p.m., after two days of unconsciousness. One of his last utterances was, 'I am satisfied with Jesus as my Saviour, and I know He has saved me. I am satisfied with the religion I have professed; I am satisfied with all the Lord has done for me. Write this to them. I am satisfied with the Lord's leadings and dealings, and can now say, "Come, Lord Jesus; oh, come and take me home."' And on the morning of the last day he awoke for a few seconds to consciousness, and said, 'All is well.' With upturned eyes, as though in prayer, he commenced, 'O God.' I said to him, 'You will soon be beyond all need of prayer, dearest; you will see your Lord face to face, and you have loved Him so.' 'I have,' he said, with great emphasis, and with such a sweet glance upward; 'let me kiss you, my precious Ruth'; and he kissed me his long and fervent goodbye until the resurrection morning; for he quickly fell into the unconscious state from which he never fully roused again. All who have attended him in these last scenes have been overwhelmed with the heavenliness of them. All fear and all earthliness were removed; and many, many glimpses must he have caught of the King in his beauty, so that we could only exclaim, 'Let me die the death of the righteous, and let my last end be like his.'"

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For a fourteen days' mission at Devizes, by Gerald Coultas.—For a "village teacher, that in time of great perplexity and difficulty she may be filled with the Spirit and led to see God's way."—For the mission room, Hazelbury, Plucknett, where services are regularly conducted, and where Mr. John Bennett, of the Evangelization Society, is expected to preach, January 6 to 13, inclusive.—For special services for young women by Mr. A. Winton at The Old Welcome, January 8 to 11.—For Lord Radstock's meetings in the Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W.—For blessing on evangelistic meetings to be held in a small country village during January.—PRAISE.—For much blessing at Conference Hall during past year.

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

Rev. R. B. Ransford has declined the offer of Aston, but has accepted the charge of St. Paul's, Norwood.

Rev. J. H. Mitchell, an earnest C.M.S. worker, curate of Low Fell, Gateshead, has accepted the charge of Coalville.

On Sunday week Mr. G. W. Russell, M.P., spoke at Christ Church, Spitalfields, to a large number of men gathered together from the lodging-houses of the neighbourhood.

The Archbishop of York, addressing visitation questions to his clergy, inquires concerning persons "who might be utilised as lay preachers in mission rooms and elsewhere."

Rev. E. A. B. Sanders, rector of Whitechapel, has issued a report which well merits careful study, as giving a comprehensive view of typical Evangelical work in a poor parish.

Rev. J. P. Farler, of St. Giles's, Reading, is about to resign his charge and return to Africa, where he fulfilled the duties of Archdeacon of Magila for some years previous to coming to Reading.

Rev. J. Armitage Robinson, of Christ's College, Cambridge, has been appointed prebendary of Compton Bishop, and examining chaplain to the Bishop, as he was to the late Bishop of Bath and Wells.

Rev. Charles Askwith, of St. John's College, Cambridge, who has been appointed to Christ Church, St. Albans, was ordained in 1890, when he became curate to Rev. S. A. Selwyn, at St. James's, Hatcham.

Mr. William Deacon and Mr. F. A. Bevan have each subscribed the handsome sum of £500 to the endowment fund of Holy Trinity, Torquay, the foundation-stone of which was laid last week by the Bishop of Exeter.

Rev. J. Sanger Davies has been ordered to pass the winter in the Riviera, in order to recover thoroughly. As this will necessitate a prolonged absence from England, he has resigned his benefice of St. Mary-Bredin, Canterbury.

The remarkable work being done by the devoted rector of Spitalfields, Rev. J. H. Scott, and his helpers, is amply attested by the suggestive report of the past year. It is truly a record of earnest and faithful service amongst the poor and the outcast.

Much sympathy is felt for Rev. H. Grellier, of St. Luke's, Ramsgate, who recently lost his eldest son, and, acting under medical advice, he is proceeding to South Africa for the benefit of his other children. He will be much missed in Ramsgate, where he has worked with unremitting zeal.

Says The Record:—The financial prospects of the C.M.S. income are, we believe, good so far. The resolution not to restrict the flow of candidates to the field seems to have acted as a stimulus, for special gifts have resulted from it. The C.P.A.S. has, so far, every reason to be encouraged, although the Forward Movement demands far more aid than it has thus far received.

CONGREGATIONAL.

The Kirkby Stephen Chapel was seriously damaged during the recent gale.

At Roath-road, Cardiff, a plan is being carried out for the erection of a large chapel.

Rev. Griffith John, D.D., of Hankow, has accepted the presidency of Brecon College.

Mr. Newton Jones has conducted a ten days' mission at Godalming. The services were largely attended.

New Sunday-schools are being erected in Denmark-road, Ramsgate, in connection with Cavendish-street Church.

On Christmas Eve 600 men assembled in Medland Hall, the home of the homeless, in response to an invitation to supper.

Mr. James Learmount, formerly a Wesleyan evangelist, has accepted the pastorate of Junction-road Church, Upper Holloway.

A united mission has been held in the Congregational churches of Stockport, and great interest has been awakened.

Rev. G. Rayner, ex-chairman of the Congregational Union of New South Wales, has accepted the pastorate at Glenelg, South Australia.

Rev. H. Elwyn Thomas will resign the pastorate of Tolmers-square Church, N.W., and will commence his ministry at Newport, Mon., early in February.

Rev. William Mardon Beeby has entered on the pastorate at Watling-street, Canterbury. The first pastor of this church was Perronet, the writer of the hymn, "All hail the power of Jesu's name."

Dr. R. F. Horton, preaching in Northampton, alluded to the system of naming the days of the week after the old Scandinavian deities, and said he should like to give each day a new name significant of its part in our great heritage. Thus Monday might be the Day of Salvation; Tuesday, Bible Day; Wednesday, the Day of Prayer; Thursday, the Day of Brotherly Love; Friday, the Day of Service; Saturday, the Day of Preparation; and Sunday, the Day of Rest.

Calls.—Rev. E. H. Reynolds, of Great Ayton, to Sheffield-road, Barnsley; Mr. D. Davies, to Holmfirth; Rev. T. Maine, of Ashby-de-la-Zouch, to Stannery, Halifax.

Resignation.—Rev. J. D. Davies, of Burgess Hill.

Rev. F. C. Spurr will preach at Maze Pond Chapel, Old Kent-road, S.E., on Sundays during January and February.

The church at Beechen-grove, Watford, has decided to erect a place of worship in a rapidly-extending part of the town.

A new room has been built and opened, free of debt, at the rear of Manor Park Church, for the use of the men's Bible-class.

A large box containing some hundreds of garments was sent last week to Pastor A. G. Brown from the ladies at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth.

The debt of £1695 with which the Zenana Missionary Society closed its financial year has been removed, chiefly by sales of work in different parts of the country.

Monmouthshire Association has decided to counsel the churches to devote a portion of each night's juvenile meeting to catechetical teaching on distinctive doctrine.

At the Christian Endeavour Society, held at the West Cliff Tabernacle, Bournemouth, on Tuesday, December 18, Dr. and Mrs. Bennett, who are going out to medical mission work in China, were present. The Doctor gave an interesting account of mission work in Labrador, and Mrs. Bennett (daughter of Rev. Archibald G. Brown) told some touching stories in connection with her father's work in the East of London.

The church which worships in the Baptist Tabernacle, Boston, U.S.A., under the pastoral care of Rev. W. Calley, is doing a work which in many ways is unique. The tabernacle, which is situated in the heart of the city, is open every day in the year, and on Sundays the services, meetings, etc., are almost continuous. It is said that upwards of one thousand meetings, largely evangelistic in character, were held last year.

Calls.—Rev. P. A. Hudgell, of Waterford, to Junction-road, Derby; Rev. O. R. Gibbon, to Wellington, Somerset; Rev. W. McMechan, to Bethesda, Haverfordwest; Mr. J. E. Barnes, to Hounslow.

Rev. G. A. Wilson has been holding special services for women at Sowerby Bridge. Over 500 were present at some of the meetings.

The noonday prayer-meeting at the Wesleyan Mission House is discontinued for three weeks, and will be resumed January 18.

Special evangelistic services have been held at Falmouth with encouraging results, over thirty persons having been added to the church.

A mission conducted at Ratcliffe by the ministers, assisted by Rev. W. H. H. Kelshaw, of Manchester, has resulted in many tokens of blessing.

Two weeks' special mission services have been conducted by Rev. J. E. Dixon at Inverurie. Each night brought inquirers to a decision, and the large majority of converts were young men.

At Wesley College, Sheffield, annual distribution of prizes Mr. Skelton Cole presided over a large assembly, which included the Mayor. An encouraging report was presented by Rev. V. W. Pearson, head master.

Reports from Manchester as to the results of the recent united mission show many evidences of good done. The society classes are better attended, and many of the "dead" churches have been quickened.

The "Temperance Public-house Movement," begun last year by the West-end Edinburgh Mission to meet the special needs of the New Year's holidays, has been continued every Saturday during the winter months at the Albert Hall and at the Albion Hall also. This week both halls are open all day on New Year's Day and every week evening.

A new chapel is to be built at Bettws-y-Coed.

In Pennsylvania, the Presbyterians have about 11,000 churches, with 191,000 communicants, 200,000 Sunday-school scholars, and 1170 ministers. The churches number about 11,000.

A mission hall to accommodate 500 persons is to be erected at Elliot Town in connection with the Forward Movement. This centre is in charge of Mr. John Harries, evangelist.

The Australian Weekly contains a portrait of Professor Rentoul, D.D., moderator-elect of the Presbyterian Church of Victoria. Dr. Rentoul was formerly connected with the English Presbyterian Church, and was minister at Southport.

Statistics prepared by Sir George Bruce show that whilst in 1860 there were only twenty-four churches in the London Presbyteries, now there are eighty-eight. Of the total communicants (20,881) nearly two-thirds (13,031) belong to church extension charges. Last year these raised 65 per cent. of the money contributed for religious purposes—viz., £59,335, as against £32,177 raised by the older congregations.

Calls.—Rev. A. Watt, to St. Fergus; Rev. T. Ll. Roderick, of Llanfynydd, to Twyddffynon; Rev. John Williams, to the Welsh Church, Liverpool.

Resignation.—Rev. John Forsyth, of Kilwinning.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The average ages at death of members of the Society of Friends, from one year old to 101, in Great Britain and Ireland, during 1893-94, was sixty-one years five months and twenty-two days, against sixty years eight months and twenty-eight days in 1892-93, and sixty-one years nine months and nineteen days in 1891-92.

THE SALVATION ARMY.

A cadet recently accepted for the Army work in India walked 158 miles to get to the garrison.

The new Elevator in Montague-street, Whitechapel, is now in good working order; it accommodates thirty-four waste paper sorters, ten packers, and thirty barrow men.

At this season of the year the Shelters of the Army are more than full. At Burne-street, a few nights ago, during a prayer meeting, a man, who had been a manager in a large shoe warehouse, but had fallen through drink, cried aloud for salvation, and found it.

During General Booth's recent visit to Chicago a meeting of ministers was held in the Willard Hall. He was welcomed by Rev. J. H. Barrows, of the First Presbyterian Church, who was chairman of the World's Parliament of Religions. The gathering numbered over 5000.

In Australia the cavalry vans are doing good service in the villages. The Pakenham Farm Colony gives employment to 170 men. At the opening of the new Rescue Home at Wellington, New Zealand, the Government was represented, and Mrs. Seddon, the wife of the Premier, took part.

LONDON CITY MISSION DISABLED MISSIONARIES' WIDOWS & ORPHANS FUND.

This fund was formed to give support to aged and infirm Missionaries who, after a life-long service—enriching the poorest of the poor with the unsearchable riches of Christ—are compelled to cease from their labours. Forty-two of these receive yearly grants of from £20 to £52, according to length of service. Fifty-six widows whose husbands died in the work—several from disease taken when visiting, and in some instances leaving families—receive grants of from £10 to £20 yearly. Among these true helpmeets to their husbands are those who work earnestly among the London poor. Five orphans of Missionaries who have lost both parents receive help during childhood.

Last year this fund was deficient by £349 7s. 6d.

The Committee earnestly ask you to cast generously into this part of our Lord's treasury, that these aged and worthy disciples and widows may for the present year have their needs supplied.

The Home at Putney gives permanent shelter to upwards of Two Hundred persons afflicted with disabling and incurable maladies.

The Outdoor Pension List numbers upwards of Six Hundred persons suffering in a like unfortunate manner.

The actual number of life-long Recipients is 829.

The needs of this Institution are unique; its funds have fallen off, but the obligations to its Beneficiaries remain. It cannot close a Ward, nor stop or reduce a Pension. Last year it was necessary to sell £8000 Consols to meet expenses. The rate of election has been considerably lessened, and it will probably have to be further reduced.

The public are invited to read "Bent, not Broken," a series of Life Sketches by Miss Hulda Friedrichs, which can be obtained gratis at the office.

JUST ISSUED.

THE JEWELS IN THE BREASTPLATE,

An Emblem of Christ's Heart.

BY F. J. WILLIAMS.

Demy 16mo, 133 pp., paper covers, 6d., cloth gilt, 1s.

Contents.—The Breastplate of the High Priest.—The High Priest.—About God's Jewels.—The Experiences of God's Jewels.—What is it that light's up God's Jewels?—How God values his Jewels.

The very object of the Angel's song, "GOOD TIDINGS OF GREAT JOY," was that the presence of God might be realised and felt in the hearts of his people now; for as there is to be a fitness for that presence hereafter, it must be had now, and the object the author had in writing this book was that God's people might test themselves in this manner.

God spake to his people of old in different ways, sometimes in appearances by the second Person of the Trinity—the Angel of the Covenant—sometimes by Urim and Thummim, sometimes from the Divine Shechinah of the Mercy Seat, and sometimes by the mouth of the Prophets; but now God communicates with his people in another manner, as the author of this book has endeavoured to show.

The Book World.

The Jewels in the Breastplate: An Emblem of Christ's Heart. By F. J. Williams. (1s. Partridge & Co.) A very suggestive little book, forcibly interpreting spiritual experience, and exhibiting some of the symbolical beauties of Scripture.

Heavenly Pearls Set in a Life. By Lucy D. Osborn. (F. H. Revell, New York and Chicago). The autobiography of one who has served God in India, and is now serving Him in America. Bishop Taylor speaks in the warmest terms of the book.

The Continental Presbyterian, an annual edited by J. E. Somerville, B.D., Mentone, has appeared for the fourth year. (6d. Macniven and Wallace, Edinburgh.) It gives information that will be welcome to many travellers, regarding Evangelical worship and effort in the great Continental centres.

Cassell's New Universal Cookery Book (6s.) will be a treasure to the high-class cook and the gastronomist. The recipes, judging from some practical experiments, are at once simple and effectual. Housewives, experienced or inexperienced, and with every grade of income, will find here all the guidance they need to meet the most fastidious tastes and the robustest appetites.

Mr. Spurgeon's popular devotional books, "Morning by Morning" and "Evening by Evening," have been issued by the publishers in one singularly compact volume, under the title of Morning and Evening Daily Readings. (3s. 6d. Passmore & Alabaster.) Those whose time for Scripture study is limited cannot do better than keep this little book in a handy place on the bedroom table. The meditations, it is needless to say, are at once comprehensive, spiritual, and practical. We quote on a preceding page the portion for the evening of to-day, January 3.

Studies in Oriental Social Life. By H. Clay Trumbull, D.D. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) In the preface to this goodly work, Dr. Trumbull says, "the words of the Bible gain in clearness and depth of meaning when read in the light of the manners and customs of the lands of the Bible." He proceeds in fifteen full chapters to illustrate his own thesis. These "studies," drawn from personal observation, deal solely with the social side of Eastern life, and touch but casually on matters of high doctrine or of theological import. Standing for what they are, they throw a flood of light on many Biblical scenes and narratives, and thus help to make vivid to the Western mind the setting of the sacred records.

Number in Scripture: Its Supernatural Design and Spiritual Significance. By Ethelbert W. Bullinger, D.D. (7s. 6d. Eyre & Spottiswoode.) Many have written on sections of this subject, which Dr. Bullinger seems to have pretty well exhausted. Over forty expressions of number, some symbolical and typical, others less suggestive of esoteric meaning, are here examined; and though every student of the volume may not see on all points with the learned and patient author, all are likely, after perusal, to acknowledge that the pages show God's Word to be as marvellously perfect as his ways. Incidentally, light is thrown upon hundreds of passages of Holy Writ, and many of the outstanding facts of the Bible are invested with an added interest and significance.

Our Children for Christ, by Rev. Samuel MacNaughton, M.A., claims to be "a plea for infant church membership, with a full discussion on the mode of baptism." The latter claim is an exaggeration; the treatment is neither thorough nor exhaustive. Mr. MacNaughton persists in regarding believers' baptism as a mere denominational badge, although there are in all large sections of the Church, Christians who have submitted to baptism by immersion. In the course of his argument he speaks of the "effrontery" of Baptist writers. Surely they, in turn, have reason to resent his controversial method; for while exhibiting carelessly compiled, and in some cases actually misleading, extracts from out-of-date Greek Lexicons (some of which never were regarded as carrying the least authority), he has altogether omitted to refer to the modern and really authoritative Lexicons of Grimm, Cremer, and Liddell and Scott. This booklet is neither fair nor reliable, and will do little or nothing to assist inquirers as to the primitive mode of baptism or the conditions under which it was administered. (9d. R. W. Hunter, Edinburgh.)

National Society
Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

Patron - The Queen.

THE sole object of the Society is to secure to every child in the land that its life shall be at least endurable.

The following is the record of the numbers of the children on whose behalf it has enforced its object:—

31,374 Sufferers from violence—from boots, crockery, pans, shovels, straps, rope, thongs, pokers, fire, boiling water, any weapon which came to the reckless and vengeful hands which owned them.

82,973 Sufferers from neglect and starvation—miserable with living irritations and filth, shivering, ragged, nigh-naked, pale, limp, feeble, faint, dizzy, puny, sinking, famine-stricken, dying—many carried in the arms of nurses of infirmary and hospital.

877 Where ill-treatment ended fatally. The Society obtained its information too late to make their wicked parents cease from troubling, and its sole and miserable success was in punishment.

15,241 Little things, exposed to suffering to draw the lazy and cruel charity of the street to those who were responsible for their pallor, emaciation, and cough, mostly, too, in arms—but of idle drunkards and vagrants.

4,864 Pitiable girl-child victims of monsters, devoted to horrible sensuality.

4,661 Little slaves of improper and hurtful employment and dangerous performances, and child monstrosities in travelling shows, acrobats at fairs, trapeze and tight-rope performers in circuses, toilers with burdens too heavy, and sufferers by various other wrongs.

The Society is comparatively little known. It consequently has not yet received the support which its vast and beautiful work deserves. It is greatly embarrassed, and the work it can do is much limited through lack of funds.

Six Thousand Pounds wanted to clear off a deficit for the year 1894.

It is always a pleasure to read or hear brave words of truth lovingly spoken, and the more so if spoken under difficult circumstances. Rev. F. J. Chavasse set a good example when he preached lately the sermon at the ordination of two suffragan bishops at St. Paul's. He entreated them to withstand temptations to pride, self-assertion, and other sins, to which their position exposed them. He confessed and deplored the sins which too often dishonour those who are the professed messengers of Christ.

In a similar strain we see that the Bishop of Winchester has spoken at the Chapel Royal, St. James's, on "The Temptations of Public Men." He used the temptations of our Lord as the basis of his remarks, because they are typical of the peculiar temptations which meet all men, whether in secular or sacred offices, for the various duties of public life. The first temptation yielded the lesson and the warning against using opportunities which come in the way of public men for the advancement of their families or for the enrichment of any part of their life; personal interest must be postponed to public advantage; integrity and honour must be more than gain. The second temptation was used as a warning against public men making short and quick cuts to the favour of the multitude. No temptation more rapidly precipitates even for the finest souls a moral and even a mental degradation. The third temptation shows the distinction between principle and expediency as the rule of conduct and life. "To act solely on expediency is to worship the prince of this world; to act solely on principle is to be the servant of the living God." These are right words in the right place. The order of the second and third temptations is according to Matthew.

There surely is truth in the words of a famous literary man, "No man can tell how hard it is to do good, unless fortune gives him a hundred thousand pounds a year, and says, 'Now, do good with it.'" Doing good is a thing of detail, one kind word, one self-sacrificing action, one bright smile, one pardon, one prayer. We get men by ones. The method is good for our humility; and it also gives us a deep sense of the worth of the individual and of the value of the small things of which life is mainly made up.

Canon Teignmouth Shore contends that auricular confession as it is now being practised by a large section of the Church of England is not in harmony with the standards of the Church. He says in an article in The Nineteenth Century :—

While in exceptional cases the Church suggests the "opening of a grief" to the minister of Christ, with a view to receiving comfort and the benefit of absolution from God's Holy Word, the Church in any case does not enforce what is technically known as auricular confession, she does not even recommend it; indeed, the abandonment of all those instructions regarding it which were contained in the earlier Service Books, and the introduction, instead of the primitive practice of general public confession and absolution, is a discouragement of it which amounts to practical prohibition.

After all, the question is "What saith the Scripture?" but we are glad for every voice that is lifted up against the drift Romewards.

The letters of The Times correspondent on the Gothenburg system, like Balaam's curses, have been changed into their opposite; this time the blessing has become a curse. Whatever the Gothenburg system may do, it certainly does not prevent drunkenness, and that is what we want to see done in our country. This special correspondent "has seen more drunkenness in a Scotch town on a Saturday night, but never in an English one," than he saw in Gothenburg; it is worse than Cardiff, and the evil is increasing. What, then, is the use of arguing the question another day? Gothenburg is not wanted here.

We often hear complaints of the invasion of England by immigrants from all parts of the Continent, but we rather forget how the British have quietly settled themselves on every shore; for every foreigner here we should think two or more British subjects might be counted elsewhere. Take Lisbon, of which Mr. Unmack writes, from the English point of view, such an interesting account in The Quiver. We have had a colony there ever since the seventeenth century; with only a break of a few years, Protestant services have been held for its spiritual good. An Episcopal Church with accommodation for 500 worshippers has been built; efforts are made to prevent children of British parents from passing over to Romanism. The visit of Sir Arthur Blackwood in 1885 is said to have marked an epoch in the spiritual life of the colony. The Scotch Church also has a minister, and we are glad to see that both churches live in harmony and in happy co-operation. The English cemetery has one specially interesting memorial, the tombstone of Philip Doddridge, who died at Lisbon on October 26, 1751, aged fifty. "His works do follow him."

An esteemed correspondent writes calling attention to the lack of prayer which has struck him lately (perhaps from a too superficial observation) with regard to the movement for a diminution of facilities for the sale of intoxicants, whether by legislative action or by the exercise of magisterial discretion.

Attending the U.K. Alliance meetings at Manchester last November, I was painfully struck by the want of any meeting for prayer—nothing beyond a very brief pause for silent prayer at the commencement of the proceedings. So much enthusiasm, but so little prayer—may not this, I thought, be a reason why the objects of the Alliance are making so little progress? I know well that much temperance work is carried on in the most earnest spirit of prayer, but what seems to me wanting is more of united prayer for a blessing on the efforts to get temptation removed out of the way.

Vagrancy in some of the western counties is causing anxiety; in Somerset it has risen in two years from about 29,000 to 46,000 cases—the same persons, no doubt, are often counted twice or more times over. There is a fear that they may become a danger as well as a nuisance to lonely cottagers, but the Chief Constable says he sees no signs of criminality; the increase comes from men out of work; only the most efficient men can find employment. An immense proportion of the vagrants are young men, and "a large number are short service soldiers, some belonging to the Army Reserve. These men draw their deferred pay in a lump on leaving the Army, go on 'the spree' with it, and, at once and for ever, enter the destitute class." This short-term service calls loudly for revision of some sort. A few years ago The Daily News showed how it was making paupers and crowding the southern counties with them, and still the process goes forward. If the country once realised all that is meant by the system there would be an imperative demand for reform.

A correspondent sends to The Westminster Gazette a description of a Christmas scene which he saw at the door of a public-house in Chelsea. There was a crowd of children jostling each other, most of them having their hands full of packets of sweets which the publican had given to them across the counter as a Christmas box. Inside the house was full of children. The correspondent adds :—

This is how we make our paupers—just as the constant music at the doors of the publics draws children and lads and girls, who end by going in. I have watched them often. If the publican wants to give sweets, why doesn't he do it elsewhere than across the bar?

The Westminster Gazette affirms that this is the regular method among some publicans of tipping the child who fetches the beer. Mr. Conybeare's Bill, which has not yet, unfortunately, become an Act, makes it illegal for such a thing to be done. The sooner Parliament passes that bill the better for everyone.

The question has been asked whether the Independents have too many ministers, and Rev. W. J. Woods, secretary of the Congregational Union, replies in The Independent that they have not; on the contrary, they want more. The numerous pastorless churches and churchless pastors lead him to the conclusion that the real difficulty lies in the quality of the men who enter the ministry.

We must have a supply of more competent men. At present the churches choose rather to go pastorless than to elect unsuitable persons. And we are all weakened. Let those who after years of search can find no pastorate take the providential hint. But let us make an end of the false cry that we have "too many ministers." On the contrary, it is our woeful deficiency that we have not by any means enough of really competent pastors.

We may be quite sure that Mr. Woods' position will not be allowed to go unchallenged, but whether he be right or wrong, his words will, we trust, lead to good results. The restlessness of the churches, their craving, in many cases, for a ministry that shall please rather than edify, the worldly methods some adopt in their management and work, especially in choosing a minister, have something to do with changes and vacancies, especially long vacancies. The ministers are made by the churches as well as the churches by the ministers. Incompetent ministers imply incompetent churches from which they have sprung. But the apportionment of blame, even if it could be justly made, will not remedy the evil so far as it exists. Nothing can save churches and ministers but the power of the Holy Spirit; nothing can make a really competent minister but that power. Mental strength and intellectual equipment and moral integrity (using that term in its usual sense) are not enough, in addition there must be the gift of the Spirit working in a renewed heart.

The French correspondent of Evangelical Christendom is strongly of opinion that the Church of Rome is the main and hidden spring of the war in Madagascar. It seems that there is a violent attack being made by caricature and newspaper articles on the men of note and peace who met in Paris, in 1884, to seek how to safeguard the interests of Christianity and civilisation, the outcome of English Protestant missionary labours in the island :—

The honourable philanthropists, and the Friends, Baptists, and Churchmen, who then met are duly accused of anti-patriotism, and of being agents of England; and the violent popish deputy, Mahy, casts the slur upon French Protestantism, with few exceptions, suggesting that all societies and Protestants "in the pay of England" should be ousted from France. Of course, he has received proper and conclusive answers from the parties. But the spirit of Rome is ever the same—Otahiti—Maré—Madagascar!

The L.M.S., which has done the greatest work in Madagascar, and has the largest stake in it, is naturally very anxious as to the results of the war in which the first shots have been fired. Their foreign secretary says in The Missionary Chronicle :—

We dread the recurrence of the old heathen spirit amidst the general disturbance that war is certain to bring, and we fear that the progress of all that is good in Madagascar will be put back indefinitely when the war is over. But while with very natural sentiment we are thus troubled at the prospect of the wreck of all the work in which we have been so deeply interested, there comes evidence, on the one hand, that the Hovas are not unwilling to yield to some of the most important of the French demands, and, on the other, that the statesmen and serious-minded leaders of opinion in France realise the evil that is likely to be wrought by a war of subjugation, and are anxious, if possible, to avoid it.

Notwithstanding these gloomy prospects, Mr. Thompson clings to the hope that the influence of France may be the means used by God for the establishment of justice, the purification of government, and the further development of the country. We doubt whether he makes sufficient of Rome's sinister influence.

The Paris correspondent of The Leeds Mercury, who sends a report of the conditions of life in the French army, quotes the evidence of a member of the French University. This scholar and athlete says that military service in time of peace brutalises a man. He is of opinion that the army is the greatest school of socialism and anarchy to be found anywhere; It is ruining the nation and the individual. His great objection is to the abdication of one's individuality which army life entails, and to the brutality of the non-commissioned officers.

A soldier was shot for throwing the buttons of his tunic in the face of his superior officer. This sort of thing cannot go on much longer; a dozen years, and France will be bankrupt, although we are the richest people in Europe. We spend one-third of our revenue, which is 3,500,000,000 francs a year, on the defences of the country. For what purposes—to encourage hatred of our neighbours whom we have never seen!

We have long been of opinion that these armies of Europe will prove the destruction of the powers that created them unless they be diminished. The moral and social combustibility pent up in them may well make emperors tremble.

Perhaps lovers of freedom and friends of the oppressed have expected too much in too short a time from the young Czar of Russia. Every sign of improvement is, however, hailed with pleasure, while the larger measures are hoped for. His message to Count Schuvaloff, on the appointment of that nobleman as Governor-General of Warsaw, has given universal satisfaction; for many a day the following sentence will be quoted, and we trust nothing will ever belie it :—

As a faithful and zealous executor of the plans of your Emperor, you have fostered the bonds of friendship which have for so long united Russia with her powerful neighbour, and have thereby contributed to the success of the gracious and beneficent work—the preservation of universal peace—which was so dear to the heart of my ever-lamented father, as it is dear to mine.

Could we reach the Czar's ear, the one thing we should say is, that nothing would give such pleasure in England as the just treatment of the Stundists, nothing would conduce more powerfully to the prosperity of his empire, and nothing more surely draw down God's blessing on him and his people.

An esteemed correspondent, writing from Jubbulpore, pleads the cause of the "poor whites" of India. He says :—

There are in this continent many schools, colleges, and orphanages, sustained by mission funds, for people of the Aryan race; but very little has been done for the poor white class, who are of our own race, having our own feeling and habits. Anglo-Indians and Eurasians compose the majority of members in all our English churches, but no attempt is made to open schools where the children of such members and others may be given a primary education and gospel instruction. This lack of provision for the little ones of the Christian congregations leaves parents no option but the committal of their children to the Ritualist and Romanist schools. I presume that mission funds are exclusively intended for work among the natives. If educational agencies are desirable for the Aryan heathen, they are also desirable for the European heathen, who under the present circumstances are left out in the cold.

There can be no doubt that these sentences describe a very real need. The well-to-do Europeans in India should not overlook the necessities of those who are less fortunate; and while urging forward evangelistic work among Anglo-Indians, British Christians should not forget their social trials and disadvantages.

LADY HENRY SOMERSET makes the following remarks respecting her Somers Town estates :—"It has been said that I own a part of London which is disgraceful for its dilapidated dwellings. No one is more keenly alive to the disgrace than I, and the Committee of the London County Council will corroborate what I say when I declare that I have done and am doing all I can to cleanse that Augean stable. In a measure I have succeeded, and a plan is now in process of formation which I hope will satisfactorily meet the necessity of the worst portion of that sad neighbourhood. The property is, however, most difficult to deal with, on account of the fact that the houses had been let on long leases before coming into my possession. But all that can be done, and all that time and thought can accomplish, will be undertaken to wipe out one more dark blot in our great city."

MILDMAY MISSION TO THE JEWS.

On New Year's evening about 300 Jews and Jewesses were entertained at tea at the Central Hall, Philpot-street, E. The members of the mission staff, supplemented by a band of kind lady helpers and several Hebrew Christian brethren, rendered willing service in attendance on the guests, and addresses were afterwards delivered by Rev. John Wilkinson and other friends. On the following evening more than 250 Jewish children, including the members of the night school, were entertained. In the course of the evening they were questioned regarding sin, the Saviour, redemption, cleansing, and the answers given were in the very words of Scripture.

Following annual practice, Monday last, the opening day of the Week of Prayer, was observed at Mildmay as a day of intercession for the Jews. In the morning, Mr. J. E. Mathieson presided over a large assemblage of believers. Rev. W. Frith having led in earnest prayer for blessing on the week's gatherings of the Lord's people all over the world, the Chairman read and commented on a few verses of 1 Peter i. Much regret was expressed at the absence of Rev. J. Wilkinson, director of the Mission, who was confined to his bed with a bronchial cold. After a season of earnest prayer, Canon M'Cormick delivered an address, in which he spoke of the Jews as God's witnesses. Dr. Dixon read the statistics of the Medical Mission, and related some instances of the conversion of Jews. Mr. Carr, of Rochester, New York, briefly addressed the meeting. In closing, he said that when the lives of professing Christians are formed according to the pattern given on the Holy Mount, the chief stumbling-block in the way of Jews coming to Christ will be removed. Captain Moreton also spoke a few hearty words. Between the addresses prayer was offered.

At the evening meeting Colonel Morton presided. Rev. J. Adler addressed the gathering instead of Dr. Neatby, who was absent through illness. He described the truly sad condition of the Jews to-day, and stated that their rabbis have put upon them the intolerable burden of 42,000 precepts, which they command them to observe. Mr. S. H. Wilkinson gave a full account of the past year's work, which fairly bristled with reasons for abundant praise and thanksgiving to God for all He has enabled his servants to do. Much earnest pleading was made throughout the evening for blessing on the whole Mission field.

THE MERCHANTS' LECTURE.

The retiral of Rev. Edward White from the ranks of the Merchants' Lecturers created a vacancy which has been filled up by the appointment of Rev. J. Morgan Gibbon, of Stamford Hill. Mr. Gibbon gave his first lecture on Tuesday at the Memorial Hall, in the presence of a large and very appreciative company. He has chosen as the subject of his first course of lectures "The Epistle to the Galatians—A Tract for our own Times." In the opening lecture he surveyed the circumstances that led Paul to write the Galatian epistle as a defence and exposition of the liberty from human ordinances and human caste feeling which we enjoy through the death and atonement of Jesus Christ. This truth, said the lecturer, needs to be remembered and promulgated to-day, when the Romish Church is putting forth claims even superior to, if more baseless than, those of the Jewish Church in Paul's day.

The three propositions mentioned by the lecturer as summing up Paul's contention were: (1) That his commission as an apostle came direct from God without any human medium; (2) that spiritual liberty is of the very essence of the Gospel; and (3) that to strike at that liberty is to wound the Gospel in its most vital part. These points were ably expanded and illustrated from the Epistle. The lecturer was briefly introduced at the opening of the meeting by Dr. Kennedy, and was cordially received by the audience.

IT IS OF NO USE for a mother to attempt teaching patience, gentleness, etc., to her little ones if she herself loses temper upon every slight provocation. The children will soon discover what a wide difference there is between what mother says and what she does, and by this means her influence over them will be almost powerless.

A Higher Life.

BY REV. THEODORE L. CUYLER.

WITH the beginning of a new year every follower of Christ ought to set about a new and higher life; for no Christian should be satisfied to be no better than he or she has been. To be barely alive ought not to satisfy us. Our Master offers us "life more abundantly." He is the inexhaustible fountain-head of strength and joy, and it depends upon ourselves as to how much of these shall be imparted to our souls. Growth is not a magical process; we must do the growing. He who came off more than conqueror was the man who said, "So fight I, not as one that beateth the air."

One of the indications of an increased Christ-life in the soul will be more vigour. When a person's system is in a low, impoverished condition, he is liable to catch any fevers that are prevailing. It is a low spiritual life that breeds worldliness and self-seeking and covetousness, and also exposes us to the ague-fits of doubt and unbelief. As weak blood breeds ulcers, so a weak spiritual state breeds lusts. With a sick soul, as with a sick body, the problem often is whether there is internal vitality enough to slough off the disease. "I have prayed for thee that thy faith fail not," said Jesus, when Simon Peter was in a pitiably bad way; but for imparted grace that ugly assault of Satan in Pilate's courtyard might have been the end of poor Peter. After he got the more abundant vigour of Christ's spirit shed abroad in his soul, he went through tenfold greater dangers entirely unharmed. It is full of encouragement to weak Christians that the poltroon who was frightened by the sneers of a servant girl lived to write that heroic, blood-kindling "First Epistle of Peter." But why should any Christian be so feeble and so easily upset when he might be "strengthened with all power in his inner man according to the might" of the Son of God? The more vigour we pray and strive for, the more we shall receive; and active exercise does for the soul just what it does for the body.

A second evidence of increased life will be an increase of faith. This was what the disciples petitioned our Lord for. A feeble faith can move mole-hills; a stalwart faith can remove mountains. It is the feebleness of the grip on God that makes it so hard for us to stand the heavy strains or to lift the heavy loads. This is one reason why some ministers and some teachers—and parents, also, I fear—have not been more successful in winning souls during the past year. "According to your faith be it unto you"; that is Christ's mode of measurement. Your feet must be firm on the Everlasting Rock if you want to pull imperilled souls up out of the depths.

It cannot be repeated too often that faith is vastly more than an opinion or an emotion. It is the grappling union of the soul with the omnipotent Son of God. The closer the connection, the greater the amount of power that flows in. A current of electricity sent through a huge horse-shoe magnet, will enable it to support a weight of a thousand pounds; stop off the current and the weight drops in a moment. The more abundant your faith, the fuller and stronger will be the inflow of Christ. "Not I," exclaims the old giant of the Apostolic band, "not I, but Christ liveth in me, and the life that I live in the flesh I live by faith on the Son of God." That is the best description ever given of the higher life.

Strive this opening year to have Jesus Christ in you more abundantly, and there will be many an influx of joy. None of us are as happy as we might be. For many Christians carry such repulsive countenances and shed around them such a chill, that if they should every try to win an unconverted person, that person might well retort, "If your religion carries such a face as yours, I don't want it." Such Christians cheat themselves out of their birthright; Jesus promised them that if they continued to abide in his love, his joy would remain in them and their joy would be full. Mounts of rapture are only occasionally reached in the best life. But a healthy person enjoys a ripe peach or a Florida orange; a loyal husband enjoys the welcoming kiss of his wife at his threshold; and there must be something wrong in you if you profess to love Christ and are trying to do God's will, and find no delight in it. How can you possess Christ and not be happy over it? I repeat what I have often said before—that joy is love looking at its treasures. The richer we become in having Christ with us here, and in the expectation of being with Him for evermore, the more investments we make in helping other people and in blessing and saving the souls of others, the more full will be our casket of jewels. If you say to me, "Last year I did not enjoy my religion much," then I may venture to hint to you that you had not enough religion to enjoy. Begin this new year with the honest question, "Lord, what wilt Thou have me to do?" and then do it. His smile will give you sunshine and put a new song into your mouth. Don't worry over some failures, or because some depressing days come. There will be some raw, chilly days in April, but summer will come along in its time nevertheless.

However hard the "times" may be with you this year, or however ill-health or adversities may try you, yet if you have peace of conscience you can stand rough weather cheerfully. That is the fourth token of a strong, healthy heart life. We don't make enough of conscience in our religion. The saddest records of the last year were the disgraceful falls of church members who had no righteous abhorrence of sin. Their consciences were depraved. "Blessed are they who hunger and thirst after rightness!" said our divine Master. We try to excuse this or that brother as "weak"; but in Christian ethics to be weak is to be wicked. It is these very weak professors who bring reproach on the name of Christ, and are stumbling-blocks in the way of sinners. Religious emotion may burn brightly in a prayer-meeting, but be blown out like a candle as soon as a strong wind of temptation strikes it out of doors. In every step you take this year, ask, What will Christ say? When you are in doubt, give Him the casting vote. It is no child's play to be a robust, vigorous, and thoroughly useful Christian. Nothing this side of heaven compares with that. Yet everyone who reads this article may become one if he will begin this year by a humble, heartfelt consecration of himself to Christ, and he will receive a fresh baptism of power from Christ.

HOSPITAL FOR WOMEN, SOHO SQUARE, LONDON.—During the past ten years there has been an average of 600 patients admitted into the Hospital, while 5200 out-patients have received advice, etc., whose attendances have been over 20,000 annually The ordinary expenditure is £6000, and the average ordinary income (excluding legacies) is £4000, which shows a deficit of £2000 yearly. Exceptional receipts from legacies have frequently enabled the committee to meet this serious deficiency, but as this source of income is of the most precarious nature, the committee appeal for additional annual subscriptions in order that the financial position of the institution may be put on a firmer basis.

World-wide Evangelisation.

WHAT touched the Saviour's heart? Seeing multitudes of old and young, male and female, steadfastly hanging on his words until they were so tired that some of them lay down, and some fainted, and some were scattered abroad "as sheep having no shepherd."

"Then saith He unto his disciples, the harvest truly is plenteous, but the labourers are few; pray ye, therefore, the Lord of the harvest that He will send forth labourers into his harvest."

The commentary by Jamieson, Fausset, and Brown, remarks on verse 36, "The true reading doubtless is, 'were harassed,' and were scattered abroad—rather 'lying about,' 'abandoned,' or 'neglected'—as sheep having no shepherd—their pitiable condition, as wearied and crouching under bodily fatigue, a vast disorganised mass, being but a faint picture of their wretchedness as the victims of Pharisaic guidance; their souls uncared for, yet drawn after and hanging upon Him. This moved the Redeemer's compassion."

Paul writes: "Let this mind be in you which was also in Christ Jesus" (Phil. ii. 5). We may add, this mind was implanted in every mind of the hundred and twenty at the Pentecostal Prayer Meeting. But at Jerusalem the world had to be kept waiting for the Great Physician to deal with every one of the brethren, and all those disciples were unanimously waiting in prayer till they were all filled with the Holy Ghost, and then they were driven far and wide over the world, and multitudes in many lands were converted by them and their fresh converts.

Now, with the mighty heathen and Mohammedan world before us, do not the faithful throughout the whole world need to be with one heart in their closets, and also in companies, with one accord to pray to our Heavenly Father that they may be empowered at least to do a similar work?

REGINALD RADCLIFFE.

Waterloo, Liverpool, January 5.

A MINISTERIAL RETROSPECT.

ON Sunday last Rev. William Crosbie, of Park Hill Congregational Church, Nottingham, entered on the 40th year of his ministry. Making reference to the fact at the morning service, he said his ministry from the beginning had had one special note, in the prominence given to the office and work of the Holy Spirit. The Holy Spirit in the redemptive processes, and in the Church, had been called "a forgotten truth"; but he had never ceased, through all the years, to bear his testimony; and he was more than ever convinced that it was the testimony that needed to be borne. The greatest want of the age was the Holy Spirit.

At this season, churches and religious and philanthropic societies and missions were facing deficiencies, and the cry was for "money, money!" It was a sad, and faithless, and humiliating cry. Was it the cry of the small poor church in the upper room at Jerusalem, in the face of the stupendous task of the world's evangelisation? Not at all. The cry was for power—for God—for the Holy Ghost; and with the Holy Ghost came everything that church needed for its mission and its work. When the truth about the Holy Ghost is restored to his proper place in the living creed, and in the prayer of the Church of these times, there will come—not till then—the baptism of life and power that is to fit the church for her world-wide mission, and for the final triumphs of the Cross. Bring back Pentecost into the Church, and there will be no want to the Church any more.

HOUSE OF REST, ST. JOHN'S WOOD.—The new year's meeting at the House of Rest was a crowded one. An address on "Faith," by Rev. F. B. Meyer, was very helpful. In the evening Rev. J. A. Bevan gave an address on "True and False Consecration."

THE KEY TO THE INTERPRETATION.

When Jesus came there was a general expectation that Messiah would appear and deliver the Lord's people from the Roman yoke. Anna spoke of Him to all who were looking for redemption in Jerusalem. Mary, the mother of Jesus, Nathanael, Nicodemus, and, indeed, the people generally, thought the Kingdom of God would immediately appear. Even after his resurrection his disciples still ask, "Wilt Thou at this time restore again the Kingdom to Israel?" And, instead of a direct reply, He says that they should receive the power of the Holy Ghost coming upon them, and should be his witnesses to the ends of the earth.

THE NEED OF THE PROPHECY.

But, although believing obedience was thus required of them, it was not well to leave the Church after the Apostolic age in ignorance of the character and course of the new period upon which the world had entered. Paul, the converted persecutor, had written to Timothy that perilous times should come. Paul himself, and John's old companion, Peter, had followed their Lord in death for his name's sake, and now John is an exile in Patmos, for the Word of God, and for the testimony of Jesus. Is it strange that the risen Saviour should receive from God an unveiling of the dispensation, inaugurated by the death and resurrection of his Son, in order that it might be communicated to his servants, to prepare them for the evils and tribulations through which they were about to pass?

Again and again God had acted on this principle, as was shown in last week's issue. He is the God of Hope, and from the beginning we have been saved according to hope (Rom. viii. 24; xv. 13).

When Israel was in bondage and centuries of sin and judgment lay before them, God foreshowed to Moses, and to the nation through him their leader, that as the thorn-bush was on fire and yet was unconsumed, so God should be incarnate in the likeness of sinful flesh, and the flesh endure the presence of Him who is a consuming fire. It might also mean that Israel, though subject to burning judgments, should still be unconsumed.

When Isaiah was to be commissioned to a people of heavy heart and blinded eyes, whose land was to become utterly desolate, the vision of the seraphim assured him of a coming time when the whole earth should be full of Jehovah's glory.

When the times of the Gentiles were beginning, and the four monarchies were to succeed to the forfeited power of captive Israel, and Daniel was to prophesy of seventy times seven years to follow the seventy years' captivity, the king's dream of the image of Gentile power broken by the little stone was made known to the prophet, and he foresaw the thrones set and the books opened, and the time when the saints shall possess the Kingdom.

When Jesus had shown his disciples that they must deny self, take up their cross and follow Him to death, He not only assured them that the Son of Man should come in the glory of his Father with his holy angels, and then reward every one according to his works, but He gave to three of them, on behalf of all the rest, a vision of his coming and power and majesty, when they were with Him in the holy mount (Matt. xvi. 13—xvii. 9).

How then should He who liveth, and was dead, and is alive for evermore—the First and the Last, and the Living One—fail to prepare his servants, whom He is not ashamed to call his brethren, for the coming tribulation and Kingdom and endurance, and to give them visions not only of the imminent conflict, but of the salvation and the glories which lay beyond? Observe: the servants are not servants as distinguished from friends, but servants because they are sons. Compare and contrast the service of Martha and Mary in John xii.

WHAT JOHN UNDERSTOOD BY IT.

"The Revelation of Jesus Christ, which God gave unto Him, to show unto his servants things which must shortly come to pass"—whatever else it might reveal to those who should come after, could not but make known to John the character and course of this age; the suffering of the saints; the enmity of Satan; the blessing of the righteous and the cursing of the wicked; the crowning and dethroning of the Antichrist; the glory of God and his Christ; and the doom of the prince of this world.

Whatever further light may dawn upon us, surely our first endeavour should be mentally to place ourselves in John's position, and to seek to receive from these visions, first of all, simply such impressions as they must have made on him. For he is our brother and companion in the tribulation and Kingdom and endurance in Jesus, and we have been assured, like him, that we must through such tribulation inherit the Kingdom of God, that they who will live godly in Christ Jesus shall suffer persecution. The Revelation to be shown to us was shown first to John, and it behoves us to understand what our brother understood by the visions which he saw. This seems to be impressed upon us by the frequent expressions, "I saw," "I heard," and by the emphatic "I John" in the first and in the last two chapters.

The Revelation is a description of a series of symbolic visions. The key to the method of the Book of the Unveiling is the word "signified," or sign-ified, that is, expressed by signs, symbolised. The same word is used by the same Apostle in his Gospel (xii. 33; xxi. 19) where two different symbolic expressions are used to signify the death of the cross, first in the case of the Lord Jesus—"I, if I be lifted up from the earth," and then of his servant Peter—"Thou shalt stretch forth thy hands and another shall gird thee." The miracles of Jesus were all "signs." The word occurs, as verb or noun, many times in John's Gospel.

But we want not only to know the general method of the book—that it is a narrative of a series of symbolic visions seen by John in his exile; we require also the key to the interpretation of the visions—the key to the symbolism in which the visions are expressed. It is, in a word,

THE OLD TESTAMENT.

Here it becomes necessary to remind the reader that there are

TWO KINDS OF PROPHECY.

(1) Literal.—The significance and value of which depends entirely on a rigidly literal fulfilment, as, e.g., those prophecies which identified Jesus of Nazareth as the promised Messiah. He was foretold as preceded by a messenger, born of a virgin, of the family of David, like unto Moses, a Man of sorrows, rejected, scourged, pierced in hands and feet; in his thirst given vinegar to drink; dying with the wicked; buried in the rich man's sepulchre.

(2) Symbolic.—Conveyed in symbolic visions, as, e.g., the cherubim and the revolving sword, the double dream of Pharaoh, the dreams of Nebuchadnezzar, the visions of Isaiah, Ezekiel, and Daniel. These are not to be literally interpreted. The cherubim and seraphim were ideal, not actual beings. Nebuchadnezzar's fourfold metallic image, the tree which reached to heaven, the beasts seen by Daniel which strove on the Great Sea—these had no actual existence; they were visions presented to the inward eye to teach world-wide and age-lasting truths.

Of this latter kind are the visions of John in Patmos. To attempt to give them literal interpretation is to misconceive their purpose and to neutralise the instruction they were intended to convey. M.

PASTOR ARCHIBALD G. BROWN.

The East London Tabernacle was on Monday evening the scene of a two-fold function: a celebration of the Pastor's twenty-eighth anniversary and a bidding "God-speed" to outgoing missionaries. Anniversaries of the Pastor's settlement seem to follow one another so quickly that, though they always excite sympathetic interest, they are not specially arresting to the mind. Farewell meetings to missionaries have also of late years been frequent at the Tabernacle; and we remember with particular joy the occasions on which public leave was taken of the Pastor's daughters, Nellie and Gracie, who are witnessing for the Lord in China. Bidding good-bye to a third daughter might well excite special interest. Now Miss Lucy appeared with her husband, Dr. James H. Bennett, a fully-qualified physician and surgeon; they told the story of their consecration to missionary life, and the way God had led them. The devoted pair are about to leave for China under the auspices of the L.M.S., and they go forth with the best wishes and earnest prayers of all who know them, and realise the great needs of the Flowery Land.

The meeting was presided over by Mr. H. Ludbrook, one of the deacons of the Church, who took occasion to tell the story of his conversion twenty-five years ago, and to rehearse the goodness of God in bringing his wife and four daughters to Himself, through the preaching of the Pastor. The Pastor himself followed, describing the continuous blessing that had rested upon his ministry, between five and six thousand members having been received into the Church. While praising God that last year exceeded any other in fruitfulness, he was able also to report much good as the result of the outside agencies, whereby the poor had been assisted to help themselves, and mercy and truth had been exhibited in their proper association.

Some hearty words were spoken by Dr. Grattan Guinness, jun., of Harley College, in connection with which Dr. Bennett had pursued his studies. He had also some kind words for the lady, who, as Miss Brown, had been trained for missionary work in the Institute. After an able address by Rev. R. Wardlaw Thompson, who intimated that Dr. Bennett had been accepted by the L.M.S. to work at Tientsin as the successor to the lamented Kenneth Mackenzie and Frederick Roberts, the outgoing missionaries made brief speeches. They praised God for clearing their path to serve Him in the heathen world, and appealed to other young people to realise the personal application and urgency of the Lord's command, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature."

The warm bond of sympathy binding the Pastor's family to the people seemed somewhat to damp feelings of missionary enthusiasm; but the earnest words spoken on the needs of China must have sunk deep into many a heart, and we cannot but hope that they will be used of God to help some young disciples to dedicate themselves for service in whatever land the Master Himself may appoint.

"FELLOWSHIP" (H. R. Allenson, 30, Paternoster-row) is the title of a new penny weekly journal, concerning Holiness and the Possibilities of the Spiritual Life, edited by Rev. J. Gregory Mantle. The first number, dated Thursday, January 3, is printed in bold type. It contains papers by Professor J. Rendel Harris, Revs. W. Middleton, W. Crosbie, G. Fletcher, and G. Jackson. The editor promises further articles by these writers, and by Drs. R. W. Dale, B. Gregory, J. Agar Beet, and W. T. Davison, as well as Revs. T. G. Selby, J. Robinson Gregory, Charles Inwood, and others.

IN QUEST OF A BIBLE.

I was lying seriously ill in a Roman Catholic house, in a very Catholic little town in France. Facing my bed was a beautiful ivory crucifix with bas-reliefs of the Saviour and Virgin on either side. Close at hand was a little vessel for holy water. A kind nun was my sick nurse, night and day as I lay wondering whether it would be God's will to call me home from that sick room or to leave me here a little longer. Every morning when she dressed she kissed her dress and her cape, her veil, her crucifix and her rosary devoutly, and when she took them off at night she always did the same. At noon the Angelus rang, and she would drop down on her knees and repeat prayers. She was not quite sure what good would result from her saying them, but she believed it would help some poor souls the quicker out of Purgatory. Hidden under her dress, suspended round her neck, she wore a picture of the Virgin. She said the Holy Virgin had said she would not let anyone stay in Purgatory long who wore her image. She would greatly have preferred, I think, to have said prayers to the Virgin for my recovery, but as I demurred at this, she said she would say them to God for me instead.

It was God's will that I should live and not die. When able to read a little, I expressed a desire to see a French Catholic Bible. The little nun, of course, possessed none. She had a Mass Book, a Book of Meditations, and a book containing the rules of her community. This last she jealously guarded, and would allow no one to read. But as she casually mentioned, one day, that one rule in its pages was that the nuns must never sit down to a meal in their white aprons, worn in nursing, I gathered its instructions would not be of momentous interest.

But though the nun possessed no Bible, the young mistress of the house sent up word that she had one, and would lend it me. So the book came to my bedside. I opened it eagerly, and the first words that met my eye on the title-page were, "History of the Bible." It was no Bible at all, but an account of some of the contents of the Bible.

But there was a young abbé in the house, just about to take priest's orders, qualifying to be a missionary priest in America. He, too, had heard of my wish for a Catholic Bible, and sent a message to say if I wished to see one he could get it for me from the house of the parish priest. Of course his offer was gladly accepted. Then followed a further delay of some days, and then the request that I would mention what part of the Bible I would like to read, as the Bible at the parish priest's house was in thirty-two volumes.

At last two bulky volumes were brought me, containing the Epistles of St. Paul—and what besides? The margin of each page contained the Vulgate of St. Jerome, a fair translation in Latin from the original languages. But the text itself was a garbled rendering into French, introducing Catholic doctrines and expressions which existed neither in St. Jerome's Vulgate nor in the original. And these doctrines were further enforced by a commentary, which was interspersed with the (so-called) translation. This, then, was the only Bible to be obtained in a highly religious Catholic place.

On writing to the British and Foreign Bible Society, which has a depot at Paris, it supplied us with a French translation, which had once been allowed as a Catholic Bible.* But the Pope had finally vetoed it. No wonder, for in consequence of studying it the French Canadian priest, Father Chiniquy, and his entire congregation had abjured the Roman Catholic religion!

At last, one day, I found myself within convent walls, and talking of the Bible to the Mother Superior. She said, "I will show you my Bible, and you may take it away and look at it if you like. It is a true Catholic version."† I carried off my prize. The translation was on the whole a good and true one. But I had misgivings when I saw it was published over thirty years ago. However, I wrote to the publisher to inquire about purchasing one. The answer returned me was "That translation has been long out of print. You will find it very difficult to procure a copy."

So ended my fruitless search for a French Catholic Bible which I could put into the hands of Catholics, saying, "Your priest allows you to read this." The fact is, as a French priest who lately left the Church of Rome told me distinctly, "The laity are never allowed to read the entire Bible." In England Catholics may read the English Catholic Bible, known as the Douay Version, though the priest will seldom encourage them to do so. But abroad, in Catholic countries deeper darkness covers the land and grosser darkness the people. How can that Church give light which systematically hides the light?

CHRISTIANITY AND THE WAR.

A visit to Southern Japan has been one of the most interesting and pleasant experiences that I have met with in this country. There is no question in my own mind that Japan is determined to place herself among the leading nations, and cut loose from Oriental conservatism in both political and religious life. The consummation of the treaty with England has evidently caused great satisfaction, and it now seems to be the policy of those in power to show that they are animated by the same spirit that pervades other and Christian nations. The orders issued by Count Oyama to the soldiers are all that could be expected, or asked, from any Christian power, and have never been exceeded in pure generosity towards a conquered foe. These orders are simply the expression of the same kindly and unresentful spirit that is manifest in the actual treatment of the sick and wounded who have fallen into the Japanese hands. At the hospitals in Tokyo, Nagova, Osaka, and Hiroshima I saw the same care given to the Chinese captives that was bestowed upon their own people. And it was evidently the purpose to show these men and the world that Japan has entered upon a new and brighter era, and that the barbarous usages of the past were for ever abandoned.

One thing is certain, and that is the whole country is united in this struggle, and no sacrifice of money or life is permitted to stand in the way of success. In completeness of equipment, in celerity of movement, and in devotion of all to the success of their cause there has been no lack. And because of such unity of heart and completeness of preparation the Japanese have swept everything before them.

It is too early to foretell what will be the result. As far as can now be seen it will strengthen the present administration, and give precedence to advanced ideas in civilisation and religion. The anti-foreign and unprogressive spirit will be buried out of sight. The doctrines of Confucius and other Chinese sages will lose their influence, and the life and teachings of Him who is the Light of the world will be studied and followed as never before. Probably, also, the English language and literature will become more and more popular, and in this way will be introduced much of Christian thought and influence.

This does not mean, however, that Japan is to become a Christian nation at once. There are mountains of ignorance and prejudice to remove. The masses are still ignorant of the simplest essentials of Christian truth; but it does mean that as a nation they are facing towards the Sun of Righteousness, and the thoughtful ruling men no longer look with favour on the systems that have prevailed so long in the land, and have failed to elevate and purify the hearts and lives of the people.

This means, then, to the workers in Japan a larger and brighter outlook for the future, and greater responsibility for the use of the wisest and most effective means of evangelising the people. This is now an imperative duty, and the religious future of the country depends upon the efficiency of the men and means now being used to spread the knowledge of Christ and his salvation.

But not to Japan alone is this a momentous struggle. It means, as far as can now be seen, a new life and civilisation for Korea. No one who has closely watched the conduct of Japan can doubt but that it is her purpose to make an end of the wretched state of political corruption that has so long cursed and impoverished that unfortunate people. And when the obstacles were found to be too great for the men engaged in the work of reconstruction one of the first statesmen of Japan was appointed to take the charge of this most difficult and important undertaking.

Count Inouye gave up his post of Minister of Home Affairs, and, with two Christian associates, has gone to Korea to fully establish a new and better order of things. No better man could have been found for such a position; and his appointment means that this country is determined that her demand for a better order of things in Korea is not to be thwarted for the want of competent men to carry it out. It is a most difficult problem, and it will take time to bring about such changes as are needed. But unless something unforeseen should occur the cruelties practised upon the Koreans by the Japanese in other days will be atoned for by the inauguration of such reforms and progress as the country would otherwise never have known.

Whichever way the war may end it is likely to be a benefit in the end to China. Nothing but the most crushing defeat, the humbling of the native pride, and the enforced conviction that other nations are not only their equals, but superiors, will ever arouse that people from their lethargy, and convince them that their land is not the centre of the universe and the most favoured spot under heaven. Such a revolution in the public mind will be costly, but it will in time lift the veil of pride, prejudice, and error, and open the way for a better day than the Land of Sinim has yet known. But the best and most wonderful results seem to be the help that is likely to be given to Christianity. Sick and wounded Chinese prisoners in Tokyo, Osaka, Nagoya, and Hiroshima were filled with astonishment at the kindness which they had received.

When I brought them copies of the Scriptures they were evidently greatly pleased to receive them. Their hearts had been opened by kindness, and so they were just in the most favourable mood to be influenced by religious instruction. And those who could read promised to teach the others what they had read.

Among those at Hiroshima was a colonel, a bright, fine-looking man. Someone had already given him a copy of the New Testament, and he had read nearly one half of it. He expressed by his actions, as well as by his words, that he was deeply grateful for the gift, and said that he believed much of it. He will also tell his companions what he has learned. He had heard something of Christianity from the missionaries in China, but it had never come to him so impressively before. On his sleeve, as on all others, was the badge of the Red Cross Society. When he was asked if he knew the meaning of that emblem he replied that he did, and that Christianity was the origin of the care and comfort which they received.

These men come from various provinces, and when they go home will tell that, instead of torture and death at the hands of their foes, they had experienced such kindness and attention as could not have been received among their own people. The story of such treatment cannot but be helpful in opening the hearts of the people towards all foreigners, and thus preparing them to receive the teachings of Christ.

And thus while war is a scourge to be dreaded, and the suffering and death of thousands the penalty that is being paid, yet God is evidently overruling all for the spread of his kingdom and the glory of his name.

SHELTERING HOMES, LIVERPOOL.

The annual Christmas treat to 5000 of the poorest children in Liverpool was given at St. George's Hall through the kind gifts of many friends entrusted to Mrs. Birt's dispensing. The magnificent hall was filled twice with little guests, some of whom, crippled or too tiny to walk far, arrived on the shoulders of other sturdier and willing burden-bearers. After the Christmas fare had been enjoyed, the children sang several Christmas hymns, and highly appreciated the lively strains of the City Police Band and the deeper tones of the grand organ. Books and magazines were distributed as the happy and satisfied, if still ragged, crowds dispersed.

The forty-fifth band of rescued children in the Sheltering Homes also had beautiful gifts made them on Christmas Day by a lady friend, and all spent a very happy time.

The aged widows have not been forgotten, and Mrs. Birt has again been enabled through special gifts from widowed ladies, to give the 200 widows who attend the weekly sewing-class a good warm skirt each.

EXCESSIVE TEA-DRINKING is said to be on the increase in America. Of the patients applying in one week at a dispensary in Brooklyn, 10 per cent. were said to be tea-drunkards.

A CHRISTIAN JEW'S TESTIMONY.

Amongst recent interesting testimonies at the Aldersgate-street noon meeting, was one on New Year's Day by Mr. Albert Nathan, who, with a friend from Kansas, tarried in London for a few days while en route as a missionary to Morocco. His brief address consisted largely of personal testimony. He is the son of Jewish parents. As a boy he was visiting in a Christian home, and was much struck by seeing a child in the family, when guilty of some offence, fold his hands in prayer and ask pardon in the name of Jesus.

The next time he got into trouble at home he determined to resort to the same method of obtaining consolation. He had not long to wait; being crossed in his purpose he got angry, and, remembering his intention, he retired into an adjoining bedroom and asked God in the name of Jesus Christ to forgive him. Unfortunately for him, as it appeared, there were only folding doors between the bedroom and the sitting-room in which his Jewish father was reading. On hearing the despised name on the lips of his son, the father rushed in and in a furious rage shook his son, forbidding him at his peril not to name that name again in his house. The incident passed and for a time Nathan forgot.

Years passed by, and ten years ago he landed in the United States on a prolonged pleasure trip. One night in December he was strolling down a street in New York City, called The Bowery, when his attention was attracted by singing. Thinking that it was a concert hall, he passed up the stairs, and, to his great consternation, on passing inside, he found that it was a religious meeting. Turning round to decamp, he was faced by several members of a very efficient "reception committee," who said, "You will not leave us, surely, directly you have come in." Desiring, for appearance sake, not to seem unfamiliar with such meetings, he proceeded to take a back seat, but this did not meet the views of the reception committee, who conducted him to the front row.

As the meeting proceeded, Mr. Nathan was a good deal disturbed by his neighbours, first on one side and then on the other, engaging in prayer aloud. At the close of these exercises a gentleman present proceeded to sing as a solo "Lord, I hear of showers of blessing." Nathan was feeling very desolate; he saw many of those around him manifestly joyous and happy. He was much affected by the words, "Let some blessing fall on me, even me." Tears came into his eyes.

The solo being finished, he rose to go, but was arrested by the chairman announcing that they would now have some "testimonies." Being a German, he had never before heard that word; he was curious to know what "testimonies" were. To his great surprise, he saw a poorly-dressed man, with a bright face, however, rise and say, "I am the child of a King." "That is a lie," he thought to himself, "for no child of a king would dress so meanly." However, as the meeting proceeded he was more and more impressed with the fact that many of these poor men possessed some strange joy to which he was a stranger. Proceeding to leave, he was met at the door by the gentleman who had sung the solo, who asked him, "Are you a Christian?" He said, "No." "Would you not like to be a Christian?" He replied, "No; I don't know anything about it. I am a Jew." "But salvation is for the Jews as well as for the Gentiles." "That's strange," he replied, "for nobody has ever told me about it." As the result, he went into a side-room, and learned from the lips of his friend that Jesus of Nazareth is the Messiah of Israel; and he believed the Gospel.

His most sorrowful experience was when his father and mother wrote bitter, resentful letters about his decision. His mother, who until now had been all tenderness, wrote that she had rather he had been carried into her room dead than that he should have accepted the accursed religion. He bowed himself to the dust before God in the face of this trial, and was greatly comforted by an unspoken and hitherto unknown word applied to his heart, "When your father and mother forsake you, then the Lord will take you up."

He has lately visited his parental home, unannounced. His father did not recognise him; passing by he met his mother, who at once flung her arms round his neck. His father, coming in, also kissed him. This has greatly comforted his heart as he proceeds to his foreign work. All who heard him will follow Mr. Nathan's labours in Morocco with their interest and their prayers.

NUMBER IN SCRIPTURE.

We have our Authorised Version and our Revised Version, and there are thousands of variations between them; yet substantially they are the same book. There is infinitely more difference between the Bible of any two Christians than between our two Versions. For no two people read the same Bible, just as no two see the same rainbow. They do not stand in the same place; they do not see it at the same angle; their power of sight is different; and as to the impression made by the sight, the difference is greater still. To one the rainbow is nothing more than a coloured semi-circle on a cloud; to the painter it suggests thoughts concerning prismatic and secondary colours; to the poet it is a thing of beauty and a joy for ever; to the Christian it speaks of the faithful Promiser and the everlasting covenant; it is no longer a semi-circle on a cloud, but a halo upon the head of the Angel of the Covenant, the iris which encircles the throne of the Great King.

So the Bible is to one a book which can be procured for less than cost price; to the critic a bundle of ancient tracts of composite authorship; to the saved sinner it is the charter of his freedom and the certificate of eternal life. And even those to whom it is all this, see it from different points of view, and read it with very varied power of apprehension. Logician, poet, historian, mystic, each finds in it waters to swim in, a river that cannot be passed over, with trees of life and ever-varying fruits. Let not the logician envy the poet, nor the historian vex the mystic. "There is nothing better for them, than to rejoice and to do good so long as they live; and also that every man should eat and drink and enjoy good in his labour, is the gift of God."

We have before us a book which many may pooh-pooh as fanciful and imaginative, entitled

NUMBER IN SCRIPTURE:

Its Supernatural Design and Spiritual Significance. By Rev. E. W. Bullinger, D.D. (7s. 6d. Eyre & Spottiswoode.) We have all some perception of the significance of such off-recurring numbers as three, and seven, and twelve; but that the Scripture is constructed with reference to number, and that "He wrought by number" in his Word as well as in his works has entered into the minds of very few Christians to conceive. So it seems to be, however, and the most unanswerable reply to modern destructive criticism may yet be found in the proof that the plan of Scripture is as much outraged by attributing one verse to J and another to E, and another to P C, as would be the architect's plans of Cologne Cathedral if cut up in pieces and shaken in a bag. In the earlier part of his work Dr. Bullinger writes:—

"The number of vibrations in a second, for each note, is a multiple of eleven, and the difference in the number of vibrations between each note is also a multiple of eleven. These differences are not always the same. We speak of tones and semi-tones as though all tones were alike and all semi-tones were alike; but this is not the case. The difference between the semi-tone mi and fa is 22; while between the other semi-tone, si and do, it is 33. So with the tones: the difference between the tone do and re, for example, is 33, while between fa and sol it is 22; between sol and la it is 44; and between la and si it is 55. The ear can convey these vibrations to the brain only between certain limits. Each ear has within it a minute organ, like a little harp, with about ten thousand strings. These organs were discovered by an Italian named Corti, and hence have been named the 'organs of Corti.' When a sound is made, the corresponding string of this little harp vibrates in sympathy, and conveys the impression to the brain. The immense number of these little strings provides for the conveyance of every conceivable sound within certain limits.

"In the scale, as we have seen, there is a range of 264 vibrations. There is a difference between each one, so that there are practically 264 notes in the scale, but the ear cannot detect them. The ear of a skilled violinist can detect many more than an ordinary untrained ear. The mechanical action of a pianoforte can record only twelve of these notes. The violin can be made to produce a much larger number, and is therefore more perfect as an instrument, but not equal in this respect to the human voice. The wonderful mechanism of the human voice, being created by God, far excels every instrument that man can make . . . The 'Pendulograph' is a contrivance for rendering these vibrations visible to the eye; and for exhibiting depths of sound which are totally inaudible to the ear. The pen is attached to one pendulum and the paper to the other, and these are made to oscillate at right angles with each other. Where each pendulum is set at the same length (making the same number of vibrations in the same time), the figure made by the pen will be a perfect circle. But when these lengths (or vibrations) vary, the patterns that are described are as exquisite as they are marvellous, and almost infinite in their variety and design.

"Even the organs of Corti are limited in their perception, notwithstanding the many thousands of minute vibrating chords. When these organs are perfect or well formed, there is what is called 'an ear for music.' But in many cases there is 'no ear for music.' This means that these organs are defective, not fully developed, or malformed, in the case of such persons; and that the sounds are not accurately conveyed to the brain. There is a solemn and important truth therefore in the words 'He that planted the ear' (Ps. xciv. 9). What wondrous planting! Not everyone has this peculiar (musical) 'ear.' And no one has by nature that ear which can distinguish the things of God. The spiritual ear is the direct gift and planting of God. Hence it is written, 'He that hath an ear,' i.e., only he that hath that divinely-planted, God-given ear can hear the things of the Spirit of God.

"'An ear to hear' those spiritual things is a far greater reality, and infinitely greater gift, than 'an ear for music.' Oh wondrous ear! It is the Lord that gives 'the hearing ear' (Prov. xx. 12). He wakeneth the ear to hear (Is. l. 4). It is the Lord that openeth the ear (Is. l. 5). The natural ear does not hear spiritual sounds; it cannot discern them (Is. lxiv. 4; 1 Cor. ii. 9). Thus, nature and grace illustrate one another, and reveal the great fact that there is a secret ear, more delicate than any 'organs of Corti,' that can detect sounds invisible as well as inaudible to the senses, and which enables those who possess it to say:—

> Sweeter sounds than music knows,
> Charm me in Emanuel's name,
> All her hopes my spirit owes
> To his birth, and cross, and shame."

One purpose of Dr. Bullinger in this epoch-marking book is to show that the Divine Author of Scripture inspired holy men of God to write in language the depth and numerical accuracy of which they could not fathom, even when searching what or what manner of time the Spirit of Christ which was in them did signify, when He testified beforehand the sufferings of Christ and the glories that should follow.

THE BELLEVILLE MISSION.

Christmas and the New Year have been a season of great rejoicing at this Paris mission. Many of the people testified of the joy and peace they have found in a loving Saviour. What life and death mean without Him I was very graphically shown the day after Christmas, when I was a witness of a most melancholy and depressive scene at the cemetery of Père la Chaise. I never was more vividly impressed with the terrors of death and the grave, without Christ, the Prince of Life.

The body of a lady who had been a Freethinker was taken there for cremation, as that had been her special wish. The coffin was carried into the building erected for that purpose. After it had been placed out of view behind a curtain, the friends of the deceased began to make speeches, addressing her by her name, as if she were still there. They spoke of her virtues and excellent qualities, of her noble purpose of life, and of all the good she had done. A shudder filled my heart as I heard a human being exalted, even in the face of death, the king of terror, without the name of Him being mentioned who had come to conquer death and to destroy him who had the power of death.

But a witness of the truth was sent. Miss de Broen, so well known in Paris, and so highly respected for the sake of her work among the Communists, stepped in, and had the courage to proclaim Christ's atoning death and glorious resurrection even in those surroundings. No one dared to stop her or contradict her; but she was quietly and respectfully listened to.

THE LATE BISHOP HILL.

A LARGE number of Christian friends, on three continents at least, will welcome the biography of JOSEPH SYDNEY HILL, Bishop of Western Equatorial Africa, written and compiled by Miss Rose Faulkner, which Mr. H. R. Allenson has published (3s. 6d.). The late lamented Bishop was well known in this country, and in Australia and New Zealand, as well as by the dwellers in different parts of West Africa. To know him with any degree of intimacy was to love him, and to magnify the grace of God that shone so brightly through his character and life. Of him it could truly be said that he was a living epistle of Jesus Christ, known and read of all with whom he came in contact. This volume will undoubtedly be a welcome one in many a Christian household; and through it our brother, being dead, will yet speak, calling every reader to the life of happy consecrated service which he lived.

The biographer has done her work very well. The summary of the late Bishop's early life contains facts which are full of the deepest interest, and will be new to most readers. The first brief sojourn in Africa, the busy, fruitful years spent at the Antipodes, the mission work at home, the return to Africa as peacemaker in the native Niger Church, and the later chapters in the Bishop's life are all described by a vivid and sympathetic pen. An extract from the record of the Bishop's second visit to West Africa will be interesting, as showing the exigencies of mission work in that part of the world, and also as illustrating the absence of all self-seeking that marked his character:—

"It is not our purpose to give any account of the troublous times through which the Church in West Africa was now passing. It is enough to say that Bishop Hill went out with the confidence of the Archbishop and of the C.M.S., and that he fully and admirably fulfilled his commission. His task was one of extreme delicacy, requiring the utmost kindliness and tact, but those sterling qualities which had characterised him all his life did not fail him when he needed them most. Truth and love were wonderfully blended in his character; he knew to a remarkable degree how to be 'sincere in love.' He never trimmed to please anybody, and so he succeeded in keeping the respect of all. Yet there were moments of depression, and in his report to the Archbishop he begs to be allowed to retire from the destined bishopric, his real reason being that, not having seen in everything with his Society at home, they might prefer not to confirm the nomination. . . . .

"On the way to Onitsha they stopped at Warri, a place almost unknown in England, yet boasting a British consul. This gentleman kindly entertained the missionaries, and told them that he had walked for four hours from the Consulate inland, and it was one long street of dense population. He begged for someone to be sent to those tens of thousands. The bishop was deeply moved; like his Master, he had compassion on the multitudes, because they were as sheep having no shepherd. He resolved to make a great effort to send a teacher to a place so ready and so needing. . . . .

"The New Year found Bishop and Mrs. Hill on the river being conveyed to Onitsha, where they arrived on Jan. 7. The Christian population came out to meet them at the riverside, and accompanied them to the mission houses, to which they walked, though it was the middle of the day, and more than a mile's distance. The people sang the old hymn:

Through the love of God our Saviour,
All, all is well.

"The Bishop went to Asaba, as it was under consideration to remove the headquarters of the Mission there, and he wished to see some land. Mrs. Hill accompanied him, and they had the joy of finding twenty-two adult candidates for baptism and eight children. The first man who came forward was a king.

"The Bishop's occupations at Onitsha were multifarious—from surveying in the woods to cooking in the kitchen. For sometime he was head cook, and the lady missionaries worked under him. The heathen all loved him, for he had always a kind word for them and was ready to do anything for them. Once an old heathen chief sent him his huge variegated umbrella to mend, and the Bishop spent a whole evening mastering the job, and returned it whole, much to the delight of its owner. They called him their father, and mourned him long and sincerely. Before leaving Onitsha the Bishop invited the native pastors or schoolmasters from different parts to meet for three days' services, and as they could not be accommodated in the mission compound, he paid the expenses both of them and their wives. It was a most refreshing time to the missionaries, for it was the only time they had the comfort of hearing the services in English.

"In February the Bishop and Mrs. Hill started on the return journey. They had stayed at Akassa, New Calabar, Brass, and Bonny on the way, and the Bishop had much to try him, yet, in speaking of that time afterwards, he was able to tell of wonderful answers to prayer, and upholding grace under difficult circumstances.

"Some visible fruit of the Bishop's visit was shown in his being accompanied by two earnest and devoted native clergymen, whom he had selected to present to the Archbishop as suitable for the office of assistant bishops."

THE BISHOP'S LAST WORDS IN LONDON.

We may also reproduce from the volume the short address which the Bishop gave at the close of the meeting of the Gleaners' Union in Exeter Hall, over which he presided before leaving for his West African diocese—"I have three words to leave with you—an inspiration, a fellowship, a sacrifice. I knew one most powerful preacher, one who had been much used of God in the salvation of souls, and whenever you heard that man preach you would often discover that just as he looked down at what you would think as notes he seemed to get some fresh inspiration. If you were to go and look at those notes you would see just one word—JESUS. I want you, beloved gleaners, to get a fresh inspiration to-night from that loving One. Look upon Him that you may get a fresh inspiration for this year's service.

"Then a fellowship. I do not know if you have ever read that remarkable passage in the 'Life of Henry Martyn,' in which he gives an account of how he spent a night in agonising sorrow, which was the result of a thought coming to his mind of the value of a soul to God. He began to think of the various outcasts in India as being quite as dear to God as the kings of Britain. That night he spent in prayer with tears in sorrow over souls. I pray God that this year you may know something of fellowship with the Lord Jesus Christ in his sorrow for souls.

"Now that other word, sacrifice. A noble youth of Rome, who discovered the riches of God's grace in Christ, and became a follower of the Lord, went to Hermas with a desire. 'What can I do,' said he 'in return for such love as this?' Hermas took the noble young fellow and showed him something of the sin of Rome, and as he pointed out there and there something of the need of its souls he said, 'Here you will find an altar and there become the sacrifice!' Look upon the fields, white with the harvest. Look upon the millions who are without the Christ in the world to-night in their awful sin, and you will find an altar; and may God help you to be a sacrifice."

ROMANISTS AND CORRUPTION.

WHEN Cornelius knelt down before Peter to worship him, as we read in the tenth chapter of Acts, the Apostle said, "Stand up; I myself also am a man." When a few years ago the Mayor of New York, Hugh J. Grant, of Tammany Hall, a man devoid of culture, knelt before Archbishop Corrigan on the platform of Cooper Union in the presence of 2000 citizens, the Archbishop did not tell him to stand up, for he also was a man who should not be thus worshipped or reverenced. He is the son of a saloon-keeper, as is Mayor Grant himself. Corrigan did not say this, but proudly accepted the public homage offered him by the official representative of this great city. That disgusting exhibition of prostitution of high office opened the eyes of American citizens, and they have kept them open ever since.

The election last November and the frightful corruption in the Tammanyised police force are indications of the fate that awaits the Roman Catholic Church in this country if the American people will continue to keep their eyes open to the iniquity of the Papal system—and we believe they will.—The Converted Catholic.

IN STEVENAGE, Herts, on Wednesday, Dec. 19, a new Working Men's Institute, with coffee bars, reading and recreation rooms, was opened by Lady Hutton, who in a graceful little speech, declared "The Welcome" open.

THE VOICE OF GOD.

Him that speaketh from Heaven.—Heb. xii. 25.

Do we who serve the Lord below receive all that our Master is willing to give of instruction from on high? I think not. I feel also that much deep spiritual joy is lost to those who do not listen for that blessed Voice, and still their heart's tumult, that it may be heard in all its beauty. That God does speak most distinctly and directly to his chosen ones, we cannot doubt; generally in Bible words, sometimes in snatches of sacred song, long loved, but half-forgotten.

One day last summer a lady was busy about her usual employments, but through the hours a text seemed whispered over and over again in her ears, though she had not even read it that morning: "When He giveth quietness who then can make trouble?" (Job. xxxiv. 29). The message was very sweet, and the reason for its being given was soon made plain.

A friend brought the news that a dearly-loved young girl, a member of the lady's Bible-class, had died while away from home, suddenly and unexpectedly, and her poor family was in great distress. The lady lost no time in visiting the house of mourning. Before she left the sorrowful mother she too had bowed beneath the Father's hand in humble submission. No earthly loss can make trouble when the Lord giveth quietness.

Some months later the same lady woke up with the Voice once more sounding plainly, "He shall speak peace to his people, and to his saints" (Ps. lxxxv. 8). She could think of nothing else until the morning's post brought a letter, which made her see the meaning. It told her that a friend and true servant of God, had at last yielded to God's will for her to be still before Him for a little while. She had been bravely struggling on, fighting against the entreaties of friends and doctors, who saw that health and strength were being utterly thrown away, in her vain efforts to toil in pain and weakness. Once more the fatal results had been put before her—that present labour meant future uselessness; and she now wrote, "I understand that God has a purpose for me, in bidding me come apart and rest awhile, and I am ready to submit to his will in this matter, as I have striven to work his will until the present time." She has been a noble servant of Jesus; now patience would have its perfect work, and God spoke peace.

The story of "Tay-kettle-broth," given by "J. F." in a recent number of THE CHRISTIAN, makes us wish to tell of even greater privations borne with equal patience. In our neighbourhood lives a poor widow, old and feeble the sole support of an imbecile stepchild. Half her hovel fell down, and through the broken walls of the rest, wind and rain are driven up from the bog and lake beneath. Two goats, a dog, and fowls, share the one room, and one shilling a week is allowed by the Poor Law Guardians for the maintenance of the woman and child. She earns a few pence now and then by washing for labourers, but the smoke will not allow of cleansing clothes in winter, and there is no window to give light. A few days ago we visited her with some trifling gift, and she hastened to kindle a tiny oil lamp, and invited us to enter. "Does the rain pour in much these nights?" we asked. "Not very much, thanks be to God! Oh, yes, I'm pretty well, bless his holy name, and the child is great company to me."

A lady to whom we sent some small help recently wrote as follows: "When your letter reached us we had literally not one penny in the house, and all our little stores were exhausted. I do thank God, who has been very good to us, and has remembered us in our deep need."

A woman almost confined to bed for eighteen years by a painful and distressing complaint, which never permits her to sleep two hours, generally not more than half-an-hour at a time, says: "I ought to be very thankful, and I am; see all the good things God has given one. There are many far worse afflicted than I am." Truly, "the sick-beds of the saints are the flower-beds of God." Should not these simple records stir us up to listen, and pray and praise in this New Year, giving glory to Him who enables the weak flesh to become the temple of his in-dwelling Spirit?

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 13.—JOHN II.

The Home (1-12).—The unlooked-for addition to the bridal party probably caused the supply of wine to fail. It was but a village home, and, at the best, preparations could be but scant. The word "Woman" was used by Christ upon the cross, and was consistent with respect and love. We have no warrant for supposing that the entire contents of the huge flagons were changed to wine, but only that which was drawn from them. In any case the wine was of a most harmless kind, quite different from the brandied intoxicants of northern lands. What significance there is in this being the first sign! The water for outward purifying changed into wine, the symbol of the blood shed for the remission of sins.

The Temple (13-22).—Christ's first part in the religious world of his time was to cleanse it of the evils which had accumulated. The court of the Gentiles was converted into a shambles for the sale of beasts for the Temple service, and the exchange of money from all the world for the sacred shekel, which alone was current in the holy precincts. It was not the whip of small cords, but the consciousness of wrong, combined with the majesty of his presence, that drove forth the motley groups. There was tenderness in the tone that said, "Take these things," meaning the timid doves, "hence." Did He remember that his mother had presented them? Ah, Son of God! We desire that Thou shouldest fulfil in us the same holy office, driving forth from our nature all that grieves Thee.

Man's Heart (23-25).—He knew what was in man, yet He chose Judas, and helped Nicodemus, and has saved us. He is not deceived by specious appearances, or the first outburst of enthusiasm; but He can detect the slightest germ of faith and love, which He will nourish and cherish.

MONDAY, JANUARY 14.—JOHN III.

The "Must" of the New Birth (1-18).—Nicodemus was timid, but there was every warrant for the admission that he made. Many will admit Christ as a Teacher who will have none of his words about the New Birth, or vicarious suffering. The teachings of Christ cannot unlock the Kingdom; we can only enter it by inner change, by the reception through the Holy Ghost of the very life of God. "Born of water" refers to the baptism of John and its significance of repentance, and the putting away of sin. (6) The new birth is not an arbitrary exaction on God's part; it is in the nature of things that we must be possessed of the life of that realm into which we wish to be admitted. It must come thence to us; we cannot rise to it by any resolution of our own. (8) Wind blowing over the city gave Christ the opportunity of this comparison. Wind penetrates wherever there is an opening. The Spirit comes into all hearts that open their casements to Him. (12) "If I (by John my forerunner) have told you earthly things (see John's words in v. 31), and ye believe not (see Matt. xxi. 25), how shall ye believe if I (myself) tell you heavenly things?"

The "Must" of Death (14-21).—It is through the riven Rock that the waters of eternal life flow to our world. This lifting-up was present to the thought of Christ from the first, but He flinched not. (17) His work is not for a few only, but that the world should be saved. (19) The work of Christ avails for you, unless you refuse its benefit. Your refusal will then constitute your main condemnation. (21) Let your works be wrought in God.

The "Must" of Humility (22-36).—When you are tempted to jealousy because of the success of another, remember that it was given him from heaven. We only hold the heavenly treasure; its measure and quality are God's gift. (29) Oh to love Christ so much that we shall be glad to decrease if only He may be magnified at our cost! (33) Attest by your faith God's witness that Jesus is his Son, and has spoken true words. (34) God's commission shows itself in the Divine quality of the spoken word. (36) Mark the present tenses.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 15.—JOHN IV.

The "Must" of Ministry (1-14).—There is a distinction in these verses between the well or pit (11, 12) and the spring (6, 14). All sources of earthly pleasure and happiness are so many wells around which thirsty souls gather. Their perpetual coming indicates the insufficiency of these pits, however deep or old, to quench the thirst. "Shall thirst again" is the inscription on every place of sinful amusement. Here the weary One offers rest; the thirsty One, refreshing water; a Jew, gifts which transcend the limits of nationality and time; a man, that which descends from eternity, enters the heart, and springs up towards its source with perennial freshness.

The "Must" of Worship (15-26).—The question about her husband was asked with the intention of diverting her thought from the temporal and physical to the realm of conscience; she in turn desired to introduce a long-standing controversy to parry the attack. Christ showed how unimportant such questions were in face of our eternal destiny. God is ever on the search for true worshippers, but the only worship that can satisfy Him is that which is offered in the inner shrine of the spirit.

Whitening Fields (27-42).—It is a good sign when the whole congregation goes forth to say, Come. Our best arguments are based on personal experience. (32) In harvest-time we feed as we reap; the soul which is busily employed for God, feeds on the hidden manna. In harvest hours, do not forget those who sowed in the short, dark days of winter. (42) There is no certainty like that which comes of hearing for ourselves.

Christ's Second Sign in Galilee (43-54).—A beautiful example of the faith that takes Christ at his word. The father contentedly left his side, so sure was he that the miracle was wrought.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 16.—JOHN V.

Done in a Moment (1-9).—Type of withered souls, this man had been the companion of the sick and halt for the space of a lifetime. In a moment he received that which by repeated efforts he had been unable to gain. Everything depended on the attitude of his will towards Christ. Why should not the failures of your lifetime be brought to an end at this moment? Let Christ make thee whole, and ever after obey Him.

He wist not (10-18).—Too many are content to get what they can from Christ, and to know as little of Him as possible. It was a sufficient answer. The Saviour may well become Master. To us, our Healer's word should always be supreme. (14) He who said, "Sin no more," could communicate grace to make his command an enabling. (17) Christ spoke of the Father in a unique sense, which in the language of the Jews meant equality.

The Son of Man (19-29).—He always had his eye fixed on the movements of his Father in the unseen and eternal world; these He repeated, and passed to even greater words and deeds. Resurrection, whether of the soul to a new life, or of the body at the last, and judgment, both that which is in constant process, and at the end of all things, are committed to Christ, because his human nature enables Him to understand and sympathise with man.

Christ's Witnesses (30-47).—He summons to bear witness, his Father, John the Baptist, his works, the Scriptures, and specially Moses. If a candid mind, forsaking books of evidence, will quietly give itself to the study of Scripture, comparing the anticipations of the Old with the fulfilment of the New Testament, and, above all, pondering the words of Christ, conviction is sure to follow.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 17.—JOHN VI.

Mealtime on the Hills (1-14).—John selects the miracles which were texts for Christ's discourses. Christ is fond of asking questions which reveal our utter insufficiency. He likes nothing better than a confession of barley loaves and small fish. He always knows what He will do, and is conscious of infinite resource.

The Night-storm (15-21).—Not come yet, but delays are not denials; He will come, and the sea that seemed to cut Him off will be the pathway of his approach. Your circumstances have been contrived to give God a better platform to display his tender thoughtfulness.

The True Manna (22-59).—It is from Heaven; it abideth; it is a gift; it is to be received by faith; it is a Person; He gives life; hunger is impossible to the soul that has made Him its portion. (51) And here the Lord unveils the deep truth that He can only become the Bread of man through death. We cannot get nourishment from his words or acts or example until we know that He gave himself up to death, and through death has passed into resurrection. We do not feed on the death of Christ, but on the life of Him who was put to death. Let us so eat. Let us live by Him as He lived by the Father.

Going Back (60-71).—Those who are most enthusiastic about the miracles and teachings of Christ will drop off when the cross looms in sight. This is God's magnet which repels and attracts. By its effect upon you, you may know your true state. The crowds dispersed, but Peter and others who had begun to know themselves clung to Christ, because they had found Him indispensable to the life that He had induced.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 18.—JOHN VII.

Man's Impatience (1-13).—We are called to the kingdom and patience of Jesus Christ. Human prudence suggested more rapid strides to notoriety; He was content to abide in secret till his Father's time came, which was therefore his time.

Willing and Knowing (14-24).—Here is an easy way for any man to know whether the words of Christ about Himself and God and the future are only the words of the human teacher, or are verily the words of God: be willing to do God's will: stand ready to fulfil it whenever it is revealed: live with your face towards the dawn, though it tarry long in the dark, it shall certainly break, sooner or later. (22) The old quarrel of the miracle wrought at the Bethesda pool on the Sabbath was still alive. They did not hold it a violation of the Mosaic law to circumcise on the Sabbath. How foolish it was to blame Christ for a work of mercy and healing! Here was a case of those who did not will his will.

Detectives in the Crowd (25-36).—Concealed, they waited for their opportunity, but they were themselves arrested. His words cast a spell over them. And even though they might secure his body, they could not follow his spirit, or fetter it, in its heavenly and eternal ministry.

The Holy Spirit as Rivers (37, etc.).—We are called not only to receive the Holy Ghost, but to communicate Him to others. If you would minister Him as rivers, you must so receive Him. But in your heart there must be an Ascension, and Glorification of Jesus, before there can be a Pentecost. Note that believing and receiving are two terms for the same act. Faith is the faculty of receiving Christ.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 19.—JOHN VIII.

Go and Sin no more (1-11).—The early Church was doubtful about retaining this story, lest it should give wrong conceptions of the character of Christ, but, truly understood, it enhances his glory. He alone had no sin to bring the blush to his face, though one has suggested that He stooped down to hide the blushes of his shame for others. Those who have sinned themselves are generally quick to detect the symptoms of sin in others. This is how the Pharisees discovered their victim. They were careless about her if only they might injure Him. He, horrified at her sin, nevertheless yearned over her sinful soul. He saw her penitence and shame. As priest, He recognised the condition that warranted Him in pronouncing absolution. By his love, and purity, and pity, He made it impossible for her to continue in sin.

The Light of Men (12-30).—This self-consciousness of Christ, the fact that He knew who He was, whence He came, and whither He went, the fact also that this consciousness was present to Him when He was living in intense fellowship with his Father, is surely one of the most convincing proofs of his Divine nature. How could He be a true guide if He were deceived as to his own nature? Let us follow Him, the Light of Life. So shall we not be in the dark as to our duty, pathway, or destiny. Let us plead that assurance "he shall not walk in darkness."

Freedom through the Son (31-59).—Truth always frees. The man who knows that there is no such thing as a ghost is freed from childish dread. The Christianised heathen no longer dreads the spells of the medicine man. Christ emancipates us from Satan by showing that he has no claim upon us. Moreover, He makes us sons, and takes us into the home of God for ever. (44) Though descended from Abraham according to the flesh, they lacked his spirit. Their resemblance to Satan showed that they were his children. Let us bear the image of God our Father. Then we shall never taste of death. Its shadow may be cast upon us for a transient moment, but the dread reality will never be our portion.

ONE HAS SORROWFULLY TO ADMIT that there is an alarmingly large contingent of the girls of our country whose behaviour and conversation are enough to make the angels weep. But the sight of them and the sound of them ought to make us more sad than angry, or if angry it should be more with ourselves than with them.—Marianne Farningham.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 20.

CHRIST THE BREAD OF LIFE.—John vi. 25-35.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 31.

RECALL the miracle of the last lesson of which this discourse is the application. Like all the miracles recorded in this Gospel it was a sign, that is, it signified something; this lesson tells us what. The connective incidents are the carnal enthusiasm of the people (15); the secret departure of the disciples, and our Lord's miraculous walk on the waters (16-21); the perplexity of the multitude, and the journey of many of them to Capernaum in search of Jesus (22-24).

These verses may be divided into four sections, each containing a word addressed to Jesus by the people, and our Lord's reply.

The first section (25-27) contrasts the false seekers with the true. The people as false seekers had displayed earnestness, ingenuity, and effort in reaching Capernaum; and the object of their search was Jesus (24). All this can be said of false seekers. What was their mistake? They had misread the miracle. To them it was a work of power, which had brought them satisfaction for their hunger; but they were unable to see what it signified. As Lange says, they had failed to "see in the bread the sign, and had beheld in the sign only the bread." Our motive in seeking Christ is, therefore, all important.

The true seekers will not be less earnest. They will "labour" (27), not to merit the true bread, but to receive it as a gift. The false seekers had "laboured," not to produce the bread that perisheth, but to find Him who had power to give it miraculously. Half-hearted seekers do not find. Indifference is nowhere more hurtful than in matters pertaining to the soul. Distinguish between lethargy and faith. The sealing refers probably to the miracle just performed. By this God had authenticated Jesus as Saviour.

The second section (28-29) contrasts the false work and the true. They misunderstood our Lord's reference to work (27), and at once begin to think of certain "works" by which they may merit the gift. It is the common idea, not only prevalent in those days among the Jews, but as prevalent to-day. Against the idea of works Jesus sets faith (29). In this sense the work of God is really to cease from work, and to trust. "Faith is the highest kind of work, for by it a man gives himself, and a free being can do nothing greater."—Godet.

The third section (30-33) contrasts the gift of manna with the gift of the true bread. In the judgment of the people the miracle of the manna was greater than that which they had witnessed. It was continued for forty years, it satisfied two millions of people, it was bread from heaven (Psa. lxxviii. 24, 25). Jesus had given enough for one meal, for only a few thousands of people, and of ordinary barley bread. The answer of Jesus showed that their mistake arose from their not seeing what the miracle signified. The manna, though from heaven, was not the true bread, and could not give the spiritual life men need; and though distributed by Moses, it was in no sense the result of any work of his. The great difficulty with them as with most people was to get their minds away from mere bodily need to the deeper needs of the soul. Most men live in time as though there were no eternity, and think so much of the body that they forget their spiritual needs.

The last section (34-35) unites the true bread and the faith which receives Him. The demand of the Jews showed that they still misunderstood Jesus. The bread they were thinking of was not Himself, but something He could give (compare John iv. 15). It is with our Lord's reply to this demand that the break between Him and them begins. His reply means (1) that He is absolutely indispensable to the life of the soul. Bread and water a man must have or die. Christ is that to all of us. The soul dies eternally without Him. The costliest gems are valueless to the man dying for want of food. The best that this world can offer is worthless if you have not Christ. (2) He is to be received only by faith. Two words are used to describe it; one is faith relying, the other is faith applying. By coming to Him we act our faith. Apart from this it is mere opinion, and leaves us still unblessed. (3) He gives eternal satisfaction to those who receive Him. Peace to the conscience, rest to the heart, cleansing to the life, unbroken fellowship, participation in all his riches.

CITY ARABS' MISSION.—The Superintendent, Mr. T. Dennis, is about to form a shoe-black brigade, in order to find employment for a large number of boys who are in danger of falling into evil ways. For this object, as well as for the maintenance of the Home for Orphan and Crippled Children, 212, Green-lanes, and the distribution of coals, clothing, and food to the necessitous poor, help is needed.

ANCIENT AND MODERN DAMASCUS.

THERE is no city in all Western Asia more beautifully situated than Damascus. The plain on which it is built is watered by the ancient rivers Abana and Pharpar, and owing to the abundance of water, the city has a lovely setting amidst a luxuriant growth of verdure.

How old the city is no one can tell. A tradition says that Adam made his home there after he was expelled from Paradise. We know that it had a considerable reputation in the days of Abraham, and it would seem that ever since it has been esteemed as a place of great importance. Distant as it is, one hundred and thirty miles from Jerusalem, it paid tribute to the Jews during a portion of the reign of David.

When persecution arose after the ascension of our Lord, some of his servants sought for refuge within its walls; thither Paul followed them, to be led, a captive to Christ, into the city. He visited it on another occasion, and his mode of leaving is also worthy of note. In order to save his life his friends lowered him down from a window in the wall, in a basket!

But the story I wish to tell you happened in Damascus very recently. Christianity has now a firm footing within its walls, although the rulers, privately, put as much difficulty in the way of our missionaries as they can.

The people of the East do not study medicine carefully. Their doctors have no real knowledge of the body, and its treatment in disease. So Christian people in this land send out well-trained doctors of medicine, not only to heal the sick, but to proclaim the Gospel. There are two at present settled in Damascus.

No sooner do the sick people learn that the Western "Hakeem" will see them, than they crowd to his door. They come from far and wide. Think what this Eastern group is like. Look at them as they sit in the waiting-room, as the story of Christ is told in their hearing in their own tongue. There they sit, side by side, representing many creeds—Moslems, Greek Catholics, Protestants, Jews, Syrian Catholics, Druses, Maronites, Roman Catholics—in orderly array, listening to the Word of Life.

Then about fifty of these most urgent cases are picked out, and they make a long day's work for the doctors. Even although three days a week are spent in this manner, yet it is impossible to attend to all who come.

Sometimes a rich man falls ill, and he sends for Dr. Mackinnon or Dr. Scott Smith to come to him.

Not long ago, after a long day's work, tired and hungry, just as they were sitting down to dinner, a judge from the law courts came in hot haste.

"What is the matter?"

"Dakheclak! Dakheclak! Have pity, come at once," he gasped out. "The Cadi's little boy, his dearly beloved, is very, very ill."

Away the doctor went at once to the call of duty and of mercy.

He found him a little lad of three years, suffering from opium poisoning. All the household was in alarm; anxiety was everywhere apparent. There the boy lay, livid and well-nigh pulseless.

Now began a struggle with death. For full two hours the good doctor fought and wrought, stimulating the dying boy, and keeping up constant artificial respiration. A hard and anxious fight it was, but in the end death was routed. Slowly the flickering signs of life grew stronger and steadier, until at last anxiety began to lose itself in gratitude and praise to God. The boy was out of danger.

Oh, the feelings of the father's heart! Tears were in his eyes; he embraced the doctor. In his strange foreign tongue and way he expressed his thanks. "All my life," said he, "I shall be your debtor."

It was with a full heart that the doctor returned to his home. In the very court over which this Cadi presided, delay after delay had taken place regarding a question as to the purchase of a site for a hospital. The Cadi had not tried to hasten matters as he might have done. From that day, he began to display a new interest in the pending lawsuit, and in the succeeding stages of the case he did all he could to secure what of justice and of right could be secured from the mazes of Turkish law.

The question is not yet finally settled, but skill and patience are winning their way to the settlement of this much-needed institution in the city of Damascus. W. M.

THE BUD AND THE BARK.

IT was a bright morning in spring, and a bud on a small twig that sprang from the hole of a tree amid the wrinkled bark was swelling and bursting rapidly. Full of pride and self-consequence, it began to complain that it should be placed so near the ugly, weather-worn, and grimy bark. The bark was annoyed, and answered sharply—

"Yes, my young friend, be as proud as you like; but when you have shed your fine feathers I shall still be here. I cannot understand the stupidity of people that feed your vanity by praising you. Without me to protect the flow of the sap the whole tree would die."

"Not a bit of it," was the haughty but ignorant reply of the green bud; "without us buds the tree would perish. We are the people that build up its branches, that ensure its fruit, and create its beauty."

"Nonsense," growled the bark; "I tell you, in spite of poets' ravings, I am the one absolutely necessary to the life of the tree, and I only wish there were not so many bursting and boasting and blazing young buds every spring to draw attention from my usefulness, and detract from my dignity."

"That is all very well," answered the bud, thrusting its leaves with much satisfaction further into the gentle breeze; "but after all, we buds fill men's hearts with joy, and their baskets with fruit."

"It is not," shouted the bark angrily; "I tell you——"

At this point they were interrupted by the voice of a raven, who was resting on the lowest branch of the tree.

"Friends," said he, "you are both right and both wrong. Without bark this tree would certainly die, for the sap could not flow; but without buds it would as certainly fail, for its growth and life and usefulness would cease. I have discovered that young life is necessary to the prosperity of every community. That's why we ravens take the trouble to hatch our eggs and rear our chicks. But I have also learned that a community without the wisdom of age is exposed to many dangers and disasters. Learn to agree, and to cherish each other."

So saying, he flew off, hoping that bark and bud, young and old the world over, would cherish and reverence each other. T. L. EDWARDS.

SCRIPTURE GIFT MISSION.

IN connection with the Scripture Gift Mission, a "Workers' League" has been formed, made up of Christian people desirous of circulating the Scriptures freely among the unconverted and suffering poor. The Mission issues the Gospels as illustrated from original sketches made in the Holy Land. Members pay 2s. 6d. per annum, and promise to give away at least one penny illustrated Gospel every week to someone not yet "wise unto salvation."

Members who are too poor to purchase may have assorted Gospels supplied free. The production of such attractive editions of the Holy Gospels at so low a price is a triumph of taste and wise management. We trust many will help to disseminate Divine truth in this form. Full particulars may be had from Mr. W. Walters, 84, St. Paul's Churchyard, E.C.

AROUND HITCHIN, a very interesting series of meetings were held last week in the neighbouring villages in North Herts and South Beds, by Mr. Edward Welsh, of the National Temperance League.

Some London Missions.

THE RANELAGH MISSION, W.

Some who are privileged to speak the Gospel at various mission centres know well the interesting work so quietly carried on in this West End Mission. The preacher can always reckon on ready and effective helpers in the open air or after-meeting—plain working-men, cabdrivers, and railway men mostly; and an attentive labouring-class audience.

For some time, however, the three earnest sisters who lead the work have been pressed by a heavy burden. The lease of the old hall was running out, the ground had been disposed of, and they had notice to quit. This took effect in August last, and the closing meetings were remarkable by reason of the testimonies borne to blessing received in the hall, and the converting power which signalised the final services. This was cheering; but still the question pressed—where were they to go? The district is crowded by the poor labouring class, and there is no other Evangelical mission within easy access. It was felt that God would not permit the work to close, although He was pleased to try faith. For a few Sundays the services were carried on in the open air, and good work was done at a busy corner of Harrow-road. Cottage meetings were also held from house to house, while the large Sunday-school found shelter in a Board school.

Then came the suggestion that three old houses in Cirencester-street should be secured. Prayer was made, friends were raised, the means supplied, and the houses bought. Two of these have already been knocked into one, thoroughly cleansed and repaired, and are in full use. The third was pulled down to afford entrance to the new hall now building behind. This hall will seat nearly 300, and with the class and other rooms constructed in the standing houses will form an admirable mission centre, right in the heart of a poor population.

But how has this been accomplished? Mainly by the efforts of these sisters, backed by the unceasing prayers of the members. About £1400 have been received or promised. Each payment, as it became due, has been provided; sometimes just that and nothing more. God has marked the whole way with the tokens of his hand, and these workers are confident that the remaining £300—all that is now needed — will be forthcoming when required. It is hoped to open the new hall on February 6, and prayer is being made that the full amount may be secured, so that it may be opened free of debt.

Meanwhile, the whole circle of work is going on actively amongst old and young. The interest stirred by these dealings of God has caught hold of the people, becoming a means of fresh blessing. It is worthy of mention that when the old houses were found sorely in need of cleansing, a number of poor women came willingly and gave a day (freely) to the work. This is typical of the spirit of the whole operations—all is done voluntarily—save that, of course, the Biblewoman, giving her whole time, has to be provided for. Knowing this work personally, I heartily commend it to the prayer and sympathy of the Lord's people. The ladies in charge are the Misses Hurst, 8, Portsdown-road, Maida Vale, W.

N.-E. LONDON GOSPEL MISSIONS.

Some twenty-five years ago a young worker, Mr. Chorley, was put in charge upon the retirement of the devoted Mrs. Weitbrecht of a little mission-room in Kingsland. The work thus entered upon has grown and spread until now it has various branches in North-East London, besides Homes of Rest and a Gospel hall at Lancing, Sussex.

The principal centre of operations is Earlham Hall, Kingsland, N., but I am myself more familiar with Somerset Hall in Devon's-road, Bow, right in the heart of an East-end district, amid poverty and vice. Here a good work is going on, and I have more than once seen the hall crowded to the door by the poorest class. The Mission services and Sunday-schools are well sustained, and "seldom a week passes without definite signs of blessing." The Gospel meetings are well attended, even crowded at times; many of the saddest characters have been saved. A mothers' meeting of over 120 poor women is gathered every week, and a Sunday-school of more than 400 children, many of whom come with neither shoes nor stockings.

The work among the match and factory girls has been hard and trying—some of these being singularly rough and reckless. In fact, a recent report says:—"We sometimes question if anything seen in heathendom can compare with these East London factory girls. But through all Mrs. Davis, whose loving care has been tested these many years, still pursues her way, loved at bottom by all, even the worst. Gradually the little band of 'respectables,' as the rough element names the quieter ones, grows, and the cleavage is very marked."

This work in Bow is typical of that going on in the Kingsland Halls and in Cubitt Town; while a Bible carriage is doing good service in the outlying districts, and from time to time in the home counties; a temperance van also works at Millwall Docks.

Moreover, at this season much is done in the way of relief. It is pitiful to see the crowd of poor hungry men fighting their way into the school-room to obtain a meal of soup and bread, or to see the yet larger crowd of poor half-starved children, many shoeless and almost naked, at Bow, coming for a bit of food twice a week during the winter.

Apart from all this, there are the Homes at Lancing, intended for "poor ones who are thus enabled to exchange the toil and turmoil, the court or back slum, the bare cupboard, and destitution, for the quiet, sea-washed shore, with restful scenery, a plentiful table, and the careful solicitude of a loving heart. To bring these blessings within reach of the tear-dimmed, weary, and heart-aching creatures in East London, affords us a cause for unceasing thanksgiving."

It will be obvious that all this work demands support, and at present the director is somewhat sorely tried in this respect. His way will be made plain, his necessities provided when made known. A recent report, "Outstretched to Save," from which I have quoted, gives some very telling incidents of blessing. It may be had of Mr. William Chorley, 6, Clephane-road, N., and its perusal cannot fail to stir many hearts.

"A MOST PITIFUL LIFE."

Writing of Convent Life, Mrs. James O'Connor, of New York, says:—

There are thousands of young girls who are made to believe by the priests that they have a vocation for convent life, and who, after being in a convent for two or three years, are disappointed, and would gladly leave but for the stigma that would be cast on them. So they have no redress but to continue in that life which they hate. I have known more than a dozen girls who entered convents, and I am convinced that not one of them is happy. It is a most miserable life. Just think of forty or fifty women living together, compelled to obey the Mother Superior, as she is called, who is often of a proud, domineering spirit, and who watches every word and action of these poor creatures under her and rules them with a rod of iron! They have to obey her every whim, whether they like it or not; they have no mind of their own, but go about like automatic machines, always watching each other, and if one is more favoured than another such petty spiteful jealousies are engendered as are unknown in the outside world. It is a most pitiful life, the saddest that can be imagined.

OUR RAILWAY MEN.—For some years periodicals have been posted to each employé on the Metropolitan Railway by some 200 Christians living in all parts of the kingdom. Many helpers have died, and there are are a large number of the men unsupplied. Miss Jackson, 42, Upper Addison-gardens, Kensington, W., will gladly send names to any reader of The Christian who will undertake to supply a few packets.

COUNT TOLSTOI AT HOME.

PERSONAL REMINISCENCES.

THERE is now in England a Swedish gentleman—Herr J. Stadling—who is staying in this country for the purpose of investigating the working of the English Poor-law in particular, and social questions in general. During the late famine in Russia Herr Stadling was the almoner of some funds subscribed in Sweden and in the United States for the benefit of the famine-stricken moujiks, and during his stay in Russia he was brought into very close contact with Count Tolstoi. The chat I had with him (writes a Daily Chronicle interviewer) might be of interest to the large number of persons in this country who are admirers of Tolstoi and his teachings. Herr Stadling received me very courteously at the house in which he was staying at Hampstead, and seemed to take a very lively interest in our attempts to deal with social problems, which seem to present very much the same difficulties in all lands.

"Tolstoi," said Herr Stadling, in answer to my inquiries, "is a Russian nobleman, having a large estate at Yàsnàja Póljana, in the province of Tula. I suppose this estate would be of the value of 300,000 roubles. It is his ancestral estate, but he has others at Samara. He belongs to one of the oldest families in Russia. He succeeded to the estates in his seventeenth year, when he was at the University of Kasan, which he left soon after, as he did not agree with the curriculum laid down. During the early part of his life he held most of the ideas which are common amongst the Russian aristocracy, but even then the bent of his mind was shown in his efforts to improve his estates and the people living upon them. For instance, he built new houses for the peasants, and established schools for their children, in which he endeavoured to carry out educational ideas very similar to those of Arnold of Rugby."

"But to what are we to attribute Tolstoi's conversion to his present views?" I asked.

"I don't know," replied Herr Stadling, "that there is any particular person or thing responsible for this. All through his earlier writings you detect the germs of ideas which have since made his name so famous. They are only crude, but they are there all the same. But his adoption of the Sermon on the Mount as a creed was caused by his witnessing an execution in Paris by the guillotine. What he saw then led him to investigate the whole science and theory of government and its relation to religion. He gradually came to believe that the whole of our modern civilisation and the whole of modern society was in direct opposition to the teachings of Christ. For Tolstoi is a devout believer in Christ's Christianity, and he sympathises warmly with the Stundists."

"These are Russian Dissenters, I suppose?"

"Yes; they form a sect which believes in non-resistance. Most of them are opposed to war, to the taking of oaths, and they believe that the whole of the rules necessary for conduct are to be found in the New Testament. As you are aware, there is no freedom of worship in Russia. Immediately a man becomes an 'apostate'—in other words, immediately he leaves the Orthodox Greek Church—he comes under the care of the High Procurator of the Holy Synod. His children are taken out of his keeping, his property is confiscated, and if he refuses to recant he is sent to prison, and possibly to Siberia or into banishment."

"How was it that Tolstoi escaped this fate?"

"I believe the Tsar interfered on his behalf, on the intercession of the countess. But he carried his ideas into practice by handing over part of his estates to the peasants living upon them, and he would have followed the same course at Yàsnàja Póljana, had not the Countess Tolstoi interfered and appealed to the authorities, who took charge of them in trust for his family."

"Where did you first come across Tolstoi?"

"In the province of Rjäsan, in one of the famine districts. Count Tolstoi and his family and their helpers succeeded in establishing about 400 eating rooms, besides several depôts, at which 40,000 persons were fed daily. Tolstoi is simple and unaffected in his manners. He lives in the plainest style it is possible to imagine. A wooden chair, a small camp bed, and such-like simple furniture are the only things he uses. He is a stern and strict vegetarian and abstainer. I remember once sitting at dinner with him, when a chicken was placed on the table. 'Will you eat some of this cadaver?' he asked me with a laugh. He dresses habitually in the garb of a Russian moujik. In order to carry out his ideas as to the dignity of labour, he has learnt shoemaking, and devotes so much time daily to this pursuit as circumstances will allow."

"And what do you think," I asked, "is his influence on thought in Russia?"

"Very much greater than the Russians themselves believe, or at any rate are prepared to allow. I know that great numbers of the Nihilists, who were formerly Terrorists, have come round to Tolstoi's views. In fact, he is to-day the greatest moral force in Russia, and the secret of that force is his burning indignation against all that is immoral or unjust. His whole life is a protest against the immorality, or rather unmorality, of the present day. He holds up the teaching of the Sermon on the Mount as forming a basis for an ideal life, and he holds that true religious life can only be lived by carrying out its teachings literally. He believes that the Kingdom of God will never come on earth until this is done by every man and woman.

"I should say that Tolstoi is one of the most profound scholars in Europe at the present day. He has not only a complete knowledge of European literature, both ancient and modern, but he has equally as complete a knowledge of Asiatic. He is a voracious reader, and after he was fifty years of age he learnt Hebrew, in order to be able to study the Old Testament more fully. His favourite English author is Matthew Arnold. He is a man of the very widest culture and attainments, but he is anxious to share his knowledge with other people. He has been engaged for the past ten years on a work which he calls the 'Library of the People.' In this he is endeavouring to gather together the finest thoughts of the best thinkers of all ages and countries. To carry this out, he has been going through the literature of all countries—Chinese, Sanscrit, Hindu, Greek, Roman, and modern. His only hope is to live until this great work is finished.

"I am afraid, however, that some people will be disappointed with it when it appears," continued Herr Stadling, "for Tolstoi has his own ideas about the value of different authors, and many of those whom the world holds in high esteem will not find a place in the 'Library of the People.'"

"But how are his writings circulated in Russia?"

"Well, of course there are great difficulties, but such is the desire of the people to get hold of them that the authorities are beaten in their endeavour to keep them from readers. Thousands of his books are circulated in manuscript, and are passed from hand to hand. His commentaries on the New Testament are still in manuscript, but they have a wide circulation for all that. Some years ago two young ladies occupying a place as teachers in schools for upper-class girls became converted to his views, and they have thrown up everything, and now live in a small village near the Caspian, where they are occupied in copying Tolstoi's works. In a word, I consider Tolstoi is the greatest force in Europe at the present time. His ideas may seem absurd when measured by present-day ideals, but when you come to measure them by the high ideal which Tolstoi has set before the world they do not seem so absurd."

DEACON AND ESTHER ABRAHAM.

A LETTER from Deacon Abraham, dated December 5, gives particulars of the return journey of his wife Esther to her own home in Oroomiah. After expressing hearty thanks to all the friends in this country who showed kindness to Esther and her two children, the Deacon says:—

"When the time approached for my wife to leave England, God prepared her companions for the route in Rev. W. Shedd and his young wife, missionaries to the Nestorians in Oroomiah. They showed great kindness to her and her children all the way. At Constantinople they were delayed nineteen days, for the Russian consul would not permit Esther to pass, as he took her for a Jewish lady. When it was proved she was not a Jewess, but a Christian, they detained Mr. Shedd, because he was a missionary, until permission was had from St. Petersburg. Thus their journey took nearly two months. On the sea, and on the shore, everywhere God was with them. But our boy of two years, who was born in London, and baptized by Mrs. Pennefather's wish 'Shmuel (Samuel) Mildmay,' and kept with great care and kindness by Miss Barclay, become ill when they reached Tiflis. He has wasted away, and we have given up all hope of his recovery but from God, in whose hands are life and death.

"Our little girl Miriam, of three and a-half years of age, has been singing English hymns, with which the hearers have been delighted. English Gospel light is in the face of Miriam. The women and girls here were so strange to her that at first she said they were cows; now she is getting used to them, but as they do not know English she has to talk to them by fingers and eyes, the dumb language. She prays for her English friends, mentioning their names. We trust our Christian friends will not forget her, nor us, nor our work for the orphans who greatly need their sympathy and prayers; especially at this time, when many things are doubled in price, and funds are not coming in as they used to do. I ask earnestly that friends would write to us. Letters are a great encouragement, and help to us. Supposing friends do not write direct here, if they direct letters to Mr. H. Tasker, of Brookside, Andover, Hants, he will send them on to us."

Since the foregoing was written came the sad tidings of the death, on December 1, aged two years and one month, of Esther's beautiful child. Those who knew him will feel for her in the loss of her English baby, for he was a child of great promise and intelligence. Though so young, he already gave evidence that the grace of God was in him. A beautiful well-grown child he was when he started on that fateful journey. Perhaps he had ripened early, and God wanted him above.

A beautiful photograph of little Shmuel, and also of his mother, can be had (1s. 3d. each) from Miss Barclay, 9, Franton-road, Bermondsey, London, S.E. sold for the Nestorian Mission.

BIBLE SOCIETY NOTES.

A NEW language has been added to the Bible Society's long list, bringing up the total number to over 320. This time the new version is for Africa; it is a translation of the Gospel of Matthew into Kisukuma, the language of the Basukuma people, whose country lies immediately south of Lake Victoria Nyanza.

One of the most significant facts about Afghanistan is that the Pashtu version of the Bible—the gift of English Christianity to the Afghan people—is now approaching completion. The New Testament was issued by the Bible Society in 1889; part of the Old Testament has also been printed, and the remainder is in the press or rapidly being prepared for it. The year 1895 will likely see the completion of this monumental work.

THE SABBATH IN AMERICA.—In Our Day for December Rev. Wilbur F. Crafts has an important article on "Practicable Sabbath Reform." A "National Bureau of Reforms," in a comprehensive programme, has been organised, with many leading Christian men on its advisory board. Mr. Crafts says: "On Sabbath reform more people can at present be united than on any other crusade against evil. When this evil has been put down, the same committee will be in trim for a united attack on the kindred evils of intemperance, gambling, and impurity; and local reforms will hasten national reforms."

BEGINNING THE YEAR WITH GOD.

PRAISE AND PRAYER AT ST. MARTIN'S HALL.

The morning and afternoon meetings, held on New Year's Day, in St. Martin's Town Hall, as described in our last issue, proved full of profit and power. Nor did the evening meeting come behind in this respect. As the following notes show, pointed words were spoken, but none the less was earnest supplication felt to be the main business of the gathering; and the spirit of prayer was very manifestly given.

After a hymn of praise, prayer was offered by Rev. D. M. Cameron and Mr. Edward Wright.

Lord Kinnaird, who presided, struck a good keynote in the course of a few hearty words of an introductory character. We have, he said, been solemnly reminded by the mention of honoured labourers who have been taken home, how brief may be our opportunities, how soon we may be called hence. Seeing, therefore, that time is short, how earnestly should we seek grace to use well the fleeting moments. I see before me many who must recall the united meetings, held for some years in Willis's Rooms, and afterwards in the Freemasons' Hall. Some of us were greatly blessed through the faithful words of such honoured servants of God as Sir S. A. Blackwood, Rev. C. H. Spurgeon, and many others who have now gone to their rest and reward. These gatherings were times of refreshing, and were followed by much blessing. I feel persuaded that we need more united waiting upon God, rising above denominational distinctions, in order that, as fellow-members of Christ, we may come with one accord before Him for the reviving power we so much need in London and elsewhere. I believe that this spirit of united prayer is extending; and that if we have not now large central gatherings such as these, it is because the local centres are multiplied, and friends are coming together in many parts as they were not in the habit of doing in these earlier years.

For my own part I look back with much thankfulness to the united meetings held in April last year in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall. That day of praise was not without result. Many have borne witness that it was and that in many directions a special revival has been poured forth. Looking back on the past twenty years, I can see a wonderful increase in direct Gospel effort in mission-halls, evangelistic missions, Young Men's and Young Women's Christian Associations, and other undenominational agencies. What we want now is not fresh machinery, but fulness of power; we need each one of us to be red hot with the fire of the Holy Ghost, and thus to go out and labour for Him. After these earlier meetings, of which I have spoken, I recall meetings for the quickening of our hope in the personal return of our Lord. Brethren from Ireland and other parts—as Messrs. Bland, Code, and Groves—expounded the blessed hope of the Church, reminding us that the Lord Jesus Christ is coming back again. What a joy and strength that hope is in the midst of this present darkness, by reason of sin and wickedness in our city. I feel sure that the West End needs your prayers as well as the East, or the South. When the electric light was introduced it would sometimes go out, leaving us in darkness. Why so? Not from any lack of power, but through some fault in the connection. So with some of us. We lack power, our light burns dim. Why? Not that there is any lack in God, but that there is some flaw in our connection with Him. The devil does all he can to keep us away from God, lest his kingdom receive a shaking. If, like the disciples of old, we were all of one mind, and waiting on God with one accord, who can tell what power might be brought down, what victories might be won for our Lord Jesus Christ? Lord Kinnaird concluded by reading a few verses from Acts ii., illustrating his closing reference.

The meeting being thrown open, a number of brethren and sisters led in prayer and thanksgiving, the burden of all seeming to be fresh power from on high for service.

The Chairman at this point mentioned several special requests—for young men, and for Ireland—while a lady in the audience craved prayer for a drunkard on whose behalf she was concerned. These and other pressing matters were laid before God by Mr. Robert Burn, Major Mackinlay, Miss Macpherson, and other friends. Special prayer was also asked and presented for the suffering Stundists and Armenians.

Pastor Fuller Gooch said: In connection with the subject of prayer there are two great duties brought before us in God's Word—

PRAISE AND PRAYER.

In that order and not reversed, as is often done. God's Word puts praise first. Prayer never comes with such force and fervour as when it springs from a grateful heart. These days are dark enough, as we all know, yet, as we have been reminded, God has done marvellous things, and there is much to give praise for. If we want to see great things we must give thanks for what He has done. We mourn before Him on account of much that is going on around us, yet even while we mourn we may praise.

Let us give thanks for the ones and twos saved, and by-and-by He may give us the tens, the hundreds, and the thousands. I put in a plea for more fervent praise; for we may praise while we sigh and cry for the abominations in the land.

Now about prayer. In the last chapter of his letter to the Ephesians, the Apostle tells us to "Stand in the evil day." This is an evil day, though I fear Christians are not half awake to the evil around us. There is no difficulty in getting the servants of Satan to unite for a common purpose, but how hard it is to get Christians to unite, to come together with one accord. Now in such a day, we are exhorted to stand; but how? Girt in the wondrous panoply of God. Thus girded we shall be armed at all points and against every foe. But that is not all. Observe what comes next. "Praying always with all prayer and supplication in the Spirit." Always; never doing anything apart from prayer. Not always kneeling down, or going to meetings; but abiding constantly in the spirit of prayer. Always; that is ever in such a spirit as this—"not what I do or say; but what Thou speakest or doest by me." "All prayer." Yes, go to prayer-meetings—although some might be all the better if they stayed away from meetings for a time and gave themselves to closet prayer. I have been led to think much about secret prayer. "Thou, when thou prayest, enter into thy closet and shut the door." A business man can do that in his office. Many do, I am sure; but we need more of it. "Supplications"; for our families, in our families, with our families. Let our children hear us pray for them. And then for "all saints," and all men. Secret prayer and family prayer, then comes united prayer. These meetings are glorious, not because they are big, but because they are united; because believers of various names here meet to enjoy fellowship with one another and with their great Master. Let us pray for the saints of God. I find many in a sad condition—no one to teach them the things of God. There is great need for united prayer. One feels they could wish such meetings could be held weekly, or at all events statedly. But whether or not, we can all seek to live in the atmosphere of prayer—making supplication for all saints. The Lord give us this spirit of praise and prayer. Remember that our Lord may come this very year. Let us be waiting for Him; and the best way to wait for Him is to wait on Him. May He find us thus waiting, laying hold of Him in believing prayer.

A season of fervent prayer followed this address. Indeed, there seemed to be so many prompt to call upon God that one could scarcely help regretting that one or two "greatly enlarged their petitions," and thus deprived others of the opportunity they sought. Amongst the subjects very specially named were barmaids (exposed to sore temptations), ragged schools, orphan homes, and various efforts on behalf of the young. Many sisters were amongs those who at this point in the meeting led the supplications of the assembly. Finally the proceedings closed with the hymn,

Come let us join our cheerful songs
With angels round the throne:
Ten thousand thousand are their tongues,
But all their joys are one.

Hallelujah to the Lamb,
That was slain on Mount Calvary;
Hallelujah, Hallelujah,
Hallelujah, Amen.

EAST LONDON INSTITUTE.

In a recent Occasional Letter issued from Harley House, Bow, E., respecting the work of the East London Institute for Home and Foreign Missions, Dr. Harry Grattan Guinness says:—

In spite of the fact that fifty-two students and deaconesses on an average have been leaving us every year for the foreign field, Harley House is fuller than ever, and the brethren of to-day do not seem to come one whit behind their predecessors, either in love to Christ or devotion to his cause.

It is one of the most inspiring sights to look upon the faces of a goodly band of earnest missionary students, whose great ambition in life it is to preach Christ where He has not yet been named. We much wish that some of our friends could have the privilege of worshipping with us morning by morning in our capital College Hall here in East London; or of gathering around the Word with our second and third year's men away in the sweet tranquillity of lovely Derbyshire. They would soon understand the quiet inspiration that helps to mould and transform the young lives committed to our care, and cease to wonder that all over the world, from the distant plains of China and the furthest tributaries of the flowing Congo, loving hearts turn back in warm appreciation to the college days of long ago.

The great object of originally planting the Institute in this vast seething mass of toiling men and women in East London was that we should be able to avail ourselves of this magnificent sphere for practically testing and training our students in Gospel work. Already this session we have a special cause for gratitude in the marked blessing granted to our brethren and sisters, and we value such proof of fitness for missionary labour beyond almost any other.

Lately we have been obliged to expend £140 in the renovation of our central mission premises at Berger Hall. The members of the church, though many of them exceedingly poor, have themselves raised about half this amount, an ample token of their appreciation of blessing received. Extensive repairs to the roof of the College became absolutely necessary, and when to such expenses are added the ordinary outlay involved in training 120 missionary students, you will not be surprised to hear that we are needing £1000 in the general fund.

We have lately received a touching letter from the veteran African missionary, François Coillard, of the French Mission to the Barotsi. Our friends will remember that his devoted wife who, like himself, was a gifted missionary of life-long experience in Africa, died in the autumn of 1891. She worked with her husband for twenty-four years in the French Basuto Mission, and six years in the Barotsi country. Mons. Coillard, after thirty years in the field, might well have claimed a furlough, but he preferred to remain at his post, and has stayed there now for three years since his wife's death. He has spent altogether thirty-three years in African missionary work.

We regret to say that, on account of an empty exchequer, we are at present unable to pay in full the quarter's salary of the missionaries in the field, much less to put in hand orders for barter goods that have arrived from the Congo. But God remaineth, and our expectation is from Him, who has hitherto so wondrously upheld and blessed his servants.

SLAVE TRADE IN TRIPOLI.—The British and Foreign Anti-Slavery Society has received the following startling announcement from a trustworthy correspondent in Tripoli:—Here, under Turkish rule, the buying and selling of young boys and girls, chiefly the latter, is still regularly carried on, not publicly, of course, but the Turkish officers of the Army of Occupation are involved in it with the wealthier Arabs."

RAMABAI, THE WIDOW'S FRIEND.

(Concluded.)

RAMABAI'S astonishment on reading about the "woman of Samaria" was so great that she decided to go to England and see the state of woman in that country which had so strange a religion; whilst at the same time she would be able to study medicine and become better equipped for her life work. Her friends protested against this step as being simply one of madness, but to all their remonstrances and entreaties she could only reply that she felt constrained to go; something within was urging her on, and she must go, whatever the consequences.

The proceeds of a book she had written in Marathi supported her at this time and paid her passage to England; but on arrival there she had only seventeen shillings left, and no clear idea where she was to go or what was to become of her; but she had become possessed of the firm conviction that God was leading her on, and that she would be helped if she would only obey his guidance and go forward. She was unacquainted with English then, and arrived in London a stranger in a strange land, but some of the Wantage sisters in Poona had promised to have her met on her arrival in England, and well they kept their promise.

Strange to say, the very first Christian work she saw in that land was a home for fallen women, under the charge of the "Sisters;" and Ramabai was quite taken aback. She had never in her wildest imaginings supposed it possible that any human being could or would care for such outcasts, and she said to herself, "Well, this is a new kind of religion, which teaches its followers to raise the fallen. Why, the sacred books of the East tell us that salvation is for the wise and the good, and command very different treatment of the weak and helpless!" This was the turning point in her life. She found amongst the reclaimed one or two noble characters living devoted and self-sacrificing lives, trying in their turn to raise others, and she began again to study the Bible with fresh interest, in order to find out the secret of such a reforming power.

Shortly afterwards she accepted Christ as her Saviour, and was baptized into the Christian faith. The change in her feelings which led to this result was gradual; almost unconsciously she had begun to love Christ for his treatment of sinners, and as she continued reading about his life on earth, she said to herself, "There is hope yet for my poor people," and so she was led on, against her will—when she realised that she was drifting away from her old beliefs—to open confession of Christ. Those who wish to follow Ramabai to America, and see how she raised money to start a home for widows in India, will find the whole story clearly told by herself in the "High Caste Hindu Woman," a book which I should like to see in possession of everyone interested in the down-trodden women of the East. I will go on to speak of what I myself saw and heard when visiting that home, now an established fact, in spite of opposition, persecution, and threats, which would have daunted most people. The home is a success, and remains a standing witness to a simple woman's trust in a prayer-hearing and prayer-answering God.

There are fifty-six boarders and twenty day scholars, Ramabai informed me; and the house is a beautiful and spacious one, surrounded by a large garden. The schoolrooms are all that could be desired, and the bright and happy faces of the children were really most striking. To think what these little ones had been rescued from, and to see them there training for lives of usefulness as teachers, doctors, nurses, etc.; to hear the terrible histories of some of these helpless girls, and to see them living, "none daring to make them afraid," under the loving care of that motherly and saintly woman—it was enough to touch the most callous, and it showed to me, as nothing else in my experience ever did, the power of a consecrated life.

The school is supported by American benevolence. This support was promised for ten years, of which four yet remain, and it is Ramabai's earnest hope that it will then be self-supporting. To this end she is desirous of obtaining 200 acres of land, planting fruit trees, and preparing the soil meanwhile, that it may yield them an assured income in the future. No pressure of any kind is brought to bear on the girls in religious matters; the Bible and the sacred books of the East occupy the same shelves, and there is perfect freedom granted to Christian and Hindu alike; otherwise Ramabai could not have gained the confidence of Hindu parents sufficiently to have their children sent to live with her, had there been the least fear of their caste being broken. At the same time, there is the strong influence of daily contact with a godly and devoted woman, and that this influence tells there can be no question. Daily Ramabai has Bible-reading and prayers. The doors are open, all who wish may enter, and there must have been at least twenty girls present when I was there, listening with grave attention to the words of life. When these girls come of age to decide for themselves, there can be little doubt that some, if not many of them, will come out on the Lord's side.

One little widow I saw, aged thirteen, who had suffered terrible cruelty from the relations of her husband, and her face bore the marks in several places where they had branded her. Another eager-looking child, who promises, if spared, to be a capable and useful woman, was deserted when an infant, and left to perish. Then Ramabai found her, and after carefully bringing her up, successfully protected her against her relations, who came to take her away when she was about thirteen years of age, thus in all probability saving her from a worse death than the first. Again, when I was there, a widow came and handed over her child, a little girl of seven, to Ramabai, with a signed agreement not to re-claim her. Had Ramabai not taken charge of her, the little one would likely have been sold to the highest bidder. Is it any wonder that these children and girls cling to their protector with passionate devotion, and can hardly bear her out of their sight? They may well love her, for she has suffered greatly on their account, and would have been crushed, utterly crushed, long ago, if she had not learned to cast all her cares on God. This lesson it took her a long and weary time to learn, and it may be helpful to some of your readers to hear how she at last consented to surrender her will, and cease trying to carry her own burdens.

Attempts had been made again and again to ruin the school, and threatening letters had been sent to Ramabai if she would not give up trying to help the widows; but it was in 1893, only last year, that matters seemed to reach a climax. Then so-called reformers amongst the Hindus joined in the attack against her, because she allowed the girls to enter her room and listen to the Bible. They insisted upon her forbidding them. She declined absolutely, so they used their influence to undo her work, and succeeded in having about twenty-eight of her girls removed, and her friends feared that the school was going to collapse altogether; but this dark year was to bring to Ramabai the greatest blessing of her life. One trouble after another came upon her. Fever broke out amongst the girls; her own little daughter lay in the hospital with typhoid fever, at the point of death; the rains came, and washed down the wall which protected her Hindu girls from the Mohammedan population. The new school was being built, and to prevent the workmen robbing her she had to look after everything herself. Just at the point when, humanly speaking, she could not possibly be spared, she fell, and sprained her ankle. This was the last stroke. She felt hopeless and driven to desperation; no one to stand by her, and all the foundations giving way beneath her. Then, in her extremity, she threw herself at God's feet, and handed over to his care the little dying daughter, the school, and everything else that was weighing upon her, saying "Thy will" in every event of life, "not mine, be done." Immediately the burden rolled away, and she has been ever since enabled to trust Him fully, and remain calm and peaceful under the most trying circumstances. The circumstances remained the same, but the attitude of her heart towards God was altered. She had learned that the work was not hers but God's, that not the success of her own plans but God's glory must be the aim of her life, and in thus resigning her will she gained lasting peace. "Ramabai," I said to her, "do you never feel discouraged now when your enemies rise against you?" "Yes," she replied, "I have been tempted again and again since that day to lose heart, but I fly to my knees and to the Bible. I know of no other remedy, and this never fails me."

Altogether I was refreshed spiritually and cheered by my visit to the "Sharada Sadan," Ramabai's beautiful "home" in Poona, and I came away with renewed hope for India's women, when even from their present condition such an exalted character could spring. I sincerely trust that this short account of my visit may be the means of raising up many friends for "Ramabai" from amongst the readers of THE CHRISTIAN, who will stand by her and see to it that she is enabled to fulfil her heart's desire in putting this widows' home on a self-supporting footing.

MISS LEIGH'S HOMES IN PARIS.

HAVING returned from another eight days' visit to our Paris Homes, I am pleased to be able to report that I have found the work of these Homes going on well, and the lady workers at the various institutions harmoniously engaged in the many phases of operation which such a comprehensive Mission calls forth. It was pleasing to see Christ Church, Neuilly, well attended on Christmas Day, and to hear, at the afternoon service, the children from the Orphanage singing their Christmas carols, interspersed by short appropriate addresses by Rev. C. Humphry Minchin, who, with his wife, are devoting their energies to the building up of the congregation. The Colonial and Continental Church Society appears to have made a happy appointment, and the prayers and sympathy of all are asked, that the present incumbent and Mrs. Minchin may long be spared to labour in this important district. On the last Sunday of the old year there was a good congregation; the service was hearty and reverent, and the sermon excellent. The children from the Orphanage looked very nice in their winter costumes, as they filled the middle aisle of the church.

The Mother Home, 77, Avenue Wagram, is still doing a much-needed work, under the superintendence of Miss Bradbury, the lady in charge; and the Free Registry, under Miss Munday, continues to be most useful. The Home has been well filled all through the winter, and many situations are found for governesses and servants out of employment, whilst others are helped to return to their friends in England.

The work at the adjoining Mission Hall, superintended by Miss Carmichael, who is ably assisted by the Misses Watton, is now in active operation, and one had frequent opportunities of speaking at mission services, Bible classes for men, mothers' meetings, Band of Hope, and other meetings. The Sunday-school, under Miss Mitchell, is conducted here, and it was pleasing to hear the children repeating by heart large portions of the Word of God. Three times a week the soup kitchen is held, at which a portion of Scripture is read, with a short Gospel address. The watch-night service was conducted as usual, and notwithstanding the inclement weather there was a good attendance. I visited the Orphanage in the Boulevard Bineau on several occasions, and found the forty-seven children happy and well cared for by Miss Lawer, the new lady superintendent, who seems very popular amongst the little ones.

Owing to lack of funds, the apartment at 26, Faubourg St. Honoré, where much useful work has been done, has had to be relinquished, and the shop-girls transferred from there to the upper floor of Washington House, 18, Rue de Milan; arrangements having been made with Dr. Evans to receive into the Lafayette Home any of the lady students who wished to leave on account of this change. Miss M'Allister, the lady in charge, is doing her utmost, under trying circumstances, to re-establish the work at Washington House which for many years has been so admirably carried on by Miss Hockly.

These institutions for our country people are bright spots indeed in the French metropolis, but it is manifest that unless they are more generously supported by friends at home, the work will have to be still further curtailed. The directors have to face a serious loss by the lapse of the Galignani legacy of £300 per annum, in addition to which many old and valued friends of the association have passed away, and my sister's (Mrs. Travers Lewis) absence in Canada through ill-health this winter, which she had hoped to have spent on this side, makes the situation more trying. The work, which is unsectarian, calls aloud for the liberal and constant support of all who have the welfare of our friendless countrywomen and children at heart in the City of Paris. Miss Rhoda Mouncey, 22A, Queen's road, Bayswater, W., is secretary for England.

The Week of Prayer.

WEST-END MEETINGS.

These meetings, arranged, as in past years, by the Evangelical Alliance, are being held this week in Portman Rooms, Baker-street, W., the attendances having been so far satisfactory. The subject on Monday was:—

Praise and thanksgiving for the goodness and mercy which have followed us through the past year, for many answers to prayer, and for the continued spread of the Gospel. Humiliation and confession of grievous sins, of lukewarmness, of unprofitableness in the service of Christ, and of conformity to the world. Prayer for a deeper realisation of the power of the Holy Spirit in the Church by Christ dwelling and abiding in us; for greater faithfulness and for consecration to a holier life.

Sir William Willis, who presided, read Dan. ix. 3-19; prayer followed by General Sir R. Phayre and and others.

Rev. Walford Green, President of the Wesleyan Conference, spoke on the subject for the day. It was but right that the first note should be one of thanksgiving, in view of God's continuous mercies. If, however, it was true praise, it would lead to confession. The most solemn contrition arises from a deep sense of God's wondrous mercy. How imperfect has been our return for all his goodness. This confession must, like Daniel's, be full and deep, and must be made to the Lord alone. Thus coming, we may expect an answer in peace, for God is more ready to fill us with his Spirit than we are to ask.

On Tuesday the theme of prayer was the Church universal:—

Prayer for the whole Church of Christ; for the manifestation of the Spirit, in order to separation from the world, and sanctification unto the Lord; for greater unity among the followers of Christ; that the growth of Romanism and superstition, of Rationalism and infidelity, may be arrested; and that the hope of the Lord's second coming may stimulate believers both to wait and work for Him.

Rev. E. A. Stuart gave an address on Unity, pointing out that the epistle to the Ephesians may be summed up as having to do with sitting, walking, and standing. The first two chapters unfold the believers' position, as seated in Christ in the heavenlies. After a parenthetical section, Chapters iv. and v. 1-22 deals with walk—walk in relation to the Church, walk in private life, and walk in social relationship. Turning to chapter iv. 1-16, we find that with regard to the Christian's walk in relation to the Church, stress is laid upon unity and diversity. In the first part unity is urged, keeping "the unity of the Spirit in the bond of peace." Certain dangers to unity are also indicated. Then from verse 7 diversity is enlarged upon; for the unity is not uniformity. The various gifts entrusted to the members by the crucified and exalted Saviour are shown to be for the edifying of the Church. Then the Apostle points to the goal. "Till we all come in the unity of faith . . . . unto the measure of the stature of the fulness of Christ." Finally, three essentials to unity are insisted upon. "Speaking the truth in love," or "being truth;" the recognition of the supremacy of Christ, "who is the head, even Christ;" and lastly, the responsibility of each member to contribute something towards the edifying and knitting together of the body.

ALDERSGATE-STREET Y.M.C.A.

At the noon meeting, on Monday, at 186, Aldersgate-street, E.C., in the course of a helpful address, Rev. G. Turner, of Sutton, Surrey, pointed out the importance of taking advantage of such a season as this, to look backward and forward upon things belonging to our personal life and our duty to God. As we consider this, and our national life and the life of the world, we should be moved, on the one hand, to gratitude, and on the other, to confession and humiliation of soul. Proceeding to derive lessons from the conduct and words of Daniel in Babylon (Dan. ix.), the speaker showed that the man of prayer is the true patriot; men and women who thus live in communion with God are the salt of the earth. He who knows much of fellowship with God in prayer will assuredly know much of fellowship with Christ in suffering, and such an one will have a keen sense of personal unworthiness and the sinfulness of others.

Daniel had been studying the book of Jeremiah, and the person who would have an experience like his must be a Bible student. If we are to experience true humiliation and confession, and be a blessing to others, we must know our Bibles from beginning to end. Daniel said: "To Thee belongeth righteousness, but unto us confusion of face." If we realise the former, then we see the latter as never before. But a view of the righteousness of God by itself would paralyse us; hence we read the words of comfort, that to God also belong "mercies and forgivenesses, though we have rebelled against Him." If we want to be truly humble, personally, for our nation, and for our race, we must not look within or without—at opium drink, or lust, at bigotry, uncharitableness, or oppression—but we must look at the Cross and see what must be the heinousness of sin, that it should involve, on the part of God, such an expense in bringing about the pardon of sinners, so that He, the Just One, might also be the Justifier of him that believeth in Jesus. If the present year is to produce more men and women who shall lay hold on God for their fellows, it will be by a view of the combined righteousness and forgiveness of God. Moreover, the year will take its complexion from the fellowship that we have with God, and not from anything we may do of ourselves.

SOUTH LONDON.

Nightly meetings during the week were arranged for as usual in different parts of South London, in concert with those of the Evangelical Alliance in the West-End. That of Monday evening is, by long established usage, held in the Metropolitan Tabernacle. For years past it was the custom of Mr. C. H. Spurgeon to invite ministerial brethren from the district, of different sections of the Church, to meet him around the tea-table early in the evening, for fraternal converse and united prayer, preliminary to the public meeting in the Tabernacle. This excellent annual institution is being cordially upheld by his son, Pastor Tom, who, we may remark, seems to be treading closely and most acceptably in his venerated father's footsteps.

The little ministerial company in one of the lower rooms of the Tabernacle on Monday evening was altogether a delightful one—a real sample of the Evangelical Alliance spirit. There were some twenty-five brethren present, representing the Baptist, Congregational, Episcopal, Presbyterian, and Wesleyan, if not other denominations; with Mr. Arnold, secretary of the Alliance, as a welcome bond of union among all. After tea Pastor Spurgeon uttered some heartfelt words of welcome, and he with two other brethren led in prayer.

Mr. Arnold being called on for an address on the work of the Alliance, made a cursory statement which enchained the attention, and evidently secured the sympathy, of the little gathering. Touching first on the efforts of the Alliance in connection with a widespread observance of the week of united and universal prayer at the opening of each year, he circled the globe, so to speak, in a most interesting and gratifying account of the way in which Christians are drawn together at this special season, and of some of the results that have followed this union of prayerful hearts. He recalled the time, thirty-five years ago, when crowded gatherings were wont to fill Freemasons' Tavern twice a day during the first week of the year. If the meetings now are smaller, it is because they have become greatly multiplied. There are now as many as forty such centres of united fellowship throughout London. In his rapid summary, Mr. Arnold glanced at Canada, where the week is being increasingly observed; at the United States, where fifteen millions of Christians are said to join in this prayer cycle, and where, in recent years, remarkable Gospel revivals have followed its observance in many States; at South America, where little scattered bands of believers come together, notwithstanding the strife and turmoil of political life there; at South Africa, where Zulu and Kaffir had learnt the secret and the privilege of united prayer; at the South Sea Islands, with special mention of the wonderful survival of the observance in the Island of Maré, where the native Christians, deprived of their pastor and their church building, meet in lonely places to pour their sorrows and desires into the Divine ear; at China, Japan, and India, in each of which countries rich blessing has followed the coming together of God's servants; at Persia; and finally at Europe, where the outcomes had been marvellous, even in such lands as Turkey, Russia, Italy, and Austria. Of England it is of course needless to speak.

Then the Alliance secretary passed to a brief, but perhaps still more absorbing, review of the work of the Society in seeking to succour those suffering for Christ's sake, specially with reference to Turkey and Russia. We cannot repeat here all that Mr. Arnold said as to what the Alliance has done and is doing for these suffering servants of Jesus Christ; neither is it desirable. All who listened to the statement must have felt that the Alliance, in its special and necessarily restricted sphere of action, are straining every nerve and exhausting every resource, in order, by peaceful and Christian measures, to give freedom to these oppressed Christians for the worship and service of God according to their consciences. Mr. Arnold was not able, unhappily, to give much immediate hope of better things in the treatment of the Russian Stundists; but we must hope in God, who has the hearts of all men, rulers and governors included, in his hands, and who will doubtless interpose in his sovereign good time on behalf of his downtrodden children, who are being so harshly treated by those also calling themselves Christians.

At seven o'clock an adjournment was made to the Tabernacle for the usual public prayer meeting. The Pastor was in the chair, and conducted the engagements of the evening strictly on the lines of the Alliance programme. Among those who joined in thanksgiving, confession, or supplication were ministerial brethren belonging to all the sections of the Church we have already named. Had we not been told we should not have known by what names they were called among men: the spiritual accent was the same in every case, and all were evidently guided by the one Spirit.

The pastor's short address was framed closely on the set programme, and many were the golden words of wisdom that he uttered—reminding one at every turn of the sanctified common sense and spiritual insight of his gifted and much-loved predecessor in the pastorate. Some, he said, had experienced special mercies during the past year, for which they had to give thanks. But even those whose lives had been ordinary and humdrum could bless God as much as those who had gone through thrilling adventures, hairbreadth escapes, and the like, because of the mercy that had kept them from such unusual experiences. The answers to prayer would have been more numerous and definite if the prayers themselves had been more definite and specific. Generalities are the death of true prayer, whether public or private. While we have to thank God for the continued spread of the Gospel, we are humbled at the thought that so great an area of the world remains unevangelised. How far have we, as Christians by our lethargy and indifference, prevented its spread in our homes, our neighbourhoods, and through the world at large. There are many volunteer workers willing and waiting to go forth to heathen lands, but the Church apparently has not the means to send them. What need there is for confession of sin before God, for our lukewarmness in his service. This thing is so great a sin in God's sight that it might be said to sicken Him, so that He is ready to spue the lukewarm ones out of his mouth. God make us red-hot in his service. We need forgiveness, too, for our conformity to the world in our methods of work. Let all these things but make us more earnest in beseeching God for a fresh baptism of the Spirit, which will carry us over the barriers in a flood tide of gracious blessing, and enable us to go out to seek the lost ones and bring them into the haven of a Saviour's love.

Mr. Arnold again spoke briefly but most effectively on the blessings of the week of prayer, and the delightful service was brought to a close by further petition, and invocation of the Divine blessing throughout the year.

LET ME WORK, TOO.

Death worketh,
Let me work, too;
Death undoeth,
Let me do.
Busy as death, my work I ply,
Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

Time worketh,
Let me work, too;
Time undoeth,
Let me do.
Busy as time, my work I ply,
Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

Sin worketh,
Let me work, too;
Sin undoeth,
Let me do.
Busy as sin, my work I ply,
Till I rest in the rest of eternity.

CARRUBBERS CLOSE MISSION.

THE past year has been a most successful one in connection with the Gospel-temperance work of Carrubbers Close Mission. During the recent New Year holiday season great efforts were put forth. For some years the magistrates of the city have recommended the closing of all licensed places on New Year's Day. This year that recommendation was unnecessary, as the representatives of the traffic themselves ordered the closing of all places where liquor is sold on New Year's Day. This order was loyally obeyed, and the marked absence of drunkenness in the streets of Edinburgh on the first day of this year cannot but suggest what a changed state of things would occur were the drink traffic to be prohibited altogether.

On the evening of December 31, commencing at 8 o'clock, and lasting till the advent of the New Year, a reunion and watch-night service was held in the large hall of Carrubbers Close mission. Between 1400 and 1500 people sat down to tea. The speakers included representatives of nearly every Evangelical denomination. Mr. T. R. Marshall spoke of the progress of Temperance sentiment in Scotland. Mr. G. A. Barclay reported on the past year's work, showing most gratifying results. Rev. Rowland Ellis, of St. Paul's Episcopal Church, counselled the drawing into closer harmony all the forces at work for the overthrow of the drink evil, and the extension of Christ's kingdom. Principal Rainy emphasised the importance of a high spiritual standard, the necessity of Christians exercising self-denial, and living on a level which would commend the Gospel to the godless. Mrs. Amanda Smith followed with a striking personal testimony, and sang the hymn, "Keep close to Jesus." Mr. James Guthrie, of Brechin, in an address full of sense and humour, exhibited the evils of the liquor traffic, the sin of Christians being mixed up in it, and the danger to the community which had been created by the formation of limited liability companies in connection with breweries and distilleries. Ex-bailie Lewis tore to shreds the arguments in favour of the Gothenburg scheme; showing that while lowering the conscience of the community by participating in the profits of the traffic, it had been proved by statistics to have failed in checking the scourge of drunkenness. Other friends spoke. As the year drew to a close, Rev. W. D. Mackenzie, Morningside Congregational Church, gave a solemn and suitable address. The year was ushered in in silent prayer.

On the evening of January 2, a grand recital of sacred music by the Carrubbers Close choir and orchestra, with readings by Dr. Moxey, was given in the Synod Hall, which was crowded to overflowing. Dr. John Smith, of Broughton-place U.P. Church, presided.

TRANSIT.

BY DR. JOSEPH COOK.

THE world I own a little time:
All ages past
Are mine, for one in bonds sublime
Are first and last;
All men are one, or near or far,
As sky is one from star to star.

The young lamb thinks the world is new;
But long before
His passing day the skies were blue
In seasons four;
And lucent brooks had silver sheen,
And rainbows hung the hills between.

The young child thinks the world is young;
Time far gone by,
The sun and moon in heaven swung;
Eternity
Behind him lies; and so God's plan
Has ripened to the birth of man.

The world is mine a little space,
For others then;
But all who come to take my place
Are brother men.
A man am I; all men with me
Haste into vast eternity.

Stronger than death, or doubt, or tears,
Dazzling the sun,
Eternal light in God appears,
And by it won.
Him now we love, obey, adore,
Our HOME is He for evermore.

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

THE last month of the Old Year is not a good time for special efforts even in crowded districts, but during December some good work was accomplished in Mr. Charrington's Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end-road. As usual during this month, special efforts were made to reach the drunkard. The principal speaker was Mrs. Carrie Smith, of Burnley, whose powerful addresses relating her experience among the miners of the North were greatly blessed. A very large number of pledges were taken, and not a few gave themselves to the Lord. One man holding a very good position at the docks came in one night in a very shaky condition. He had been a great drinker. He signed the pledge, and gave his heart to the Lord. Both he and his wife attend the services now, and they say it is the first happy Christmas they have spent for many years. She with a radiant smile said one night: "I feel ten years younger since my husband has changed."

Another man, a city messenger, strolled in one night, and after interrupting the meeting a great deal from beginning to end, was spoken to. Next day he met Mrs. Smith, and asked her forgiveness, and then offered to sign the pledge, which he did; he is now a regular attendant at the services.

Three rough men, street hawkers, who can neither read nor write, signed the pledge, and so happy are they that their great delight is now to bring others to the meetings, and get them to follow their example.

Among the other speakers were Mr. T. W. Downs, Mr. Thos. Richardson (of Rotherhithe), Mr. Thos. Barker (of Newcastle), Mr. Chas. Green, Mr. and Mrs. Frank Clark, and Alderman Ben. Tillett.

The Sundays were taken by Mr. J. S. Harrison, whose powerful addresses have always been blessed to the salvation of precious souls, and believers have been built up and strengthened. On Watch Night the spacious building, accommodating 5000 persons, was filled in every part. Prior to the service, the Crusaders' Brass Band and choir marched round the streets in the vicinity of the hall, giving notice of the meeting. Mr. Harrison selected for his text "This day is salvation come to this house." He was most earnest, and it was a very solemn time; doubtless much heart-searching went on as he besought all to renounce the strong drink from that night, and give themselves to Christ. At the close an after-meeting was held, at which about 150 signed the pledge, and several decided for the Lord.

"MOUTH, MATTER, AND WISDOM."*

REV. THOMAS SPURGEON has written a vigorous New Year's letter to the members of the Open Air Mission, based on the motto for the year, "Now, therefore, go, and I will be with thy mouth, and teach thee what thou shall say" (Ex. iv. 12). Here are the concluding paragraphs:—"Was some worker thinking of giving up? Is there a ploughman inclined to look back? Has our heart begun to fail? This must not be! Till God revokes his order, till Jesus pays us off, be it ours to labour on. We dare not disobey.

To doubt would be disloyalty,
To falter would be sin.

Said the old salt to the young apprentice, 'Aboard a man-o'-war, my lad, there's only two things—one's duty, t'other's mutiny.' It is much the same with the servants of King Jesus. His discipline is strict though kind, and we are mutineers if we are not absolutely obedient. Like the servants and the centurion, we must go or come and do at his command. Only they complain of this who are not fully consecrated. 'But, beloved, we are persuaded better things of you, though we thus speak.'

"It was hard work starting Moses, but he ran well when he was once under weigh. The jibbing horse has grand paces when he once gets over the jibbing. Shall those who began without hesitation forget that they did run well? God forbid. 'Are you ready?' cries the starter, and at the crack of the pistol away go the racers. Are you ready for this New Year, for its toils, its trials, its triumphs? Then 'Go! and the Lord go with you,' shouts your friend the writer, and he runs, too, while Jesus answers, 'Lo, I am with you alway!'"

THE TEMPERANCE HOSPITAL has had 10,000 patients in its wards. "Stimulants" have been used only seventeen times. During the past two years no alcohol has been allowed at all, nor has any substitute for it been admitted.

GRAY'S YARD RAGGED CHURCH.

THE good work carried on all the year round at Gray's Yard among the casuals, tramps, and street-sellers, continues to prove a real service in winning lost men and women to the Saviour, rekindling hope, and restoring them to respectability. As customary on the first Sunday of the New Year, a special breakfast was given on Sunday morning. The gloom and fog outside were dispelled by the brightness and warmth inside, and well many of the poor outcasts seemed to know it. Over 600 wretched men and women were present, so that the room was crowded with the class the mission desires to help. When breakfast was finished, a short service was held.

A short address was delivered by Dr. Schofield, who said there was one sentence in the Bible which ought to be on the lips and in the hearts of all those present. The sentence was, "I will arise and go to my Father," but the difficulty lay in the two words "I will" and the opposite "I will not"; to have the strength to make up one's mind to say "I will," and the force to say "I will not." Many of his hearers would not be in their present position had they possessed this power. The speaker related an interesting story about the Queen. Some time ago he was visited by a poor woman named Vincent, who declared that the only friend she had in the world was her Majesty. On making inquiries he found that many years before the coxswain of the boat in which the Princess Victoria used to pass much of her time was taken ill at Southsea, and nursed by Mrs. Vincent until his death, the Duchess of Kent and the Princess showing great interest in his condition. The old lady was of opinion that the Queen must have forgotten the incident; but Dr. Schofield wrote and laid the facts before her Majesty, the result being that a few days later Mrs. Vincent had a kind letter from the Sovereign, accompanied by a post-office order.

Addresses were also delivered by Rev. W. Darlow Sargeant and Lord Kinnaird, who was in the chair. The chairman in the course of his address, said he would not give advice, for good advice was not often taken, but he would impress on the younger men that a knowledge of God would not only bring them good in the far future of eternity, but, by producing a better condition of life, would improve their material condition in this present life if only they would strive for themselves with all their energies.

SLAVE CHAINS AND GOSPEL CHIMES.

MR. T. L. JOHNSON has been holding a month of Gospel meetings in the various halls of the Winchester Soldiers' Home Evangelistic Mission, and great blessing has followed. Alike in speech and song he is a gifted evangelist, and the stirring incidents of his life gain for him a ready audience.

"I have known," he cries with yearning tenderness over the people gathered before him, "the awful bondage of a double slavery—slavery of body for nearly twenty-nine years to Southern masters, and slavery of soul to the devil. I know the glorious sense of emancipation from earth's slavery proclaimed by Abraham Lincoln, and the more wondrous, the more glorious freedom of salvation through Jesus the Son of God, and whom the Son makes free is free indeed. But I tell you, dear friends, saved or unsaved, if I had the power and was compelled to choose between going back to the bitterest slavery of the South, with its chains, its floggings, its whipping posts, its ignorance, its persecutions, but still to have my Jesus as my Friend and Saviour—to choose, I say, between all that with Christ, and the more attractive-looking life of a millionaire without Christ, without Jesus, I would say, "Here are my hands, bind them with chains; here is my back, scourge it as you will; treat me worse than your cattle, make me the victim of the most terrible type of earth's slavery, but still to have Jesus I would gladly choose to go back to all this."

Night after night the halls have been packed. In some of them people have been content to stand for an hour and a-half that they might drink in the words of life. All classes, all ages, have alike been drawn, impressed, and many blessed, and all our hearts and all our prayers follow him as he moves to other fields to tell and sing the old, old story of Jesus and his love.

ARTILLERY LANE MISSION.—Owing to the rebuilding of the premises in Steward-street, Spitalfields, the work is temporarily carried on at Fournier-street, corner of Brick-lane. This mission carries on lodging-house and rescue work, in addition to providing both spiritual and material help for the poor and destitute. The superintendent (Mrs. Finn) has, for the last four weeks, been confined to her room, but is now much better, although nearly entering on her 81st birthday. Her address is 29, St. Ann's-road, South Tottenham, N.

Letters to the Editor.

WILL REVIVAL COME IN 1895?

DEAR SIR,—This question has been forced upon me by a remark made in St. Martin's Town Hall on New Year's Day, "I believe we are on the eve of a mighty revival." And why not? Is there anything too hard for the Lord?

Briefly, there are three things which seem to indicate to me that there is "a sound of abundance of rain." First, the special rendering of praise to God which 1894 has witnessed. Never, perhaps, before in the annals of the Church have believers gathered in their thousands, from east and west and north and south, to give glory to God, as they did on April 11. To many of us that was a precious foretaste of the "morning without clouds," when with united voice we shall sing, "Worthy is the Lamb that was slain, to receive power, and riches, and wisdom, and strength, and honour, and glory, and blessing! Blessing and honour, and glory, and power, be unto Him that sitteth upon the throne, and unto the Lamb for ever and ever." And, moreover, it was surely an indication that a time of quickening was at hand. Praise for past mercies is an unmistakeable forerunner of more; when we send up glory to God a stream of blessing flows down to men. From the time we begin to sing and to praise our victory is assured. For the city of blessing is entered by the gate of thanksgiving. When Israel shouted the walls of Jericho fell down flat.

The second sign is a deep realisation of need, and an earnest longing for God. The yearnings of individuals or of multitudes for showers of blessing have ever been true heralds of revival. One has said, and it is the teaching of many Scriptures, that Christ ever demands in the soul that would enjoy the water of life, the existence of a definite wish, longing, yearning.

"Open your mouth wide and I will fill it. I will pour water upon him that is thirsty, and floods upon the dry ground. If any man thirst, let him come unto Me and drink. Thou visitest the earth and waterest it after Thou hast made it to desire rain. And the parched land shall become a pool, and the thirsty lands springs of water." Therefore, oh, that we might realise our spiritual poverty more. For the measure of our felt need will be the measure of our full supply.

The third sign is prayer. Desires have been awakened into holy activity, and God's children are beginning in real earnest to lay hold of God for a perishing world. Thousands of men and women have made a covenant, not in form but in fact, to cry and cry continually, "Wilt thou not revive us again, that thy people may rejoice IN THEE? O Lord, revive Thy work in the midst of the years, in the midst of the years make known." And God is not deaf to the cry of his people. "Thus saith the Lord, I will yet for this be enquired of by the house of Israel to do it for them." "Ask and ye shall receive."

O Lord, for thy great Name's sake, give to thy Church such a sense of thy presence, and such a manifestation of thy Spirit, that men shall be compelled to cry out, "This is the finger of God," and be led to turn to Thee from idols, to serve Thee and wait for thy Son from heaven.

Then, indeed, shall we have '59 repeated in '95!

MISSIONARY METHODS.

DEAR SIR,—With most of Mr. Storrow's observations on "Missionary Methods Abroad," thoughtful readers will be ready to agree; but in one respect—probably through an oversight—his reference to the use of medical skill, bracketed with "literature and education, commercial and agricultural self-support, woman's work, etc., etc.," calls for remark and indeed for protest.

Quite recently a medical missionary, magnifying his office, declared that no mission deserved to be called a Christian Mission unless it included a medical mission. Candid readers of The Church Missionary Intelligencer cannot fail to be deeply impressed by the remarkable articles in October and December, 1894, by Dr. Mears, of Foo-chow, in which are set forth in Scriptural and therefore forcible array the arguments for medical missions derived from the Gospels and the Acts of the Apostles.* The unrevoked commissions to the twelve in Luke ix. 1, 2, and to the seventy in Luke x. 9, if they stood alone, should be sufficient for any obedient disciple in our age; but conjoined with what seemed to be the daily practice of our Lord throughout the years of his earthly ministry, they are irresistibly in favour of a habitual conjunction of healing the body with ministering to the soul. "He knew what was in man," and what a strong persuasive there was to listen to the message of salvation when the messenger manifested his real interest by healing the disease or infirmity which afflicted the needy one before Him. This same persuasive is available now and everywhere, when the godly medical missionary offers the free salvation of Christ, and accompanies the offer with the endeavour, almost invariably successful, to alleviate suffering or cure disease. In the slums of our great cities at home, and amongst the heathen abroad; with Jews and Mohammedans, who are more inaccessible to the Gospel than any other people on the earth: the medical missionary will gain a hearing where others have failed to secure it.

There is something far nobler than to reckon oneself to be in what is called the Apostolic succession—a pious dream at best, and probably but a vain imagination. But it is not only possible, it is a real attainment in our age for hundreds of men and women to walk literally in the footsteps of Jesus Christ; this is the high distinction of every consecrated medical missionary and nurse; and I include in the honourable title "medical missionary" every Christian physician or surgeon who deals faithfully with his patients, every hospital nurse who speaks of the Saviour to the dying. Beyond all high-sounding titles, ecclesiastical or otherwise, young men and women may well strive to attain unto the privilege of becoming "imitators of Jesus Christ."—Yours sincerely,

JAMES E. MATHIESON,
Chairman, Medical Missionary Association.

CHRISTIAN MADNESS CONCERNING MONEY.

DEAR SIR,—One would rather discuss, in the pages of THE CHRISTIAN, the Christian ethics than the bare economics of this question. But I am under no such misapprehension as Col. Alves supposes. I maintain that it is the way in which savings are invested, through bankers and others, that is the great evil of our times. "Safe" rather than beneficial investments are sought: and interest is therefore mostly paid upon money that is non-productive (to use current inaccurate phraseology), such as war loans, company stock in excess of the real working capital, mortgages, and other forms of pure usury.

On this part, however, of the subject, let me commend to your readers the Daily Chronicle leader of January 3, on a striking article in the Investor's Review, a paper not likely to be biassed against saving and investing—or Flüscheim's "Rent, Interest, and Wages," written by a man who was himself on the Stock Exchange, and speaks of that he knows.

But the Bible knows no such distinction as that commonly made between usury and interest; nor, indeed, did the English language till modern times. Yet it is quite ignored by most Christians that the "usury" denounced in the Old Testament is a form of what we now call "interest," and has nothing whatever to do with any question of exorbitancy, as many suppose. All interest, in Biblical or Elizabethan English, is "usury." Interest or usury is simply a tax on the industry of the worker to enable those who do "not work" to "eat." So far as this enables people who can work but "will not," to live without doing so, it is an unmitigated evil. So far as it provides for a privileged few of those who are too infirm to work, it is a wasteful and unequal method, and not the method recognised by Christ.

Joseph's providence was wholly different from that of our own times. He saved corn that might otherwise have been wasted; we save money. He saved for others; we save for ourselves. Joseph's corn was God-created wealth; our money-savings are not "wealth" at all, but simply an instrument wherewith we may compel our working people to make what we wish, and for us, at the rate of remuneration we think proper, under pain of starvation. If they preferred starvation to doing so, not all his hoarded coins or "safe investments" could save even the millionaire from a like fate. But the most beneficial form of saving, the hoarding of actual food, God has made "naturally" impossible beyond certain limits; while our Lord expressly held it up to reprobation in the parable of the Rich Fool. Why? I can only conceive two reasons for the two facts. The first, because man will then better realise his constant dependence upon God; the second, because it is immoral to provide for our own possible future, so long as there are poor unprovided for their actual present needs.—Yours truly,

Dover. HENRY BAZETT.

ANTI-OPIUMISTS IN IRELAND.

THE Royal Commission still delays the issue of its report. The five volumes of evidence before the Commission have become public property, but the solidity of these volumes will probably deter many from perusing them. Anti-opium workers, however, are by no means inclined to sit with folded hands waiting for the report, nor do they admit that their position is at all weakened by the evidence given. On the contrary they are encouraged, knowing that the grounds of their main contentions have received strong confirmation by the replies which come from China in answer to questions sent out by the Commission.

Facts in this matter are all-important, and it is a cause for satisfaction that at this juncture, when many people are wishing to know the truth about opium, and about the evidence recently given in India on the subject, we should have the opportunity of hearing one who was himself a witness before the Commission, and who has taken much interest in the matter during his nine years' residence in India. Rev. Arthur W. Prautch, one of the missionaries recently imprisoned in Bombay, is expecting to be at the forthcoming annual meetings of the Irish Temperance League at Belfast on the 15th and 16th of January, by invitation of its secretary, Mr. William Wilkinson. He is a thoroughgoing temperance reformer; but his mission to this country is in connection with the opium iniquity.

Mr. Prautch will be pleased to address meetings in Ireland from the 18th inst., onwards, for two or three weeks, and he will be glad if those desiring his services will communicate with him, care of Mr. William Wilkinson, Secretary Irish Temperance League, 18, Lombard-street, Belfast.

DUBLIN PRISON GATE MISSION.

THE Dublin Prison Gate Mission, the headquarters of which are in 22, Blackhall-place, is about twenty years old. In a booklet on the work, just issued, entitled "Faith's Record," we read:—"The first year's earnings were about £160; those of 1893 reached nearly £2000. The attendance of women now is more numerous than at any previous period; ninety being employed in laundry work alone, and forty-seven at other occupations. Among our greatest encouragements is the interest evinced at the Gospel services, and in the daily teaching given in the Scriptures; also the attractiveness of the Mission to the younger women and girls.

"We owe these results, under God, to the steadfastness and devotion of many lady workers, who have long borne the burden and heat of the day, and the patient unwearying love of our lady superintendent, Miss Rice. Our readers are perhaps prepared to guess at some of our difficulties. Money is needed, but much more fresh helpers are needed; workers called of God, with prepared hearts ready to understand and to go forward in faith and love at the King's bidding."

The booklet shows that much difficulty arises from insufficiency of accommodation for carrying on the work. Further particulars may be had from the hon. sec., Mrs. Edmundson, Foxrock, co. Dublin.

SEAMEN'S CHRISTIAN FRIEND SOCIETY.—A series of interesting meetings was held last week under the auspices of this society at the headquarters, St. George's-street, London Docks. The watch-night service was largely attended by sailors from the Home in Well-street, and the shipping in the dock. It was followed by the sailors' annual festival on New Year's Day, and the list concluded with the monthly muster of the "Harbour Lights" on Thursday evening. The week's services will be long remembered by the large numbers present on each occasion.

THE L.M.S. CENTENARY.—The preliminary programme for the centenary celebrations of the London Missionary Society, which are to extend more or less throughout the whole of 1895, has been issued. The memorable meeting in the Castle and Falcon Hotel of January 15, 1795, will be commemorated by a meeting in the same place on the same date, followed by a large meeting in Falcon-square Chapel, at which Dr. Mackennal will be one of the speakers. The spring meetings include the Lancashire Union gatherings, at Southport, on March 6. In May Dr. Fairbairn is to preach the sermon in the City Temple and the Head Master of Mill Hill is to preside over a great meeting of young men. The June programme will include special meetings in Preston, and in June there is to be a children's gathering at the Crystal Palace. The meetings at Brighton during the last week of September are to be prefaced by a series of gatherings in London in commemoration of "Founders' Week," to which every contributing church in the kingdom is to be asked to send delegates.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

THE CONVERTED CATHOLIC.—Vol. XI. of this monthly, edited by Rev. James O'Connor, who was for many years a Romish priest, is an arsenal of controversy, which all Protestants will find interesting and serviceable. (1 dol. 50 cents. James O'Connor, 142, West Twenty First-street, New York.)

THE CHRISTIAN IRISHMAN. The twelfth annual volume of this monthly is a valuable repertory of facts about Romanism, and reasonable appeals to Papists to look from their system to the Christ of the Gospels. We trust its very informative pages will have an increasing circle of readers. (1s. Mecredy & Kyle, Dublin.)

JEWISH MISSIONARY INTELLIGENCER is an old friend. The volume for last year is full of information regarding the evangelisation of Israel, and there are many excellent engravings. Naturally, special prominence is given to the work of the London Jews' Society, of which this is the periodical organ. A companion serial for circulation among the young is the JEWISH MISSIONARY ADVOCATE, the annual volume of which is a storehouse of interesting and illustrated matter. (Nisbet & Co.)

DESTRUCTIVE CRITICISM EXAMINED.

Modern destructive criticism has been carefully analysed and correctly estimated in a valuable work issued by Messrs. Eyre and Spottiswoode, entitled LEX MOSAICA; or, The Law of Moses and the Higher Criticism (15s.). The stately volume consists of a series of essays by sound and sober scholars, the whole having been edited by Richard Valpy French, D.C.L., LL.D. It would not be reasonable to expect uniformity of excellence and force in the work of thirteen different scholars, however high their attainments or reputation; yet we have undoubtedly in these pages an armoury of facts and arguments against one of the most formidable adversaries of a firm and settled faith in the inspired Word of God. The late Bishop of Bath and Wells contributes an introduction; and Principal Waca concludes the book with a strong summary of the arguments for the integrity and authority of the Old Testament Scriptures.

The first essay is by Professor Sayce, who exhibits the archæological testimony to the literary activity of the Mosaic Age—a species of activity that was by no means allowed when the Higher Criticism made its earlier conquests, and which is not sufficiently acknowledged even now by a certain class of scholars. Canon Rawlinson having maintained the thesis, "Moses, the Author of the Levitical Code of Laws," Principal Douglas writes on "The Deuteronomical Codes," and Canon Girdlestone on "The Period of Joshua." The remaining essays are: "The Period of the Judges," by Dr. R. Valpy French; "Times of Samuel and Saul," by Rev. J. J. Lias, M.A.; "Period of David and Solomon," by Dr. F. Watson; "The Northern Kingdom," by Dr. J. Sharpe; "History of the Southern Kingdom in Relation to the Law of Moses," by Alexander Stewart, LL.D.; "The Eighth Century," by Professor Stanley Leathes; "The Seventh Century," by Dr. R. Sinker; "Ezekiel and the Priestly School," by Rev. F. E. Spencer, M.A.; and "The Post-Exilic Period," by Professor Robert Watts.

No quarter is given to those who would reconstruct Israelitish history on a naturalistic basis. An examination of the subject by periods, as here conducted, yields results that can be stated with striking succinctness. The student is abundantly convinced of the truth of the dictum, so amply illustrated by Professors Bissell and Green, of America, whose scholarship will be admitted by the most advanced of modern theorists:—"Alleged discrepancies appear only when the text is rent asunder." The continual fluctuation of Critical views, and the strife which "unites" the critics is abundantly shown. Of these latter Dr. Valpy French well says: "The key to their speculations is a denial of the supernatural in any form. Hence a revelation from above must be denied, miracle and prophecy must be discarded. The documents of the Old Testament must be manipulated to harmonise with the theory. The shifts, the resorts, the assumptions are endless. . . . The history, as viewed by all tradition, is a harmonious history; the supernatual is natural. No violence is done to the documents in their unity and mutual corroboration; and more than all, the authority of the Divine Founder of the New Covenant is left unimpaired. The Kenotic theory can never be sustained. The Son, ever indwelt of the Father, manifested this indwelling alike in work and in word. He Himself declares it: 'The Father which dwelleth in Me He doeth the works,' and 'the Father gave Me commandment (as to my words, whether in substance or in form of expression) what I should say and what I should speak.'"

The temper of the so-called Criticism is shown by its general contempt for any adverse judgment of its positions; but there are statements in this volume that will compel some consideration of the orthodox view. Those who have not given themselves over to a speculative theory will agree with Dr. Stewart when he says: "To the mind open to receive reliable evidence, nothing can be more satisfactory than that which supports the Mosaic authorship of the entire Pentateuch. Jesus Christ quoted from that Pentateuch, and his arguments could have had no logical conclusiveness, except on this recognised basis, that on its human side it was entirely the work of Moses. As the work of Moses, it is historically established, and Divinely authenticated. It is, therefore worthy of all acceptation. 'If they hear not Moses and the prophets, neither will they be persuaded though one rose from the dead.'"

PAROCHIAL SERMONS. By Rev. H. W. Dearden, M.A. (3s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) Upwards of twenty discourses—Evangelical as to substance and lucid as to style—dedicated to the author's former parishioners at Southborough, Upper Holloway, and Maidstone.

CHRISSY'S ENDEAVOUR, by Pansy, is an American story full of animation. We learn how Chrissy joined the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour, and what she did afterwards to get others to join. Some very interesting characters are introduced, and the book is sure to prove a favourite with Endeavourers. (2s. Sunday School Union.)

MOTHER AND SON; or, "I will," by Emma Marshall, is an addition to the very attractive "Home Words" series; and when it is said that the subtitle is taken from the marriage service, the substance of the concluding chapter may easily be guessed. Needless to say, the style is worthy of the highly-esteemed author. (1s. 6d. "Home Words" Office.)

AMONG THE ROSES, and other Sermons to Children. By Rev. S. Gregory. (2s. 6d. Wesleyan Sunday-school Union.) There are capital specimens of addresses to young people. The topics are catching; the illustrations are apt and plentiful; the language is simple and terse, and the lessons are admirably applied. In brief, they are model sermons for young hearers.

JOHN HORDEN, Missionary Bishop; A Life on the Shores of Hudson's Bay. By Rev. A. R. Buckland, M.A. (1s. Sunday School Union.) This is the latest volume of the "Splendid Lives" series. It is an inspiring story, admirably told; though as striking as a romance, the book is full of purpose. These are pages for young and old, and deserve many readers.

THE GREAT RECONCILIATION AND THE REIGN OF GRACE. By Edward Seeley, Vicar of The Martyrs, Leicester. This is a cheaper edition of a work of great value. We know no more useful exposition of the Atonement. Sound in teaching and untechnical in language, it is sure to prove of real service to those who desire to study with care and thoroughness the central doctrine of the Christian faith. (3s. 6d. Elliot Stock.)

THINGS TO COME (1d. monthly. Office, 29, Paternoster-row) pursues its course as an exponent of the prophetic Scriptures. The January issue contains addresses on various phases of "the blessed hope," by Dr. R. Anderson, Mr. George Trench, and Dr. Neatby. There are instructive studies on Biblical topics by Dr. Bullinger, Pastor F. E. Marsh, and others. These pages are worth reading and study, and those who give them this attention are likely also to keep them for future reference.

THE INFLUENCE OF JESUS CHRIST ON YOUNG MEN; or, The God-Man the Model and Maker of Christians. By Rev. William Unsworth. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly.) A series of addresses to young men, especially for such as are perplexed in regard to things of supreme moment. Mr. Unsworth earnestly commends the claims of the Lord Jesus to the reasonable mind; and his pages, sound and sensible throughout, and replete with illustrations and arguments of great value, are calculated to prove helpful to thoughtful readers.

DORCAS, and other addresses. By Jessie Coombs. (Torquay: E. L. Seeley. 2s. 6d.) Here are fifteen addresses by one who has for about a generation been labouring among young women. Miss Coombs's Bible-classes have been influential of much good, and her words as here printed are likely to prove a blessing to many. We shall be glad to know that this book, which gives a portrait of the author as a frontispiece, has many readers. One object in its publication is to raise money to help the work of the Torquay Y.W.C.A., of which Miss Coombs is the founder and devoted secretary.

SEVEN DREAMERS. By Annie Trumbull Slosson. (Osgood, McIlvaine, & Co.) The author has a loving human sympathy for the mentally afflicted, which enables her to see a method in their madness, and a wisdom working through their want of wisdom. She also is a close student of nature, and the dreams of her "dreamers" are not all dreams. They are weird yet pathetic pictures of human life. Occasion is taken to touch with a gentle sarcasm men's presentations of spiritual truth, but the writer represents herself rather as a looker-on than as one who has experience of the kingdom of God in the soul of man.

ANIMALS: THEIR PAST AND FUTURE. By G. H. Pember, M.A. (1s. nett. Hodder & Stoughton.) A slight but thoughtful study, in which Scripture is expounded as teaching that, even as the animal world came under a curse through the fall of Adam, so God's purpose involves a glorious future for the beast as well as man. At the same time it is shown that men are under obligations to act with tenderness in their treatment of dumb animals. The cherubim—partaking of features of a man, a lion, an ox, and an eagle—are explained to symbolise the various classes of the animal kingdom in the glorious future.

THE STORY OF THE L.M.S., 1795—1895. By C. Silvester Horne, M.A. (2s. 6d. Snow & Co.) This is a capital outline of the inception and operations of a great society. Maps and illustrations assist the reader to digest the story as the scene changes from the South Seas to Africa, from the lands of the Orient to Madagascar. We here renew acquaintance with some of the giants who have served the modern missionary cause; and great events in relation to the Kingdom of God are associated with their names. This handsome volume should stimulate the supporters of the L.M.S., and cheer the hearts of all friends of missionary enterprise.

MY HAPPY HALF CENTURY. By Frances E. Willard. (3s. 6d. Ward, Lock, & Bowden.) There are few living women whose lives have been so full of consecrated and successful work for humanity as Miss Willard; and still fewer so well-qualified to write such a life history. She has been a pioneer in many of the great movements that are now absorbing the energies of the best women of our time, and the record she gives in these pages is a truly inspiring one. The note of perfect frankness pervades the whole narrative, and that very frankness, added to transparency of motive, removes all suspicion of egotism. Lady Henry Somerset's introduction is almost too brief and restrained. We trust many Englishwomen who read this life story will drink in and live out some of that spirit of devotion to God and duty which it illustrates so remarkably.

HEAVENLY PEARLS SET IN A LIFE.—Our publishers (Messrs. Morgan & Scott) have received a few copies of this work by Mrs. Lucy D. Osborn, of the Training Institute, Brooklyn, formerly Miss Drake, one of the sisters connected closely with Dr. Cullis, of Boston. Later she went to India, marrying there a missionary with whom she was by-and-by led into a very special service in connection with a Missionary Training College. As to the book, Bishop Thoburn, of India, writes: "Mrs. Osborn's book is a genuine production. It is taken directly from the life, from real life, and hence is interesting from the first page to the last. I finished the book at two sittings, and although I had known the author for many years, page after page filled me with surprise, by giving me glimpses of events and experiences of which I had never heard. I sincerely hope the book will have a wide circulation."

FOREIGN MISSIONS AFTER A CENTURY. By Dr. J. S. Dennis, of Beirût. (5s. Oliphant, Anderson, & Ferrier.) This book, published originally in America, consists of six lectures given by Dr. Dennis at Princeton Theological Seminary. The lectures are the outcome not only of much study and research, but of large missionary experience. While recognising the great triumphs that have been achieved in heathen lands by Christian missions during the century of their existence, the author has a due appreciation of the difficulties to be overcome, and of the many intricate problems that surround this vast theme. He has surveyed the great world-field with a Spirit-enlightened eye, and writes in no pessimistic tone as to the ultimate result of Gospel effort. Comprehensive in scope, the lectures are attractive and cultured in style. Prof. Lindsay writes an introduction, and there is an admirable index.

WILLIE WESTON'S WONDERFUL SIXPENCE is a story for boys, by Dorothy Townshend. (Elliot Stock.)

UNDER HIS WINGS, or Reflections for the New Year, by William Firth, is a booklet which many will find helpful. (1s. per packet. Partridge & Co.)

THE CLERICAL MISSION CALENDAR AND CHRONICLE FOR 1895 (6d. Elliot Stock), is a manual having special attractions for clergymen of the Church of England.

THE LINK is the organ of the Praying Band in connection with the northern branch of the South African General Mission. The December issue (copies of which may be obtained from the secretary of the Mission, Mr. A. E. Mercer, 2, Berkeley-terrace, Wimbledon) contains reports of addresses delivered by Rev. Andrew Murray and others at the Johannesburg Convention.

THE Y.M.C.A.

Lincoln Y.M.C.A. has started a small weekly Association Bulletin, in which to chronicle the doings and engagements of each succeeding week.

Mr. T. A. Bailey is resigning the general secretaryship of the Cork Association, hoping in future to devote much of his time honorarily to Y.M.C.A. and other Christian work.

A meeting was held in the Town Hall, Ware, last Tuesday night, to inaugurate an Association. About twenty names were subsequently enrolled, and committee and officers duly elected.

A well-attended New Year's Social Reception was held at the Hackney Association on Thursday last. On Sunday evening the Bishop of London preached on behalf of the Association in St, Michael's Church, Hackney.

Mr. R. D. Thomas, who has acted as honorary secretary of Bangor Association since its inception several years ago, has accepted a call to the pastorate of the English Congregational Church, Bagillt, Flintshire.

Lord Radstock will give in New Brighton, in connection with the Y.M.C.A. and Christian Mission, a series of addresses on the Christian life and the Gospel, in the Victoria Hall, from Monday, January 14th, to Thursday, 17th; afternoon at 3.15, and evening at 8 p.m.

A meeting of young men interested in the formation of an Association in the Bow district was held on Monday week at the People's Palace. Messrs. R. Burn and F. L. Porter attended as a deputation from the parent society. Members were enrolled and officers elected.

During the last three months a series of Christian Evidence Lectures, attended by many young men, but open to ladies, has been given on Sunday evenings after service hours, in the rooms of the Swansea Association. The addresses were much appreciated and very hopeful.

On Thursday evening, Mr. W. R. Lane, evangelist, delivered a New Year's address to men in the small hall, Exeter Hall. There was a large attendance of young men, and Mr. Lane's impressive remarks were listened to with the utmost attention. Lord Bennet and other friends sustained a part in the meeting.

The Camden-road Magazine says: Out of the large number whom it has been the secretary's privilege and joy to welcome as strangers or inquirers during the past few weeks, seventy-nine have identified themselves with one or other of the Association's engagements, and for this we heartily praise God.

Mr. R. D. Pringle, late general secretary of the Walsall Association, sailed on December 27, by the P. and O. ss. Shannon, to take up the work in Bombay to which he has been appointed by the English National Council. At the meeting held for the purpose of bidding Mr. Pringle farewell and Godspeed in his new enterprise, Mr. F. B. Allen, of Liverpool, was cordially welcomed as his successor at Walsall.

In a sleepy hollow amongst the mountains of co. Wicklow lies the town of Tinahely. In this isolated spot there flourishes a vigorous branch of the Y.M.C.A. The annual meeting was held on Jan. 2, when the report showed that a weekly Bible-class had been maintained, and a successful mission conducted in the Town Hall by Rev. Phillip Johnson, of the Irish Church Mission. Addresses were delivered by Messrs. W. A. Boyd and Robert McCann.

The Anglo-American Y.M.C.A., 160, Rue Montmartre, Paris, and the Y.P.S.C.E. (Wesleyan) conjoint arrangements for lonely young people on Christmas Day were a decided success. Twenty-one young ladies and gentlemen enjoyed a splendid dinner, presided over by the general secretary, Mr. H. E. Kinsley, and passed a pleasant afternoon at the rooms of the Y.M.C.A.; and over thirty attended the tea and evening meeting at the chapel. Through the medium of the Y.M.C.A. many young men were enabled to pass the day in family circles.

At the last meeting of the executive committee of the Irish Union of Y.M.C.A.'s most interesting reports were given of the work in Ireland. Ballynalinch (co. Down) Association was admitted to the Irish Union. At Omagh a new Association has been formed, rooms procured, and of the £60 required for furnishing and up-keep for the first year £50 has been promised. Fine cottage meetings are conducted by the members every Sunday in the town, and a capital work is being carried on. Dundalk has just procured new rooms at a cost of £600. Three meetings are held weekly, and at the children's service on Sunday the average attendance numbers about 200. Ballynalinch new Association has now procured rooms. At the Bible-class there was an attendance of twenty-six in a town of 1500 inhabitants. During January Mr. McCann will be visiting mid-Ireland and south of Ireland districts—Dublin, Tinahely, Kingstown, Cork, and southern towns.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The mission services at the Central Institute this month are to be conducted by ladies (all of whom have been much used of God in evangelistic work)—viz., Mrs. Legg, Mrs. Head, Miss Laura Barter, and Miss Rouse.

A meeting of the Morley Halls and Old Cavendish-street workers was held at 316, Regent-street, to pray for the blessing of God upon the work of the New Year. Major Lombard presided, and gave a helpful address upon the "Faithfulness of God."

The new fold-over Y.W.C.A. Almanack issued this year in place of the usual sheet is a great improvement. It is printed on toned paper with a cord for hanging, is illustrated, and contains useful information of the Y.W.C.A. The price is only 1d.

The New Year's social gathering of Y.W.C.A. members and friends in connection with the Brighton Central branch was held on January 3rd. A large number assembled, and a bright pleasant evening was spent. At the close an address was given by Miss Gregory on the words "We would see Jesus."

The Glasgow Y.W.C.A. had their usual New Year's Day reunion of members and associates, when their hall in Bath-street was crowded to its utmost capacity. Mrs. Mirrlees, president of the Association, and Miss Agnes Gibson, China Inland Mission, gave addresses, and Miss Jane Hay read a story, illustrated by limelight views.

In connection with St. James's, Hatcham (Rev. H. E. Stone), there is an active Y.W.C.A. centre, with rooms at 62, Lewisham High-road. Sums of between 1d. and 1s. are collected systematically each month towards foreign missions, a Bible-woman is supported in China, and the balance sent to the C.M.S. A contribution of £500 has been received, which it is purposed to devote towards the purchase of institute premises.

The Dundee Y.W.C.A. had a good meeting the other day in connection with the Letter Mission of the Association. Miss Jessiman said the Letter Mission was started in the old rooms of the Association in Bankstreet about ten years ago. There were only ten workers connected with it at that time, and about 400 letters distributed every month. There were still the ten heads, but these were now assisted by eighty-nine or ninety workers, while 1600 letters were distributed monthly.

The Bermondsey Y.W.C.A. held its annual Christmas fête in the Institute on Thursday week for the seniors, and Friday for the juniors. The Ministering Children's League of Richmond, Time and Talents of Weston-super-Mare, and other friends provided gifts. Our junior branch has the largest roll in London. The Ready Band works steadily, and the Bible-class on Sunday, with its subsequent prayer-meeting and tea, is the best attended of all.—J. Katherine Wyatt, Local President.

FROM THE BACKWOODS.

The following appears in Brief Notes, the organ of the Christian Colportage Association, 37, Farringdon-street, E.C.:—

A very interesting and encouraging case of conversion has come under my notice quite lately. A woman came to see me in the market, and told me that she had just received a letter from her son, who is living out in the backwoods of America, and he says:—"Since I have been out here, far away from all churches, chapels, and preachers, and out of the reach of any books, I have been led to read Songs and Solos, which I purchased of the Colporteur in Ulverston Market just before leaving England for America, and God has blessed the reading of that book to the conversion of my soul. I was led by the Holy Spirit to believe in the Lord Jesus Christ to the saving of my soul. To God be all the praise.

"Now I am going about among the people round here, holding meetings, singing those Songs and Solos, and preaching to them Jesus and the Resurrection, and God has been pleased to bless my efforts among these people, who have come, I suppose, from almost all parts of the world."

THE BUSY MOTHER need not be cross. "Oh, I cannot help being irritable; it is my natural disposition; I shall always be just so," one may say. We have known mothers to come to this hopeless conclusion, but we always say in reply, "That is just what grace is for; to give us a new nature which shall be quiet, sweet, tender, loving."—Home Messenger.

THE DIRECT VETO.—Replying to a resolution of the Midland Liberal Federation, urging that the Government should give precedence to the Direct Veto, and answering a letter of protest against the municipalisation of public-houses, the Chancellor of the Exchequer writes as follows:—"You need be under no apprehension lest the Government should in any way depart from their intention to press the measure of temperance reform founded on the principle of direct veto."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

Seventeen members of South Australian societies are now labouring in foreign missionary fields.

The Endeavourers of Liverpool and district held last week a capital Convention to start the new year. Revs. J. Muir, E. Peake, E. T. Reed, T. Ride, A. Johnson, and J. C. Elder, were amongst those who took part.

Delegates from seven societies were present at the first annual meeting of the Dakota Union of Indian Societies, when the report of the Cleveland Convention was given in both English and Dakota by Jonas Spotted Bear.

At the end of each month each member of the Society of Seattle, Wn., is asked to hand to the look-out committee replies to such questions as these: Have you made any calls in the interest of church, Christian Endeavour, Sunday-school or missionary work this month? Have you attended the church prayer meeting regularly? Have you spoken with anyone about accepting Jesus Christ for his Saviour and uniting with the church? What other definite work have you done?

A largely-attended consecration meeting in connection with the Central South London Union was held at Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, on Tuesday evening last week, Rev. F. B. Meyer presiding. The motto text for the year was given, "Thy servants are ready to do whatsoever my Lord the King shall appoint" (2 Sam. xv. 15). Mr. Meyer urged the members to be at all times ready for the work. The societies represented gave their various mottoes, and addresses were delivered by Revs. J. Flanagan and W. Williams and Mr. Newton Jones.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Last Sabbath Mrs. Baeyertz began a mission at Langside Free Church, Glasgow.

A short daily religious service is now held in St. Cuthbert's Church, Edinburgh, from 5 to 5.30 p.m.

Mr. Wm. Quarrier, of Glasgow, has received the gift of another cottage home for Bridge of Weir, to be erected in memory of the late Mr. E. Maclay, a friend of the Orphan Homes.

Rev. George Wilson, of St. Michael's, Edinburgh, is to deliver during the present month a course of six lectures on Pastoral Theology to the divinity students of the University of Aberdeen.

The death is announced, at Leith, of Mr. W. S. Hogben, one of the assessors of income tax, Edinburgh. He had for many years taken a lively interest in religious and philanthropic affairs, conducting, with the help of his son, a mission for the poor in Leith.

At the Glasgow noon prayer-meeting, the services were extended to two hours daily throughout New Year week. Lord Overtoun, Rev. F. H. Robarts, Rev. Wm. Ross, Rev. G. L. Carstairs, Mr. W. M. Oatts, and other directors of the United Evangelistic Association gave addresses.

Dundee has, it is to be hoped, a unique experience in the way of drunken ministers. Rev. A. J. Forson, of the E.U. Church, told his congregation that it would be a good thing if some of the ministers stopped drinking. Not very long ago two of his friends found a minister drunk on a Saturday night, and heard him preach next day.

New Year's Eve is increasingly observed in Scottish cities by Watch-night Services. In Glasgow there was the usual supper to the poor attending the Lent Hall Meetings. The large hall was crowded with about 2500 people, and at every door stood clamorous groups outside needing the police to keep them in check. A succession of short addresses and choir and solo singing filled up the time from eight o'clock till midnight. On New Year's Day and the following days the Lent Hall was opened at least twice every day, in order to give occupation to the hundreds of idlers whose only other resource was the public-house. Meetings of various kinds were held, and the workers had a busy time. In Bethany Hall, where meetings were held nightly, the attendances numbered from 1000 to 1500. Many Mission Halls were also open each night, workers generally being alive to the necessity of providing some resort for the holiday evenings, which are so full of temptation. The annual supper given in the City Hall to 1500 respectable poor folks, took place on Friday, January 4.

REV. WALFORD GREEN, president of the Wesleyan Conference, in a pastoral to his brethren in the ministry at home and abroad, and through them to the Methodist people, speaks in cheering terms of the present spiritual state of the Wesleyan Methodist Church, and remarks that everywhere there are most cheering indications that God is working in the midst of his people.

OBITUARY.

M. LOUIS PETITMAITRE.

Swiss Protestants are mourning the death, at the age of sixty-four, of M. Louis Petitmaitre, banker, Neuchatel, for many years member of the College of Elders and deputy to the Synod of the Independent Church. A man of childlike and joyous faith, he was abundant in good works, benevolent towards all, and devoted to the cause of missions, especially in Spain.

FRAU VON BODELSCHWINGH.

We have to record with much regret the recent death of the wife of Pastor Von Bodelschwingh, of the German "Colony of Mercy." All through her married life, since the birth of her first child, she has been subject to recurring attacks of brain disease, and it was this distressing malady which carried her off. She was laid to her rest amid the lamentations of the whole colony, to whom she had acted as a true "mother."

COUNCILLOR ELI BLOOR.

The death is announced of Councillor Eli Bloor, of Birmingham, which occurred on Monday at Bournemouth, where he had been staying for the benefit of his health. He was a man of powerful physique, but a series of domestic bereavements shattered his physical fabric. There are three surviving children. Mr. Bloor was fifty-one years of age. He was a representative working man in the truest sense of the term. From the age of twenty-four he regularly discharged the duties of a local preacher of the Methodist communion. Mr. Bloor's name was included in the list of city magistrates recently appointed.

MR. JAMES BOLTON.

A veteran Halifax teetotaler passed away Monday morning in the person of Mr. James Bolton. He was in his eightieth year. He was born at Ovenden, and at the age of six went to work as a half-timer. He became a teetotaler in 1842, and in 1892 his "jubilee" was celebrated at a social meeting held in connection with Square Congregational Church, of which Mr. Bolton was a member. He has been a zealous advocate of temperance in connection with the Halifax Temperance Society and other kindred organisations. He was for a long time employed by Messrs. Crossley, and for the last four years has been an inmate of the Joseph Crossley Almshouses.

MISS AGNES LIVINGSTONE.

Miss Agnes Livingstone, sister of the late Dr. Livingstone, the celebrated African missionary and traveller, died last week at Kendal, the residence of her niece, at the age of seventy-one. She was the younger daughter of the late Mr. Neil Livingstone, of Blantyre, Lanarkshire, who was of devout and exemplary character, and a great reader, especially of travels and missionary intelligence. Miss Livingstone was ten years younger than her brother, and at the time when he devoted himself to missionary enterprise and set sail for Africa, to join Moffat's settlement at Kuruman, she was but seventeen years of age.

DR. ARCHIBALD REITH, ABERDEEN.

The death of this well-known doctor deprives the Aberdeen community of a zealous and successful Christian worker. His memory will always be associated with the Porthill Sabbath School. In a history of the school published recently, Dr. Reith gave an interesting account of the incidents which led up to his appointment as superintendent. The school has been the means of doing a vast amount of good in the Gallowgate district. The deceased was a Free Churchman, and was long connected with the Free South congregation, in which he held office as an elder. Latterly, he become a member of Queen's Cross Church. Dr. Reith was about sixty years of age.

REV. G. PRATT, SAMOA.

The death is announced of Rev. George Pratt, pioneer missionary at Samoa, and, with the exception of Rev. J. B. Hare, of St. Arnaud, Victoria, the only survivor of the early band of Samoan missionaries. He died in November last, after a long and painful illness. He went to Samoa in 1838, under the auspices of the London Missionary Society, with the late Rev. William Howe. In addition to his ordinary work, Mr. Pratt lend valuable aid in the translation of the Scriptures into the Samoan language, and he compiled a Samoan dictionary and grammar. He died at the ripe age of seventy-seven, leaving a widow and twelve children.

REV. GEORGE KENYON.

Many will hear with regret of the death of this able minister of the Gospel. He had been very ill and in great agony for some weeks, but got ease from pain, and was able to go to Eastbourne rather more than a week ago, and seemed to benefit by the change, when fresh alarming symptoms appeared, and he was brought home. There he lingered until New Year's morning, when he died. Mr. Kenyon entered the ministry in 1861, and for the past four years had devoted himself with much enthusiasm to the work of the Allan Library. He was an able, useful preacher, on the old lines of early Methodist preachers. He carried no half-Christianity with him when he mounted the pulpit. He preached practical sermons, but not as that word is used as opposed to doctrinal Christianity. He fed the people with strong fare—with the great truths of God and the Scriptures.

REV. GEORGE RODGERS.

I write to inform you of the death of my father, Rev. Geo. Rodgers. He had for several years been in feeble health, but had never given up preaching the Gospel. For several years he had not been able to take a charge, but had done faithful work preaching for pastorless churches and at missionary stations, whenever his health permitted.

My father had been in the ministry fifty-two years. He often expressed a wish to die "with the harness on," and to be spared a lengthy illness; both of these wishes were granted him. The Sunday before he left us he preached a powerful and touching sermon from John iii. 16, and in the evening he lectured on "John Bunyan and His Times." Death to my father was truly a "going home," to which he had long looked forward with most pleasurable anticipations. On the evening of Dec. 11th he retired in usual health and in good spirits; in two hours he had reached the end of his journey and quietly entered the eternal home. You will remember publishing Mr. Rodgers' book, "The Gospel According to Moses," several years ago.

My father valued your paper highly, and after reading it himself always gave it away to those who were interested in the message it brought.

LAURA H. RODGERS.

EVIAN-LES-BAINS, HAUTE SAVOIE.

As a result of the settlement here, in 1887, of two ladies from England, there are now two mission halls, a resident evangelist and colporteur, and a Bible woman and nurse. Evangelistic and temperance efforts are being well sustained, and the work among various classes is full of interest. There is now no open opposition; and as the civil authorities allow liberty, the priests can only work by threats to prevent the people from attending the meetings or sending their children to the school and classes.

The report for last year contains some cheering incidents. Among these is the story of an old man, aged seventy-three, who was found ill in bed reading the New Testament. As a lad he was destined to be a priest, but had not entered that office. The name by which everybody, even his wife (an infirm old lady of eighty), calls him is "Le Curé." He had been a drunkard, and a very wicked, passionate man, and, as he said, without any religion. The frequent visits, the reading of God's Word, and of the book, "Christie's Old Organ," were blessed to him, and he received the Gospel like a little child. A month after he signed the pledge, and has not touched anything intoxicating since. His wife is now recovering from a severe illness, and because she did not wish to confess to M. le Curé, who came to see her, the neighbours have completely abandoned them. He has had a paper written out, to say he wishes to be buried by the evangelist, and not by the priest.

Visiting is one of the most important branches of the work of the Mission, and it is, for the most part, done by ladies. A free library is a useful adjunct. An appeal is made for more workers, who should be self-supporting. Communications may be addressed to Miss Wellington, Evian-les-Bains (en transit, via Bellegarde pour la zone Franche), Haute-Savoie, France.

THE DUTCH BAPTIST UNION has now fourteen associated churches, doing a noble work among young men and maidens in Sunday-schools and among the perishing crowds around. Ten of these churches report additions. In one case eleven members, in another sixteen, in another fifteen members, and so on. There are also four other Baptist Churches not yet associated with the Union, making a total of eighteen churches with about 1500 members, ninety-nine out of every 100 of whom are converts from the lost multitudes around, and not transfers from other churches. The spiritual destitution of Belgium is still a matter of grave concern. For £45, or £90 per annum, the Dutch committee could at once despatch one or two missionaries into Belgium, where out of a population of five millions there are less than 15,000 Protestants, all told. The representative for Great Britain is Mr. R Klickmann, 82, Ondine-road, East Dulwich Green.

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Jas. Chalmers, of New Guinea, will address the noon prayer-meeting at Aldersgate-street, E.C., on Monday next.

Mr. John MacInnes, M.A., well known at Exeter Hall, has been ordained by the Bishop of Liverpool to the curacy of St. Andrew's, Southport.

Sister Edith, of the West London Mission, was recently elected to the St. Pancras Board of Guardians at the top of the poll by a large majority.

Rev. S. R. Crockett, of Penicuik, has resolved to sever his connection with the Free Church of Scotland ministry, and devote himself entirely to literary pursuits.

Rev. W. Dickens Lewis, D.D., who has been ill since his return from Rome last summer, is now somewhat better, but it is feared he will not be able to resume his duties in connection with the Bible Society for many months.

Rev. G. D. Macgregor has closed his forty-two years' pastoral work. The farewell meeting, held on New Year's Eve in Paddington Congregational Chapel, was of the most touching character, many of the neighbouring ministers uniting with the congregation in expressions of deep regret and warm regard.

Rev. Hugh Price Hughes, looking well after his long absence, preached on Sunday evening in St. James's Hall, directing his vigorous discourse to a condemnation of lukewarmness and an appeal for whole-hearted consecration. An enthusiastic welcome-meeting was held on Monday evening in Craven Chapel.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown seemed in his accustomed vigour on Monday evening, when the twenty-eighth anniversary of his ministry at Bow was celebrated. A cloud appeared, however, to hang over the proceedings. The Pastor's friends and helpers are sorrowing that the day is not far off when he will resign the pastorate, and go to the Antipodes with his wife, who has for so long been a confirmed invalid.

Bishop Thoburn arrived in Bombay last Sunday evening (says The Indian Witness of December 15), and on Tuesday proceeded to Poona to meet the Bombay annual conference, which convened in that city. He returns to India in excellent health, but contrary to his previous plans and to the expectation of his friends, will be obliged to return to the United States in the latter part of March. This change of plan is owing to the severe financial pressure caused by the panic of last year.

Rev. Walter Mathams, late of Wycliff Church, Birmingham, has accepted an appointment with the British and Foreign Sailors' Society. Having spent several of the early years of his life at sea, and having had later experiences of travel, he has exceptional gifts to advance the forward movement of the society in its recent and projected extensions. The friends of the society, and of the great mercantile marine, are thankful to have secured his services as their special representative and association secretary for a portion of Great Britain.

Dr. Joseph Cook, of Boston, has amalgamated his serial, Our Day, with The Altruistic Review, and the combined magazines will be issued monthly. Mr. Cuppy, of the Review, will be assistant editor and business manager. This arrangement will leave Dr. Cook more free for his public work. He is under urgent invitation to make another lecturing tour of the world. Were it not for the war between China and Japan, and the commercial depression in Australia, he would probably have been making the tour at the present time. He is now beginning hi twentieth series of Boston Monday lectures.

Rev. Henry Buckenham, who, with his wife ace Rev. Arthur Baldwin, holds the fort on the Zam is a pioneer of conspicuous ability. M. Coillard— letter in the latest issue of the Journal des M Evangéliques, says: "If I admire in Brother ham the energy, perseverance, and skill wh saved his expedition; and in my still young Baldwin his gentleness, intelligent humility; I must say that the patien Buckenham has profoundly impressed should not lightly award the title one who seems to be a hero real heroes in the shade, who toil, in silence. EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Walborough, Oxford.—Mr. J. Crofton Rainey has closed a quiet but very real work in this village. He asks prayer for a fifteen days' mission he is about to begin at the Y.M.C.A., Wallingford.

Gospel Services have been held in Ballinamore, co. Leitrim, by Rev. Henry McConnell, Methodist minister, Dungannon, and in Lagan View Mission Hall, Belfast, by Mr. Jas. Dixon, of the City Mission.

The People's Hall, Chalton-street, Euston-road.—A series of lantern Services on Sunday evenings have been held here, attracting hundreds who had not been reached before. There is much need of earnest Christian effort in this district, and the missionary will gladly welcome workers not otherwise engaged. Prayer is requested on behalf of this work.

Calcutta.—Special services are being arranged for Calcutta in February. Rev. John McNeill is expected to arrive in this city on the 6th of that month, and it is hoped he will be able to remain for three weeks. The plan is to have a large tent on the maidan in which the services will be held. The pastors of the English churches in the city invited Mr. McNeill.

Argoed, Mon.—For some weeks past, mission services have been held in this village by Rev. A. J. Underwood, of Blackwood, and helpers. From the first the meetings have been well attended, and souls have given themselves up to Christ. The cottage in which the meetings are held is much too small for the large congregation that assembles on Sunday and week evenings.

Evangelistic Mission.—The mission conducted by Mr. J. J. Sims is meeting with much encouragement; many testimonies of blessing are received. Mr. Sims continues during the month of January at 3 and 7 on Sundays, and will give illustrated lectures on the Book of Revelation on Thursdays at 8. The ministry of Dr. McNutt at Willesden Hall during December has been much appreciated.

Rev. J. McNeill.—Writing on Nov. 19, a correspondent in Wellington, N.Z., says:—"Mr. J. McNeill passed through this town on Monday last en route for Dunedin. He is to commence here on Dec. 9 and conclude on the 16th. At our Hunter-street Hall Mission we were led of the Spirit to set apart next Friday as a day of fasting, humiliation, and prayer, in connection with the Mission, asking especially for the conversion of our children."

Mr. Moody's meetings at Lowell, Mass. (says the New York Independent), have continued during the past three weeks with increasing power and success. The largest audience-room has been crowded twice each day except Saturday, and so general did the interest become that assistants were called in from Boston to help in the work, and meetings were held in two places at once. The second Sunday, the pastors say, was the greatest day Lowell ever had.

Mr. Matthew Burnett, after a brief respite at Bournemouth, has resumed work. During the closing months of last year he conducted missions in Newhaven, Doncaster, Mitcham, Upper Holloway, Romsey, and Horsham. Mr. Burnett continues to hear from time to time of the solidity and permanency both of the evangelistic and Gospel Temperance work from all parts of the kingdom visited. Mr. Burnett speaks at the Temperance Hall, Croydon, on Wednesday. On the 20th he commences a Gospel Temperance Mission at Newport, Mon.

Maldon.—A most encouraging mission, conducted by Mr. J. H. Cooke, of the Evangelisation Society, has been held in connection with St. Mary's Church. The mission hall proved too small for the Sunday ernoon congregations, and the public hall was aged; this, too, was filled. Mr. Cooke has a most manner with the working men, and quickly their confidence. Two bishops have been consecrated in St. Paul's Cathedral—Rev. Dr. Knox, Archdeacon of Birmingham, as Bishop of Coventry; and Dr. Johnson, Archdeacon of Colchester, as Bishop of Colchester. The pulpit was occupied by Rev. F. J. Chavasse, who denounced the selfish luxury which characterises many in the present day.

The annual service for children was held in Westminster Abbey on Holy Innocents' Day. There was a crowded congregation, and a large number of persons were unable to gain admission. The dean preached from the text, "And let us not be weary in well-doing" (Gal. vi. 9). The offertory was for the Destitute Children's Dinner Society.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Queensland Union has elected Mr. William Tatham as chairman for 1895-6. Mr. Tatham was being educated for the ministry at Rotherham College, England, but his health gave way before his college course was completed. He went out to Queensland twenty-two years ago, and speedily recovered.

Calls.—Rev. John Mills, of Peckham, to Croydon; Rev. J. A. Balshaw, of Southport, to Wirksworth; Rev. J. Learmont, to Junction-road, Upper Holloway; Rev. W. Gooby, to Church-street, Brighton.

A school chapel, with class rooms, has been opened at Hillsbro, Sheffield, for a congregation under the pastorate of Rev. A. McKittrick.

Rev. A. F. Riley, pastor of Highgate Archway Church, is reported as somewhat better, but his medical adviser still regards his condition as critical.

On New Year's Day, Pastor John Felmingham, of Northcote-road Baptist Church, Wandsworth Common, S.W., sat to receive gifts of money towards the liquidation of the debt of £3600 upon the Church premises. The amount received was £113.

The Indian Triennial Conference of the Baptist Missionary Society, held at Calcutta, was attended by missionaries from Bengal, North-West Provinces, and Orissa. METHODIST.

A united mission is shortly to be held in connection with the Huddersfield circuits.

The Young People's African Association at Leeds has just held its annual meeting.

News has reached the Wesleyan Missionary Society of the death of Miss A. Jackson at Cape Coast, West Africa.

For the past ten years the publishers of the Methodist Times, Messrs. Horace Marshall and Son, have given their profits on the paper to the Worn-out Ministers' Fund. The amount for the past year has been £515 8s. 10d.

The Wesleyan Social Purity Committee has appointed a sub-committee to take into consideration letters and documents from Rev. John Brown, chairman of the Calcutta district, bearing on the moral condition of Calcutta.

The Wesleyan Methodists of Leicester have now in hand over £10,000 of the £20,000 they appealed for in order to carry out their "forward" movement in Leicester. The result has been that they have bought sites for three new chapels, to accommodate 3500 worshippers.

The Wesleyan gifts for Home Missions do not show the upward tendency which has long been hoped for. Attention is again being called to the yearly collection in the classes. In 1878 the collection amounted to £8671, an average of 5¾d. per member. Ten years ago it had fallen to £7555, or 4¾d. per member. Over 900 candidates have been accepted for the work of the Army since March last.

A batch of Salvation Army officers has left Cape Town for mission work by means of a tour through the Diamond Fields, Eastern Natal and Zululand divisions.

LONDON CITY MISSION DISABLED MISSIONARIES' WIDOWS & ORPHANS FUND.

This fund was formed to give support to aged and infirm Missionaries who, after a life-long service—enriching the poorest of the poor with the unsearchable riches of Christ—are compelled to cease from their labours. Forty-two of these receive yearly grants of from £20 to £52, according to length of service. Fifty-six widows whose husbands died in the work—several from disease taken when visiting, and in some instances leaving families—receive grants of from £10 to £20 yearly. Among these true helpmeets to their husbands are those who work earnestly among the London poor. Five orphans of Missionaries who have lost both parents receive help during childhood.

Last year this fund was deficiant by £349 7s. 6d.

The Committee earnestly ask you to cast generously into this part of our Lord's treasury, that these aged and worthy disciples and widows may for the present year have their needs supplied.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

At the General Post Office not a single case of intoxication was reported during the Christmas work.

The Good Templar and Temperance Missions are continuing their united meetings under the Midland Arches, King's Cross.

The experiment of a temperance public-house is being temporarily tried in Newcastle, in connection with Blenheim-street Wesleyan Mission.

A paper read by Rev. H. B. Workman at a conference in Liverpool on "What is the Gothenburg System?" has been issued from The Joyful News Depôt, Rochdale. This careful and candid examination of the systems in operation both in Sweden and Norway will be of much service at the present time, when many are urging the introduction of some such system.

"The Causes of Intemperance among Women." Under this title a thoughtful paper, by Anne W. Richardson, has been issued by the Women's Total Abstinence Publishing Co. (1d.). The facts set forth demand general and serious attention. That intemperance is spreading among women cannot be denied. The author examines into the causes of this growing evil, and suggests practical remedies.

Medical students have been entertained at a conversazione at the London Temperance Hospital by the members of the British Medical Temperance Association. The president, Sir B. W. Richardson, in welcoming the guests, said the institution they were invited to inspect marked a new era with regard to stimulants. The experience of the twenty years which had elapsed since its foundation proved that alcohol was unnecessary either in health or disease.

Rev. D. S. Adam, of Kelso, believing that temperance legislation will be hindered if the local vetoists and the supporters of the Bishop of Chester's scheme form opposing camps, suggests as a compromise that the compensation under the Bishop's scheme be the three years' limit of the Government's Bill, and that each community shall have the power to adopt the Gothenburg system, if two-thirds do not vote for prohibition.

The Bishop of London, presiding at a great pledge-signing meeting in Exeter Hall, stated that he felt bound, for the sake of example, to become a total abstainer. He urged upon all who knew the evil of intemperance, and those who did not, to come forward and join in the pledge-signing crusade. Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., while placing his principal reliance on State prohibition, approved also of this campaign. There are now, he said, seven million total abstainers in this country, most of them dating back from the time of joining the Band of Hope Union.

A pathetic appeal has been made to Massachusetts by Prince Momolie Massaquai, the future King of Vei, Liberia, Africa, not to send any more rum to his country. He made the long journey for this purpose, and, be it said to the disgrace of the United States, he returned feeling his object had failed, for rum traders' power at Boston proved stronger than the philanthropists. Negroes have so linked Christianity in their thought with the rum traffic that, according to Bishop Taylor there is a rum factory in Liberia which the natives call "The Good Jesus Factory."

The United Kingdom Band of Hope Union held on Saturday a New Year's gathering of Band of Hope workers in Lower Exeter Hall. Mr. W. S. Caine, M.P., who was in the chair, said if the teetotal movement was to cease it would be a great loss to the community. The men and women of the total abstinence movement were doing an important aggressive work. Men were unemployed and had wretched homes because they were drunkards. Get them to be total abstainers and everything would be altered. Total abstinence and the Gospel of Christ were the two things men wanted, and the Band of Hope embraced both. Rev. J. W. Horsley delivered a New Year's address. Rev. Alexander Connell, Tent-square, also addressed the meeting.

Now that China seems to be realising her inability to cope with Japan, and that she must come down from her "celestial" dignity, if she would save herself from further humiliations and losses, she is taking sensible means to end the war. Envoys of sufficient rank, and, let us hope, with sufficient power, are to proceed forthwith to Japan to discuss the terms of peace. The conquerors have shown brutal cruelty in some episodes of the war, which does not augur over well for the exhibition of a reasonable and fair spirit in the final settlement. May pride of victory not defeat the establishment of a firmly-based and enduring peace.

Mr. John Burns, M.P., who has been unburdening his mind of a great many things in America, and whose shrewd opinions are always worth considering, has been saying that religion is losing its hold upon the English as a people, and that Christians are wisely supporting its failing powers by works of a humanitarian kind. Let not our countryman make a mistake. The old truths are reasserting their hold, and there is not the least intention of discarding them for things seen and temporal. The most active workers the churches have in moral and spiritual reform are Christians who are the most simple in faith and the most devout in spirit. We quite go with Mr. Burns when he says that gambling has become a deadly fascination among all classes, and that it is probably doing more harm than drink. If labour leaders like himself will use their great influence among working men—and we gladly acknowledge his own outspokenness—the churches will not fail in their sphere of influence among all classes.

Very tender reminiscences of the late Mr. R. Louis Stevenson are now arriving from Samoa. The correspondent of The British Weekly, in whose house he had stayed when he first went to Samoa, and who stood in the relation of a personal friend, sends a touching account of him. The brilliant writer often spoke highly of missionaries and their work, and two missionaries of the L.M.S. conducted the funeral service, one in English and the other in Samoan. An evening prayer which he himself had composed—"a devout, trustful, child-like committal of life and friends and all that pertains to daily living to the great Father in the name of our Lord Jesus Christ"—was used. As they descended the steep hill on the top of which his grave is dug, and up which the natives had carried him with "almost incredible pain and labour," a Samoan said: "For the love we bear him we felt the labour light." Such deeds and words make life sweeter.

In their pastoral address to the members of Zion Congregational Church, Attercliffe, Sheffield, the two pastors express a conviction that attempts to overthrow fashionable evils which are demoralising the people will be met by social bitterness, angry passion, scornful opposition, and a general outburst of defiance. They plead with them not to be tempted, on that account, into the silence of cowardice. To stand aloof would, they believe, be to court the fate of Meroz. They strongly insist that to decline to adopt any measure "which the Spirit of Christ inspires to check the gambling mania, and diminish the monster evils of intemperance and vice is virtually to acquiesce in the spread of sin and immorality of the most overwhelming kind." The necessity for this stand to be made for righteousness in South Yorkshire will be understood by all who know how terribly rampant racing and other sports and gambling are in every town and village of that part of the country.

We know that this church of Christ at Attercliffe, situated in the midst of a dense working population, which is thus summoned to do battle with great evils, has, for the last thirty-five years, been the scene of earnest evangelistic labours. The Gospel has been preached unto the salvation of many souls; the pastorate has been a soul-winning pastorate. Outside attacks upon the kingdom of Satan have been the result of intense devotion to the Saviour. And this last call to conflict breathes the same spirit. The pastors say, "Our greatest concern is not about effort of any kind, but about passionate enthusiasm for the cause of Christ. Given this, a large increase of loyal devotion to Jesus, and spiritual earnestness for those He would save, and the least result we shall find in our churches will be a larger army of men and women resolute and unyielding in their struggles with the vices which prevail." The note of faith with which this searching and stirring address concludes is the prelude of success, and is the note required in all service: "Blessed be God, our Saviour sits on the throne of the universe, and all power in heaven and in earth is given unto Him."

A young Sunday-school teacher expressed to us the opinion the other day that Sunday-schools in the South of England are a failure, and she illustrated the difficulty of doing anything by the experiences she had had among boys. As soon as she began her lesson, which she had prepared with great care, they all cried out, "We know all about that; we learnt it at the Board School." Her sister's experience had been similar. This shows one point clearly, that School Board education does not ignore the Bible. But does it not also show, that the Sunday-school should give itself with greater zeal and determination than ever to the work of enforcing the practical side of religion? The children know; now let the teachers incite them to believe. Religion as a life must be set before them. But this implies that we shall require as teachers those who themselves are doers of the Word; is not the lack of personal consecration to Christ just the weakness of many teachers and the explanation of failure?

Is it true that the children in our town Sunday-schools and Missions schools are discontented as they never were before? The statement is made, and we ourselves have too much evidence of its being accurate. If so, why so? Children in country places are generally easily pleased, and we have known them to be the same in towns. Is the change due in part to the general discontent which prevails among our poorer neighbours with regard to their general condition? Does it in any degree spring from the system of rewards and treats and outings? Since there are so many schools that competition arises between them for the children, has that created a spirit of carelessness and disobedience and discontent? If so, the sooner we return to simple ways of doing good the better. A bribed child is not likely to have a happy, thankful heart.

The Pall Mall Gazette recently published an article entitled "Gambling on Blue Water," which gave a sketch of how travellers across the Atlantic are fleeced by gamblers, who appear to have no connection with each other, and yet work into each other's hands! No doubt it is all true; these "greyhounds" of the ocean might, from a moral point of view, be called gambling and drinking saloons. But this is certain: the knaves who make them the scenes of their knavery know very well the kind of passenger to operate upon. One firm word is quite enough to shake them off, or yet another method would be even better, get them into conversation, and seek their immediate conversion. They are doing the devil's work, and should have the Christian's deepest compassion, as well as his firmest resistance.

A Paris newspaper, in commenting upon the diminution of crime in England, remarked that in France the extension of education had had a directly contrary effect, for the prisons had been fuller and the number of juvenile offenders had increased. The reason given for this increase was that, in France, moral training did not go hand in hand with mental teaching. This is not an argument for withholding education from the young, neither for giving them denominational teaching, but it is a supreme reason why the churches of Christ should see to it that our boys and girls are taught the Word of God in the power of the Holy Spirit. The diminution of crime in our country is a thing to be thankful for, but we can never be satisfied with a change which does not renew the heart.

If our readers will carefully con the following definition of the term Massorah, they will gain some conception of the size and value of that work of producing a complete Massorah, to which the eminent Hebrew scholar, Dr. Ginsburg, has devoted more than thirty years of his life :—

The Massorah is a marginal directory, indicating on almost every line in the margin of the MS. (Hebrew) Bibles how the letters, words, forms, and phrases are to be written, according to the most ancient rules laid down by those who compiled, preserved, and transmitted the canon of the Old Testament Scriptures. Every spurious letter or redundant word, every variation in the repetition of a phrase, and every peculiarity of construction over which the copyists are likely to blunder, and which have been a great source of the various readings, are most carefully noted; and those who are engaged in multiplying the codices are warned that "there is a peculiar phenomenon here" which is not to be made conformable to the ordinary readings. This invaluable key to the text of the Old Testament is called Massorah (tradition) because it was traditionally handed down by the authorised and professional scribes, who afterwards committed it to writing.

Such is the Massorah, which at the end of the nineteenth century is, for the first time, being published in its entirety. When Dr. Ginsburg began his work he had to endure a great deal of chaff from literary friends, two of whom advised him to give it up, and study instead the Greek and Roman classics. He said to them:—

"Let us make a bargain. If you will show me a single passage in the Greek or Roman classics, or, indeed, in any Oriental classics whatever, which can beat the twenty-third or the hundred and thirty-ninth Psalm, I promise you to leave the Bible alone, and turn to Sophocles and Æschylus." This was agreed, and they were honest enough to confess, after a while, that they had not found such a passage. Since then they chaffed no more, and I went on with my Massorah.

The story of his labours, as told to a representative of The Westminster Gazette, is full of interest, and suggests some idea of the unremitting toil bestowed on that peerless book, the Bible. The above story also shows how wonderfully the literary qualities of the Bible are forgotten in the more important moral and spiritual qualities it possesses. The literature has no glory by reason of the other glory that excelleth. Musical cadences and majestic rhythm are nothing in comparison with the good news that inspires and informs them.

There are few more happy and hopeful pages in the history of modern missionary enterprise than the rapid progress of the Student Volunteer Movement in America and this country. It must have far-reaching and blessed results during the next half century, if it at all fulfils the promise of its youth. Those who are interested in it should carefully read the report of the Second Students' Conference held at Keswick last year, and published from the office of the Union, 93, Aldersgate-street. Friends might procure and give copies to earnest young Christians of both sexes.

The value of character is admitted by everyone; even employers whose moral standard is only expediency prefer honest to dishonest men in their service; at any rate, they want a man to be honest on one side of his life, the side next to themselves. They want someone whom they can trust, and yet how often they will use, or try to use, him for dishonest gain. He must be truthful to them, and yet they will dictate lying letters to him to send to customers and others; they will employ him to make out false invoices in order to defraud the revenue of foreign countries to which they export goods; in fact, there is no end to the immoral uses which some employers will make of moral men. One of two things happens, either the employé refuses to become the tool and co-partner of his employer in doing wrong, or he submits and loses his conscientiousness. Do masters ask themselves how a man can be honest and truthful towards them after he has been forced into telling falsehoods for them? The acute moral torture of many who are put on these mendacious and nefarious practices God alone knows.

THE RECENT STORMS.

The daily papers have given us of late some saddening sketches of suffering and loss of life among seamen of the mercantile marine in connection with the late gales. These have been mere outlines; the terrible details are unknown. The awful scenes can scarcely be pictured, and the results are felt far and wide.

If one thinks of the many homes left desolate through the loss of the bread-winners—wives mourning for their husbands, children their fathers, aged parents and widows their sons—it ought to be an incentive to more prayer and sympathy on behalf of those who are so constantly exposed to the dangers of sea life, as well as for those who work among them. Many and harrowing are the tales we constantly hear while we are seeking to win them to Christ, and we praise God for permitting us to see some fruits of our labours.

A typical case we would here mention. It is that of a young sailor, who left us some months ago for sea. He had found the pearl of great price, and was a bright and promising Christian. After arriving at the outward-bound port the greater part of the crew deserted the ship. Our young Christian, however, stayed in the ship to complete the voyage. She has not arrived yet, and has been given up for lost with all hands. Duty cost this dear and promising lad his life. How thankful we are to record that we have every reason to believe that he is with the Lord, looking for us to meet him by and by.

What about the other hands? Should not their fate and that of so many more urge us on to renewed efforts on behalf of the sons of the sea. We have several ways by which to gain the affections of our sailor brothers, and then win them for Christ. The slackness of the shipping trade causes many to look to us for temporal relief, and for those destitute men we have free suppers as often as funds permit, and great is our joy, mingled with deep sorrow, when we are able to invite our distressed seamen to a hearty hot meal, after which their hearts are often opened for the claims of the Lord Jesus.

DISTRESS IN NEWFOUNDLAND.

Dear Sir,—Rev. G. Ward Siddall, of St. John's, superintendent of the work of the Colonial Missionary Society in Newfoundland, writes me to say that there is nothing but starvation before hundreds of people in that Colony, unless steps are at once taken for their relief. Not only have all the moneys of the church of which Mr. Siddall is pastor been lost through the failure of the Commercial Bank, but the collections for the mission workers among the fishermen at the outports have also been lost. Very few have an adequate idea of the earnest self-denying labours of these missionaries in this most difficult field of service. They have to endure terrible hardships, and are exposed to great dangers. In such a time of distress British Christians must do their utmost to lessen the privation of our brethren—at least we must see that they do not lack the necessaries of life.

The matter is one of great urgency.—Yours truly,

D. Burford Hooke,
Secretary of Colonial Missionary Society.

BOURNEMOUTH NOTES.

The quarterly meetings in connection with the West Cliff Tabernacle Missionary Prayer Union were held on Sunday, January 13. The report given by the secretary, Mr. Feller, showed that there are now ninety-one members, and that the daily gifts are steadily sustained. It is expected that the amount for the quarter will be equal to what has been sent up before.

The Nonconformist ministers of Bournemouth and the district met on Monday, January 14, in the West Cliff Tabernacle, for a "Quiet Day." A devotional service was conducted by Rev. Geo. Wainwright at eleven, and a conference at three, on "The Holy Spirit, in relation to the minister's personal life," was opened by Rev. Dr. Culross, of Bristol. At the public meeting in the evening the chair was taken by Rev. J. J. Brown, superintendent Wesleyan minister, and addresses were given by Revs. Dr. Culross and N. Haigh.

CONSECRATION ILLUSTRATED.

That veteran messenger of the Cross, Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, gave an address at the Aldersgate-street noon prayer-meeting on Monday last. He spoke on "Consecration," his remarks being primarily addressed to a little company of students from Rev. F. B. Meyer's Training College at Kennington. The theme was pressed home mainly by illustrations drawn from the history of missions in the South Seas. The first incident was from the life of the martyr-missionary, John Williams. In his endeavours to Christianise these South Sea peoples, he heard of a large island to the south then unknown. No white man had set foot on it except a trading captain, who had carried off by force the princess of the island and a number of her attendant maidens. These had been landed on the island where Williams was working, and he proposed to take them back to their native island, and some teachers with them. The island was reached, and the princess, with her attendants, landed. But the inhabitants were warlike and very threatening, and Mr. Williams decided to relinquish his plan for the time. A native assistant himself volunteered to land on the island, and notwithstanding the apparent certainty of being killed he did land, his only equipment being Mark's Gospel and the Pilgrim's Progress translated into the Tahiti language. When Mr. Williams returned to the island in a year, the people were on the point of gathering together their idols to be burned. That was an instance of real consecration—a "don't-careism" that is willing to give up all and risk everything, even life itself, for the sake of Jesus Christ and his Gospel.

Another thrilling incident related by Mr. Chalmers had reference to the native training institution at Raratonga, under Dr. Wyatt Gill. Mr. Chalmers had sent a helper to another island with some medicine for a sick teacher, as he was himself busy finishing his translation of Luke's Gospel. When the boat returned the flag was half-mast high; his stalwart native helper had been killed by the spears of the savages. Mr. Chalmers wrote to Dr. Wyatt Gill, who had then thirty-four students, with their wives, in his institution. He told the story of the spearing of his assistant and of the poisoning of some others, and said to Dr. Gill that he wanted six new workers. This was repeated to those native students and they were asked if six of them would volunteer. The whole band rose up and asked to be sent. Some time was given for prayer and consideration, and at the end of that time the whole of them still wanted to go; ultimately six of them had to be selected by lot. What a stir it would create all over the world, said Mr. Chalmers, if all the students in any one of our colleges in Great Britain or America were to lay themselves thus on the altar for foreign service when there are some gaps to be filled in the front ranks. No better or more effective exposition of what consecration is could well be imagined than the recital of these heroic deeds on the part of South Sea Christian whose parents had been savages and cannibals.

YOUNG ABSTAINERS' UNION.

The fifteenth annual meeting of this Union was held in the small Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., last Saturday afternoon. The hall was well filled. The chair was taken by Mr. T. F. Buxton, J.P. The secretary, Miss Johnson, read the report. They had cleared off a debt of £80, and were starting the new year with a balance in hand.

The chairman, in a short address, said he was glad that a good many young fellows from school were present; they had great opportunities of witnessing for Christ, and the fact of belonging to the Union ought to be a great help. They had need of help to fight against temptation, and the way in which all could most effectively be prepared was by being on the side of the Lord Jesus Christ. The pledge was a special means to meet a special form of temptation.

Canon Barker said there were many people who still gave their children strong drink, and he believed such meetings as this were most useful for the purpose of endeavouring to persuade such parents that this was absolutely wrong. He regarded a boy who went to school or to college as an abstainer as guarded from much temptation to which others were exposed.

MAN UPON HIS TRIAL.

From what has been said it will be plain, I think, that the Millennium, instead of being the consummation, the final and perfect state of the world's history, and the plenary fulfilment of the prophecies of the kingly glory of Christ, is, in fact, the last of a long series of Divine tests by which man in the flesh has been proved by God. It is also the severest test of all, because it is a condition of privilege far higher than man ever enjoyed before.

Let us recall the five great dispensational tests of man that are past.

(1) He was tested in innocence, and fell.

(2) He was tested under conscience only, and the wickedness that brought on the Flood was the result.

(3) He was tested under the law of Moses, with all the elaborate instructions of type and temple, prophet and priest; and the result was idolatry, licentiousness, and crime, followed by defeat, national overthrow, and exile.

(4) He was tested by the actual presence of his Maker, Preserver, and Benefactor, in human form, who healed all his diseases, forgave all his iniquities, rejoiced with the joyful, and wept with the sorrowful, in perfect sympathy, and the result was—Calvary.

(5) He has been tested since he murdered his Maker, by the presence on earth of the Holy Ghost in the Church, through which, though imperfectly no doubt, the character of God and the love of Christ have been widely made known in the holy lives and faithful works of thousands, who have sealed their testimony in sufferings or martyrdom; and the result will be seen, perhaps very soon, when the whole world will wonder after the beast and worship him, and under his leadership make war against the Lamb and his saints.

In each of these successive stages of trial, we perceive the Divinely-given privileges bestowed in richer measure than in the one that preceded it. God, ever indulgent and long-suffering, seeks, by multiplying his mercies, and heaping up his blessings, to overcome the deadly enmity of his creatures. But, hitherto, all in vain. Increasing grace but develops deeper sin. He has one great test to come. He will not give man up as hopelessly, incurably, incorrigibly God-hating, until He has deprived him of his last shadow of excuse.

And what is this excuse? "It is true," man's advocate may plead, "that we have enjoyed all these—God's gifts and favours—without stint. It is true we have violated conscience, and broken law; that we have crucified our Christ, and resisted the Holy Ghost: but the real cause of all this accumulated sin is not in us, but in our great enemy the Devil, to whom our first fall was due, and who rules us ever since relentlessly. Take him away; paralyse his power; cripple his malignant activity; bind him, and deliver us from his dominating influence—and then it will be seen that what our sages and philosophers allege is quite true—that man is radically good and virtuous, the victim only of an unfavourable environment, ready and capable in better conditions of yielding a grateful response to his Maker, and serving Him loyally."

And God answers as ever, graciously; "It shall be done; this, and more also."

(1) Satan shall be bound, that he should deceive the nations no longer; and man shall be left untempted, untouched by external evil of any sort, to develop his virtues, if he has them.

(2) And not only shall Satan be bound, but lest the evil, so long rooted and confirmed, should take time to be counteracted and eradicated, the test shall last a full thousand years; and not till the end of that time will the trial be stayed, and the verdict given.

(3) And not only so. Man shall have all the privileges of the previous stages of his probation, and more also. He shall have conscience, and law, and the Holy Spirit. But he shall have the presence of Christ also; not now in weakness and humiliation, but in glory, honour, and power.

(4) And not only so. He shall also have, dispersed through all the nations, the true lovers and loyal subjects of Christ (Isa. lvi. 3-8; Zech. x. 9); not, as often hitherto, through inconsistency weakening and spoiling their testimony—but absolutely righteous men and women.

(5) And not only so; but lest men should plead the infectious influence of sin in others, every visible offence in all parts of the globe shall be instantly punished with death, that men may see and fear and give glory to God (Isa. lxv. 20; Psa. ci.).

If under such conditions as these it shall be found that man, without new birth and unregenerate, can be induced to love God, to serve his Son, and refuse allegiance to Satan, then, indeed, may man in the flesh be restored to his lost paradise, and be set again where Adam was, as lord and chief over all the works of God's hands (Psa. viii.). But if, on the other hand, it shall come to pass that, at the end of this long probation, men rise, as of old, rebellious against God, stifling conscience, transgressing law, taking counsel against Jehovah and against his Anointed, and thronging from all latitudes by express trains and ocean liners to join the Satanic standard of revolt, and greet with deepest, heartiest, acclamation their ancient leader, now set free—if, I say, this shall happen—then shall it be known to men and angels, the wide universe over, that under God's last and greatest test of the natural, or old, creation, man has, as in all the preceding periods, failed, and that man's doom as man is sealed for evermore.

Now this is exactly what we know from Rev. xx. will surely take place. The Millennium will be, humanly speaking, a tremendous failure.

Where Conscience failed, and Law failed, and Grace failed to convert, to restrain, to win, to captivate to God, the soul of man as man; there once more all these will fail again, even though Christ be crowned and Satan bound. "Ichabod" shall be written in letters of fire and blood across the thousand pages of man's history under the rod of iron and the sceptre of righteousness; and over a kingdom shaken to its base by the shock of that stupendous revolution, amid the horrors of the fiery cataclysm, God will pronounce the final verdict of man's condemnation. At this point will doubtless take place that of which Peter speaks, when the heavens and the earth and all the things that are therein shall be burned up, and, according to the seer John, shall flee away from the face of Him that sitteth upon the throne; and a new heaven, and a new earth, wherein dwelleth righteousness, shall take their place. And then, if our reading of Scripture be right, shall Christ enter upon the "Kingdom that cannot be shaken," as the last has thus violently been, and this word "yet once more" shall be fulfilled, when, having made not the earth only, but also the heaven, to tremble—signifying the removing of those things that are shaken, as of things that have been made—those things, even the new heavens and new earth, which are not shaken or shakeable, shall remain; and we, with all the redeemed, and all creation too, shall "receive a Kingdom" under the risen and glorified Man Christ Jesus, that can never be shaken, nor fail, but which He shall at the end surrender perfect into the hand of God (Heb. xii. 20-28).

AGGRESSIVE WORK.—12.

I had been taking a service on a Sunday afternoon at Egremont, Cheshire, and was on my way to join the ferry-boat crossing the river, when a heavy shower of rain came on. At the ferry I found quite a crowd of people sheltering, and I at once availed myself of the opportunity by preaching the Gospel. The people gathered round and listened with attention.

I then passed through the turnstiles, and again found a considerable number waiting for the steamer. Once more I proclaimed the old, old story until the boat approached the landing-stage. She was very full of passengers, and her two large deck cabins were packed with about eighty people each.

Here were other opportunities. I managed to get standing-room in one cabin, and addressed the people for about seven minutes without interruption.

I then entered the other cabin, and continued the address for about the same length of time. But here I experienced some opposition from two Roman Catholic women who sat opposite each other talking loudly to drown my voice and make speaking difficult. But I moved towards them and stood between them, which prevented their seeing each other, and this was effectual in causing silence. A big rough-looking Roman Catholic man, however, took up the refrain, and endeavoured to silence me by asking ridiculous questions and soliloquising aloud, but I continued speaking, notwithstanding, until we reached the Liverpool side of the Mersey, so that a large number of Sunday pleasure-seekers heard the Word.

How true it is that Rome never changes. It has retained its characteristics right down through the ages. It opposed the preaching of the Gospel from the beginning, and will continue to do until the end. It matters not by whom the truth is proclaimed as long as it is not done by a priest, and priests never do it under such circumstances.

True, indeed, are the Master's words in their case (Matthew xxiii. 13), "For ye neither go in yourselves, neither suffer ye them that are entering to go in." How Satanic it is as a system!

WATER SPRINGS.

By Rev. DWIGHT WILLIAMS.

Not all a desert is our weary way,
Nor think it thus;
The sweet rains on the mountains fall for us,
Where stand the rocks, as pitchers, we may say
To catch the spray,
And pour it forth in fountains murmurous.

And near are clefts along the way we pass
Where we may hide,
And rest, and in the noontide heat abide,
Where water-springs break from the deep crevasse
With marge of grass,
As they flow on to valleys beautified.

The mists that hide the azure from our sight
Have no despair;
They float away to distant mountain stair,
And, myriad-winged in beauty, they alight
In snowy white,
And melt away in fountains softly there.

The heavens are full of love, from heights of calm
It falls below,
And sinks to Elim wells, whose underflow
Gives crowns of beauty to the living palm,
And prayer and psalm
Refresh us in the paths through which we go.

THE UNVEILING.—3.

SYMBOLIC, NOT LITERAL.

It was in a vision that John saw One like a son of man walking in the midst of the golden candlesticks. The white hair, the eyes of fire, the voice like the sound of many waters, the feet like unto fine brass burning as in a furnace, cannot be interpreted in the same literal way as "The woman's Seed." "Unto us a Child is born, a Son is given." "A Prophet shall the Lord your God raise up unto you from among your brethren like unto me." "Bethlehem Ephratah, out of thee shall He come forth unto Me, that is to be Ruler in Israel, whose goings forth have been from of old, from everlasting."

JEWS INWARDLY.

In the Epistles to the Churches (ii. 9; iii. 9) "Jews" are used symbolically of false professing Christians. Of all men, the Jew's nationality is engraved upon his face. For this reason a Gentile could very rarely pass himself off as a Jew. Nor would he desire to do so; for in the Church of God the distinction between Jew and Gentile ceases. The Jew is un-Jewed and the Gentile un-Gentiled; all are one in Christ Jesus. There is no necessary antithesis between a literal Jew and one of the synagogue of Satan; but there is an essential antithesis, quite in accordance with the context, between a Jew inwardly (that is, a Christian), and one of the synagogue of Satan. A literal Jew no less than a literal Gentile might belong to Satan's synagogue—"the assembly of the wicked" (Psa. xxii. 16); but a Jew inwardly, whose circumcision is of the heart, in the spirit and not in the letter, whose praise is not of men but of God, could not be of the synagogue of Satan. No reason existed for a wicked Gentile pretending to be a Jew when he hypocritically sought the fellowship of the Church; whereas the New Testament abounds in references to hypocrites, wolves in sheep's clothing, false apostles, false professors of all sorts, who, in this Book of the Unveiling, are summarised and symbolised, as pretending to be Jews (inwardly) while really of the synagogue of Satan.

BALAAM, BALAK, AND JEZEBEL

(ii. 14, 20) evidently are not here literal persons, but symbolic references to the Mesopotamian soothsayer, the Moabite king, and Ahab's Zidonian queen. The Throne and He that sat upon it, the Lamb who is the Lion of Judah, the living creatures and the crowned elders, are all seen in vision, and are symbols of heavenly realities. The seals are broken, the trumpets sounded, the vials poured out, not in actual and literal reality; they were seen or heard, like the apocalyptic prophecies of Isaiah (vi.) of Ezekiel and of Daniel, in Visions of God.

MANIFOLD FULFILMENT.

These suggestions are offered not in any spirit of controversy or contradiction. I am assured that the prophecy has been, is being, and will be fulfilled, in the past, the present, and the future, over the very diverse scale of the individual, the family, the nation, and the world.

But as the same principles and forces are in exercise in the inward conflict between the spirit and the flesh, in family feuds, in civil wars, in national quarrels, and in world-wide contentions, so in the long warfare between good and evil pictured in this divine revelation, the exposition of the symbol employed must be tested by its applicability to every battlefield, whether it be in the individual heart or over the entire planet, and whether its duration be a single life or many generations.

The symbols have the same signification on every platform; they cannot mean one thing for the Individual, another for the Preterist, another for the Historical, and another for the Futurist interpretation. Just as the alphabet is a fixed and certain quantity, whether in a hornbook or a classic, just as a cypher is the same whatever the message it conveys—so every true interpretation of this prophecy will accord with the ascertained value of the symbol. The symbol must not be manipulated to suit the exigencies of the interpretation. The key to the symbolism must first be ascertained before an indisputable interpretation is possible.

I venture therefore to suggest that we may assume as ascertained facts—(1) That "this prophecy" was conveyed in a series of symbolic visions; (2) That the symbolism is taken from the Old Testament; (3) That the significance of the symbol can therefore be definitely fixed; (4) That the interpretation must be governed by the symbol, and not the symbol forced into agreement with the interpretation; (5) That the prophecy is fulfilled on many scales—"whether unto a nation or a man, alike" (Job xxxiv. 29)—because history repeats itself, and because the source of all history is the human heart, influenced by the Spirit of God on the one hand and the evil spirit on the other. (6) That in this Divine unveiling of the great drama of human life upon the earth, we should expect to see behind the scenes, and to be shown the hidden springs of action. (7) That, as one Apostle has told us that the flesh lusteth against the spirit and the spirit against the flesh, and these are contrary to one another, that we may not do the things that we would; as another has reminded us that all wars and fightings come of the lusts which war in our members; and another has besought us to abstain from fleshly lusts which war against the soul—our first experience of the promised blessing to him that readeth may be expected in that Individual interpretation which unveils the fulfilment as it concerns ourselves. (8) That in proportion as this is unveiled to us shall we understand the Unveiling of Jesus Christ in relation to the outer world.

I am very far from affirming that my readings of the symbols, in the papers which follow, are indisputable; I offer them as a contribution to the study of the book, and shall be most thankful for instruction or correction.

THE CALL TO PRAISE AND PRAYER.

Dear Sir,—In response to the appeal made in The Christian, I invited the members of Sharon Hall Baptist Church, Westminster-road, to join with me in special praise and prayer on New Year's Day. We met in my vestry from three to five and from seven to nine o'clock.

I drew out a list of subjects for special praise and prayer, teaching from our own individual lives to the wide world, and also appropriate Scriptures for each matter we brought before the Lord, which I read and briefly expounded. We had a most heart-searching and refreshing time. There was no weariness and no flagging, but a continuous stream of praise and prayer.

We all felt it was good to be there, and now enter upon the New Year with increased faith and zeal. I thank these brethren for their happy suggestion, and sincerely hope that it was adopted by many ministers and churches.—Yours very sincerely,

Frank Russell.

The Laud Commemoration.

We witnessed last week a new departure on the part of the Romish conspirators in the Church of England, in the celebration of the Jubilee of the death of Archbishop William Laud in the reign of Charles I. We are not going to chronicle the Te Deums sung, the addresses delivered, the Laudian relics exhibited. Let us look at the man whom the High Church delights to honour.

We will admit at the outset the talents of William Laud, his industry, his personal unselfishness, his remarkable capacity for administration: but how did he use these gifts? Placed at the head of the Church of England, he turned the High Commission into a standing attack against the Puritan ministers: rectors and vicars were scolded, suspended, and deprived of their livings for preaching the Gospel.

The use of the surplice and the ceremonies most offensive to Protestant feeling were enforced in every parish—Genevan Bibles with their marginal notes were prohibited; the habit of receiving the communion in a sitting posture, which had become common, was forbidden, and kneeling being enforced, hundreds were excommunicated for refusing to comply with Laud's injunction.

Laud next proceeded to attack the sanctity of the Lord's Day. That day had been identified by the Puritans with the Jewish Sabbath, and all its strictness had been observed, but the Laudian clergy, on the other hand, encouraged their flocks to indulge in the pastimes and amusements which had been common before the Reformation. Laud commanded every clergyman to read the Royal Declaration in favour of Sunday recreations from their pulpits; the bulk refused to comply with the Archbishop's order, thereupon hundreds of Puritan ministers were cited before the High Commission: were silenced, and deprived of their livings.

It was Laud who ordered the communion table—which, for the previous half century had in almost every parish church stood in the middle of the nave—back to the chancel. To Laud the United States owed their best colonists; year after year Puritans were driven thither from our land, till they reached in one year the number of 3000.

At the death of Weston, Laud became virtually first Minister of the Crown, and among his earliest acts was to force episcopacy upon the Northern kingdom. We all know how disastrously this effort failed, but, nothing daunted, Laud turned his hand more heavily on the English Puritans.

Among others Prynne and his fellow-pamphleteers were dragged before the Star Chamber and sentenced to the pillory and to imprisonment for life. One hundred thousand Londoners lined the roads to see these martyrs on their way to prison.

The history of Laud is the history of our land emerging from popery and tyranny into the freedom which she now possesses. Let anyone read the life of William Laud from the pen of Mr. Green, and then compare this High Church saint with the apostles and saints of the Word of God, and see if there exists any resemblance between them.

William Laud, who next to Sir Thomas Wentworth, did most to destroy the religious and civil liberties of this land, and to bring England again under the tyranny of Rome—it is the memory of this man that an English prelate and English clergy delight to honour. We can only say, may the Lord preserve Britain from another Primate like Archbishop Laud.

"The Problem of Purity."

If the perils of magazines of mixed contents are great in these days, as they undoubtedly are, we have never seen a worse example than the current number of The New Review. More than one of the contributions to its pages would have been better in the waste-paper basket than in Roman type. Who would suspect that "The Problem of Purity," opening as it does with the loftiest praise of chastity and of Christianity as the effective agency by which the high standard of the modern world has been reared, would tail off into a wretched defence of, and plea for, State regulation of vice, and a bigoted abuse of those who have opposed the immoral system? We are familiar with the trickiness of the literature on this subject, as we are also with the deceits and lies by which the system is palmed upon municipalities and states, but we do not remember anything so admirably conceived as this paper is for beguiling readers along, and then plunging them into an abominable bog.

The article, after saying that "to conceive adequately of civilisation, we must lay to heart the truth that it is beyond and before all things ethical," goes on to teach that the incarnation of our Lord brought into the world a totally new conception of the relation of man and woman. The writer is exultant apparently in the thought that "nowhere, perhaps, is the triumph achieved by Christianity more remarkable" than in the domain of good morals Nay, he even praises it for introducing celibacy; in which he speaks as a good Romanist rather than as an instructed Christian. Celibacy is a device of man, not a precept of Christianity. But following this eulogy, comes the contradictory assertion that "the vast majority of mankind ever have dwelt, and ever will dwell, upon the lower levels of humanity." Why should they when this miraculous aiding power is here?

To make contradictions broader and more glaring, the writer proceeds to say that, for himself, he is convinced that the true, the only antidote to the abounding licence of our age is to uphold in all its severity the Christian ideal of purity. . . . "Shall I be told that the type is too perfect? Perfection is not a matter of degree. The Christian type is perfect, and that is precisely why it suffices." He waxes even warmer, and becomes more positive: "We must maintain —the very life of morality is bound up with this—that no one is tempted beyond that which he is able to bear; that there is always with the temptation a way of escape; that there is always a true liberty to force oneself to do right." Then comes an incredible descent. But . . . . we must not, as men of the world, shut our eyes to the facts of life." Did men of the world, then, make the world better? Have we them to thank either for ideals raised above the dreary wastes of sin, or for power to reach these ideals? Alas! for the poor slave of expediency, who, after saying grand things about the incarnation and the miraculous, and "thou oughtest," drops down upon this old immoral maxim, "It is the duty of the State to regulate what must, practically, be regarded as a necessary evil, and to minimise, as far as may be, the mischiefs—physical and moral—that flow therefrom." It is pitiable to read such lame conclusions.

But we have not yet done with the Romanism that keeps peeping out from the sentences of this latest and craftiest attempt to bewilder and mislead the public mind. The old slander uttered against Luther, and backed by that bitter Jew, Heine, that his teaching and influence were hostile to purity, we may pass. But we cannot pass the commendation of the ascetic standard of the Middle Ages. "Herein"—viz, this standard —"appears to lie the incontestable greatness of the Middle Ages. Chivalry and romance were the true expressions—fantastic and extravagant, no doubt, at times—of that teaching of the Church concerning the virtue of purity which hallowed the graces of feminine nature with a species of religious veneration." Speaking of the tenth century, Hallam says, "All writers concur in stigmatising the dissoluteness and neglect of decency that prevailed among the clergy." Again, he says, "But the morals of chivalry, we cannot deny, were not pure. In the amusing fictions there reigns a licentious spirit . . indicating a general dissoluteness in the intercourse of the sexes." The violation of marriage vows passes in the light literature of Italy and France "for an incontestable privilege of the brave and the fair." A reading of our English ballads strips the glory from off these armed knights, and shows them to have been in too many instances as sensual and cowardly as any habitué of a modern music hall.

We should probably have taken no notice of this article, but the monthly magazines are being used to pave the way for a reintroduction of the C.D. Acts.

THE URIM AND THUMMIM.

In a suggestive little book, Jewels in the Breastplate; an Emblem of Christ's Heart, by F. J. Williams (1s. Partridge), we read:—

"This seems to be clear, that the Urim and Thummim were not made by man. They were not the gems of the breastplate themselves, nor was there any feeling or affection excited in the mind of the High Priest when he looked at the gems. They were like a divine Spirit, given by God to Moses, and put by him into the breastplate, and beaming and flashing forth, as it were, from the gems, and making itself visible to the eye. We have analogies to this at the creation. God did not make light, but He put it into the sun. It appears, therefore, that Moses was directed and empowered by God to put, or to give a spiritual quality to the gems of the breastplate; and the High Priest, wearing the breastplate before the Lord, was enabled to read God's will by communion with this spiritual gift.

"The Urim and the Thummim were also an emblem of the Scriptures, which are lifeless to the mere readers of the letter, but in which the Spirit of God is, and they sparkle with divine light to the faithful soul. The gems, however beautiful, are useless, unless the Urim and Thummim of divine light and perfection had been put into them by God; and we are like the gems or minerals of the earth, earthy, but we are comparatively valueless unless the Urim and Thummim of God's Spirit are infused into us, and we are placed upon the breast of Christ. 'The Lord breathed into man's nostrils the breath of life, and he became a living soul.' And not only so, but God also 'took of the spirit of Moses, and put it on the seventy elders'; and God commanded Moses to put some of his honour upon Joshua; and Joshua was full of the spirit of wisdom; for Moses had laid his hands upon him."

HUMAN SACRIFICES ON THE WEST COAST OF AFRICA.—Some official correspondence respecting the affairs of the West Coast of Africa has been published. In one of the reports Captain H. L. Gallwey, Vice Consul, says many of the slaves in the Benin country are victims to fetish rule. During his few days' stay in the city he had evidence of no fewer than four crucifixions that had taken place some weeks previously. One case had been intended to stop the rain, and two to bring it, while he heard nothing about the fourth.

FRENCH HOME MISSIONS.

Miss Gelderd, writing from Montclar, Aouste, Drôme, regarding the Mission Intérieure, says:—

"Founded twenty-three years ago, for the purpose of evangelising the French by Frenchmen, and by means of French gifts, the Mission Intérieure has faithfully continued its work till now, when, by diminution of its resources, it seems in danger of perishing. To those who know how useful have been the visits of its agents in the country districts, the "out-of-the-way places," it would be a great grief if the society should come to an end. I do not speak of its work in the cities and towns, because there are other societies which work there, and also because I do not personally know its work there, important though it is. But I do know, by experience, how precious, though necessarily rare, such visits have been here—how longed for before the arrival of the evangelist, how fondly remembered afterwards.

"Permit me to mention an incident connected with the last visit of M. Roux, agent of the Mission. During the last two years this vast parish has been without pastor, and has had

ONLY OCCASIONAL SERVICES.

Last winter there was much sickness, and many deaths. In one household death took the youngest, a lovely baby boy of two. The first death in the family; they never thought he could die. Brothers and little sisters were unconsolable, and the poor mother, a wild frightened look in her eyes, gathered the children close, as if she feared death might at any moment snatch another. A few days after the funeral came M. Roux. He could only give us a few hours, but he found time, besides the meeting in the nearest village, to climb the hillside and visit the hamlet where lived the stricken family. He sat by the hearth, got the mother to tell him all the story of her loss, and then he said, "I had only one child. God took him away when he was only four. He has never given me another." It was strange to see the look that answered his.

HE COULD SYMPATHISE,

for he had suffered; he could comfort, because he himself had been comforted of God. That visit will never be forgotten.

"We were hoping to have M. Roux again this winter. How fitted he is for this work we know well, and shall deeply regret if from want of funds his visits can no longer be looked for. I know that French Protestants ought to find funds for the Mission Intérieure; but there is more excuse for them than English people think. I wonder if English Christians know how poorly the Government pays the pastors. I do not speak of those in the larger towns, where the expense of living is higher, and where there are a few rich to add something to the Government allowance. But in the country the general amount is 2000 francs—counting by francs it sounds handsome, but its English value is £80. I believe there are some who receive even less, 1800 francs (£72), with perhaps 100 francs (£4) as rent for a house if there is no parsonage. He cannot have much to give out of such a salary, and what little he can spare he will naturally give to the works of his own church in the first place. Now, the Mission Intérieure is not a Society confined to any one church. It was founded on the principles of and it is partly on this account that its resources are so deficient. On its committee are some of the noblest and most devoted pasteurs of the Reformed Church, working heartily and harmoniously with pastors of the Free Church and the Methodist Church. I have thought that some friends of the principles of the Evangelical Alliance might like to come to the help of the Mission Intérieure in its hour of need.

"I hope that the testimony of an Englishwoman, who has resided for twelve years among the French peasants, and knows their needs and something of the efforts of the Mission to do good among them, may be of use, and that I may venture to ask for the Mission Intérieure what its rules forbid it to ask for itself, English sympathy and English help. The president, Pasteur Emile Houter, publishes a monthly sheet, Le Relèvement, admirably suited for distribution. Perhaps when French is so much studied, many families would find such a paper welcomed by the boys and girls. 1s. 6d. would pay for it, postage included. The address of M. Houter is 7, Rue Dragon, Marseilles."

REV. EDWARD SEELEY*
ON SYMPATHY IN SUFFERING.

When we are disposed to murmur because we and our fellow-creatures are subject to suffering, here is an all-sufficient answer to our murmurs, although it adds to the number of our intellectual problems: the God who made us so that we are subject to suffering, and who overrules all our affairs, and thus may be said to allot, or at least to permit, all our sufferings, has Himself assumed our nature, and in it He has suffered, and thus He has Himself learnt by a real and bitter experience to sympathise in the truest sense of the word with his suffering creatures, and more especially with those of our own race.

Amazing thought! Strange indeed it is that we can talk about this so often, and think about it so little! Surely one reason is that we hardly realise the fact that the Lord Jesus—our Saviour who suffered in our mortal nature—is in very truth God the Creator. Yet this is a distinctly revealed and essential truth of Christianity. We miss some of the lessons of comfort that may be derived from the sufferings of our Divine Saviour if we overlook the fact that He came among men to suffer distress and pain as well as death. The purpose and the motive for which a thing is done or borne by any person are often of more importance than the mere act of doing or bearing. We instinctively feel the truth of this in reference to our fellow-creatures; it is true also in reference to God. . .

It is an historical fact that the Incarnation was followed by the endurance of much suffering by the God-Man. From this fact we might infer, even if the inference were unsupported by direct revelation, that it was God's purpose that his Incarnate Word should endure suffering. But we are not left to inference alone. For though the sufferings of Christ were in great measure wilfully inflicted by sinful men, yet those sufferings were foretold by many prophecies before the incarnation, and our Lord repeatedly referred to those prophecies and said that they would be fulfilled in Him. And as those prophecies make it evident that the incarnation was a preparation for Redemption, and that the endurance of suffering and death was to be part of that method for effecting Redemption, we have the authority of Divine revelation for saying that the incarnation of God was designed and accomplished partly for the endurance of suffering. . .

God rules wisely and lovingly, and also sympathetically, for He knows our sorrows. Yes, indeed, He knows. He knows because He observes all things, even the thoughts and feelings of our inmost heart. He knows also because He made us, and "remembers that we are dust" (Ps. ciii. 13, 14). Ah! but most of all He knows because He has Himself, in the Person of his Word, experienced suffering in our nature, and therefore his sympathy is perfect—far more perfect than the sympathy of our nearest earthly friends, for our most intimate friends do not know all our suffering with perfect knowledge. God does. So He rules over us with perfect knowledge and perfect sympathy. Well might He say, "Come unto Me, all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you, and learn of Me; for I am meek and lowly in heart: and ye shall find rest unto your souls. For my yoke is easy, and my burden is light" (Matt. xi. 28-30).

REV. JAMES LEWIS.
ON THE KINGDOM OF GOD.*

It is hard sometimes to meet the taunt which is flung at the Church of Christ. We are reminded of the vast resources of wealth and power which for centuries have been at her disposal, and then we are bidden to gaze upon the terrible evils which are around us. Men declare that the Kingdom of God is mystical, transcendental, unsubstantial. They would alter the words, and announce that at length "the kingdom of man is at hand." They invite us to leave our pleasant dreams and face realities; they would have us devote our resources to the amelioration of the woes of humanity; and they declare that the only justification for the existence of the Churches is to be found in their social work.

Yes; the establishment of the Kingdom of God upon earth is slow work. It is not a mere change of surface; its foundations are in the deep. The Kingdom of God is not a splendid pageant. It calls man not to processions and pomp, but to penitence; and for that they are not quite so ready. Its coming is marked not by jubilant shouts, but by shame and confusion of face. It requires not that men should be busy with the affairs of other people, but that they should come first to themselves, and mourn over the meanness of their own nature, and the vanity of their own life; not that they should declaim against the evils of society, but weep bitter tears over their own sins; not that they should fussily seek to put other men right, but get put right themselves.

The Kingdom of God may affect these matters, but it does not directly deal with them. It deals with the individual. . . . "The Kingdom of God cometh not with observation"; it is hidden, internal, spiritual. It is the establishment of righteousness in the human soul. It is the subjugation of the powers of man to the mind of Christ. Men talk of this Kingdom as mystical, unreal. Let them try it for a fortnight! Jesus Christ aspires to a sway such as no Cæsar, Imperator, or Dictator, has ever been able to command. A rule of blood and iron can do much. That grand Roman power was mighty. It could tax men and make them pay. It could stretch its sceptre over distant provinces and awe men into submission. It could command the bodies, the time, the thoughts of men. It could send men to death, and even in his mortal pangs the poor gladiator must say, "O Cæsar, dying I salute thee!" One thing it could not do, even though it bound captives to its chariot wheels. There is a part of man's nature which coercion cannot reach. To that region man can retire, and say to all invading powers, "Thus far shall ye come, but no further."

That is the region in which the Kingdom of Christ prevails. He will possess the heart of men. He will control the passions, and govern the will, and purify the motives, and mould the life of man. The whole nature shall be subdued to the quality of its Lord, and all "the current of man's being" shall turn to Him. The drunkard shall deny his fierce craving; the thief shall steal no more; the liar shall speak the truth; the gambler shall renounce his ill-gotten gains; the sensualist shall draw away from his lust, and men shall be changed, captivated, charmed by his words. They shall prefer Him to their chief joy. If need be, for his sake, they will turn from their tenderest affections, "the sweet, sweet love of daughter, and of sister, or of wife." The maiden will turn from the fond gaze of her beseeching lover, and sooner than deny the Lord that bought her, by casting a pinch of incense before a false deity, she will renounce the hope of wedded bliss, and calmly look forward to a horrible death. The men and women thus conquered will boast of their bonds, and proudly display the brand of their ownership, and so far from being forced to grace a triumph in which they do not share—dragged, unwilling captives, to the chariot wheels of their conqueror—they will run with glad acclaim to push his chariot wheels along.

WEST LONDON MISSION.

CLEVELAND HALL.

As the result of the supplement which accompanied the issue of The Christian of December 13 last, a friend and I decided to pay a visit to Cleveland Hall, to witness what to us appeared a novel thing, "the Thursday evening drawing-room." We reached the hall a few minutes after the opening hour, eight o'clock, and were surprised to find that it was arranged as its title implies, and was decorated with some 1500 dolls and toys, which, attached to two Christmas trees, lighted up with candles, presented a most attractive and picturesque appearance.

Upon inquiry, we learnt that this doll and toy show was the first of its kind, and was the result of a suggestion made by Sister Grace in October last, that the friends of the mission should send dolls and toys for distribution to poor children associated with the Mission in Cleveland-street; 1500 were received, which not only provided for the requirements of Cleveland Hall, but admitted of some being sent to Soho and elsewhere.

On the floor round the platform were seated some 200 children, each child having her eyes eagerly fixed upon some specially attractive doll or toy, which she hoped would fall to her lot to secure. The evening opened with the singing by the children of "Hark the herald angels sing," "Once in Royal David's city," then followed recitations by two little girls, aged four and six respectively, which spoke volumes for the pains and trouble taken by Sister Grace and others in these little mites. After further hymn singing, Sister Lillie, having previously made a few appropriate remarks, distributed the gifts to her little friends. The delight shown upon each little face as he or she received the doll or toy I shall never forget; but, above all, the admirable and loving way in which Sister Grace secures the attention and good behaviour of these poor children is worth anyone's while to pay a visit to Cleveland Hall.

This is one only of the many ways adopted of winning confidence by Christian love, and thus the friends who work at the hall are enabled to bear the burden of the poor as few others have the opportunity to do. I believe that not a day passes without something going on at this hall, and thus an immense amount of service is done from week to week in one of the most densely populated and needy districts of the metropolis.

It is obvious that such service demands increasing help, and I feel sure that anyone who visited Cleveland Hall, and who was in a position to help directly or indirectly, would do all in his or her power to keep the work in full activity, and so relieve the anxiety of those who labour there for the good of others.

A MISSION LAUNCH IN SHANGHAI.—Writing to the North China Daily News on November 6, Mrs. Muirhead tells of the dedication of the steam-launch Sunbeam, recently purchased on behalf of the Missions to Seamen. On Sundays she will ply among the ships in harbour, conveying their crews to and from the services in the mission church, the afternoon Bible-class, or a service on board one of the vessels, and on one or more week nights she will be similarly engaged. Once weekly she will go down to visit vessels anchored at Woosung, a most important and hitherto inevitably neglected sphere of work. Besides the original cost of 2000 dols. the expense of shipping the launch from Hong Kong amounted to 150 dols., and a further expense of 500 dols. has been incurred in a thorough overhaul of the vessel and some indispensable alterations. She will consume about six tons of coal monthly, three tons of which are already promised.

AMONG RUSSIAN EXILES.

BY A. STUNDIST.*

TIFLIS, formerly the capital of the kingdom of Georgia, and at present the central point of Caucasia, has for several decades been a place of exile for those banished to the Caucasus for their faith. To the tourist Tiflis is an interesting and picturesque place. The city is divided into two distinct parts, the new or European, and the old or Asiatic. In the new part of the city the stranger's attention is drawn to the wide and well-paved streets, with broad pavements of asphalt, avenues shaded with trees, without which it would be impossible to go out under the burning sun of a summer day. In this part of the city the tourist will be surprised to see large houses of stone, public buildings, book-stores, and big hotels and shops, tramways, and other signs of European civilisation. But the dark Oriental faces, the picturesque Asiatic costumes, and all possible Eastern dialects remind the visitor that he is not in Europe.

Of this he will become still more conscious when he comes to Majdan, the centre of the Asiatic part of the town. The first impression one gets on entering the market of Majdan is such that one involuntarily asks,

"HAVE I COME TO A PANDEMONIUM?"

The whole place is teeming with dark Asiatics, with their many-coloured dirty dresses and high sheepskin caps (papácha), which give to them a savage look. Sharp guttural sounds of unknown dialects; the screaming of children running about in the crowd; the shouting of dealers, carrying on their heads large wooden bowls filled with fruit; the creaking of ungreased arbi (carts with two wheels); the strange noise and din, make your head dizzy. The narrow and crooked streets; the smouldering coal fires at the entrances of the houses, on which fires the Asiatics roast their shishlik (mutton roasted on spit) complete the dismally strange picture, and you feel a strong desire to get away as soon as possible into fresh air and clearer light. The tramway is the only thing that reminds you of European civilisation in this part of the city.

Here on the shore of the river Kura, near the cathedral of Zion, built in the sixth century, and in which the Georgian kings were crowned, stands the gloomy fort of Metjech, which for nearly 1200 years has served as a prison. This fort is well known to almost all religious exiles, who are forwarded by étape to Trans-Caucasia. Only a few of them escape being incarcerated in this damp and

DREARY AND OVERCROWDED DUNGEON.

From this place the exiled Russian nonconformists are usually sent to Elisabetpol, from whence they are distributed to different parts of Trans-Caucasia, where they are settled among the half savage natives. But although they are thus compelled to live in the midst of the natives, yet they do not commingle with them, but keep themselves strictly separate in life and manners. They are peaceable and pious; their dwellings, however poor they may be, are neat; they are industrious, and their women also work hard; while the Asiatic women never take any part in the work, but lie about all day on the soft "tchachi" (a kind of sofa), after having painted their faces in the morning.

These natives of Trans-Caucasia consist of several different tribes, as Grusinians, Imeretians, Mingrelians, Ossetines, all belonging to the Georgian Church, while others, as Tartars, Lesgines, and Persians, are Mohammedans. All these different tribes represent a great variety of characters and moral qualities, but all of them live mainly on fruit-raising and cattle-breeding. The influx of Russian religious exiles into Trans-Caucasia has exerted a great influence over the economical conditions of the country. Before their arrival agriculture was in its infancy; they may in reality be said to have introduced agriculture in that country.

I made my first acquaintance with some of these exiles in the fall of 1887. From the first the people made a very favourable impression on me by their hospitality, their tidiness, their wide reading—some of them had procured a respectable collection of books—and their

of mind than the Orthodox peasants with whom I ever came in contact. Of all matters these, exiles are, of course, most interested in religion. As soon as two of them meet, be it on the street, at a wedding, or around the tea-table, they almost immediately commence discussing some Biblical question. If they are of different opinions a lively discussion will take place between them, but this never turns into quarrelling or animosity, because they lay great stress on the Saviour's commandment, "Blessed are the peacemakers, for they shall be called the children of God." If at any time harsh words are spoken it is mostly on the part of Molokans, never of Stundists.

I remember very vividly, on the occasion of my first meeting with the exiles, a discussion about the Holy Ghost, a subject which interests them intensely. We were sitting, after Russian fashion, around a hospitable table, on which stood the boiling samovar. Russians generally like to carry on their conversation at the tea-table, and the nonconformists use this national custom as a means of escaping interference on the part of the police, because they are prohibited to come together for prayer and religious conversation, be it only two of them. The Molokan elder opened the discussion on the Holy Ghost, during which he grew a little too hot. The host, however, soon quieted the minds of the party, and directed the discussion into another channel.

THE MOLOKANS.

My first impression of the Molokans was not very favourable, but on more intimate acquaintance I formed a much better opinion of them. They are divided into two sections, but all agree on one point: they interpret the Holy Scriptures "spiritually," i.e., they deny all outward ceremonies, abstain strictly from all kinds of food which are forbidden in the Old Testament, forbid the women to pray or speak at public meetings, and keep them in subjection to their husbands. Their views differ with regard to the indwelling of the Holy Ghost in the human heart, some of them denying its possibility, while others again entirely deny the existence of a Holy Ghost. For many years the religious exiles in these distant parts of Russia enjoyed a fair extent of freedom, but during the reign of the late Tsar all their liberty was taken from them, and they were everywhere rigorously treated as prisoners. This has to be borne in mind in order to understand their present condition, and what I shall have to say about my personal experiences among them.

I was not permitted to stay long in Tiflis, the police looking with suspicion on my repeated visits to the religious exiles, and regarding me as a political agitator. I had, in fact, to hurry away from the city, to escape the police. I first went to Batoum, hoping that the authorities would forget me during my absence, and that I should be left in peace; but my hopes were disappointed, as I shall proceed to show. On my arrival at Batoum, in the night, all my things and my money were stolen from me. I then had at once to apply to the police, and during the investigation which followed, both my name, my person, and my whereabouts became known to the civil as well as the ecclesiastical authorities. This became the greatest obstacle to my mission work in that town.

I put up at the house of a poor Stundist family, who had lived long in the town, and knew many people there. In company with members of this family, I visited the poor in their homes and in hospitals, trying to help them both temporally and spiritually; besides, I held every evening crowded Gospel meetings with such persons as I found hungering and thirsting for the Gospel. Among those were many Molokans, some Orthodox people, and some Lutherans, not only adults but children also. They were all of them so ignorant of the Holy Scriptures, and had such a thirst after the Word of truth, that I could not satisfy all who wished to speak with me. Soon I made the acquaintance of an old widow, at whose house a large number of all kinds of people used daily to assemble. She was in her way

A VERY REMARKABLE PERSON.

She told me the following from her life:—"I was only a young girl when I first commenced to thirst after truth. I was born Orthodox, as they say, and I was very zealous in following the religious commands of the Church. I went to churches and cloisters, also kissed the ikons and relics in order to obtain the pardon of my sins and peace for my soul; but the more I came to know of the essence of Orthodoxy, the more my zeal for it cooled. Then I left the Orthodox Church, and joined the 'Old Believers,' but among them I found only ignorance and spiritual darkness. I then joined the Molokans, hoping to find truth and peace among them, but though they stand on a higher level than the 'Old Believers,' yet I found that the life of those around me did not correspond with the teachings of the Gospel. I was now brought to despair; and I am like a wanderer, lost on an endless steppe in a winter storm, who cannot discover any trace of a road, and does not know which direction to take to find his way home. And, in addition to all," she said, with tears in her eyes, "I feel that a heavy burden of sin is pressing on my shoulders, and that I am going to eternal ruin."

I felt a deep sympathy for this old woman, who had gone through such a varied experience, and I tried, as plainly and simply as possible, to tell her of God's love to her in Christ Jesus, quoting such passages of Scripture as were calculated to comfort her. She was deeply touched, as, for the first time in her life, she heard the simple story of salvation through Christ, and asked me to visit her as often as possible. When I went to her the next evening her hut was crowded with people. The hut was so dilapidated that one could see through the slits from the outside, and hear what was going on inside; and I could not understand how these meetings were permitted to go on, as the Russian laws forbid all kinds of meetings, and these were held openly.

Through the help of this widow I was able to reach a large number of the poorer classes with the message of the Gospel, and a revival commenced in the town. The popes, however, soon found out that many of their sheep were leaving the fold of the Orthodox Church, and resolved to get me out of the way. For this purpose they wrote to the governor that I was a traitress, who was spreading dangerous doctrines. They procured false witnesses, and succeeded in bringing me before the court. If, at this juncture, I had not, through unexpected help from friends, succeeded in fleeing from the town, I would certainly have been banished to Siberia.

TRAINING COLLEGE, DUNOON.

THIS college is resuming work after the holidays, and is receiving additional students. There are now twenty-eight students. New mission stations have been opened up recently, and it is expected some of these will soon become churches. It is hoped that English friends who visit Scotland will call at the college and see it working for themselves.

It is found that a great number of able young men who are not in a position to secure a University degree are yet willing to study for three years so as to get an efficient training, and it is from such young men that the students come. As the present phases of Bible criticism call for members who are high class in Hebrew and Greek, no effort is spared to give the students textual and spiritual knowledge of the Bible itself.

The college thus holds a middle place between the M.A. curriculum of the Presbyterian and the Bible Institute, which deal with other classes of students. While there is no wish to rush uncultured men into the Gospel work it is felt that on the one hand Gospel training should be more than ever markedly spiritual and Biblical, and on the other hand it is believed that continuous study along these lines for three or four years will produce men well equipped for preaching the Word.

In cases where young men cannot pay for their own board they are received at the college on the understanding that whenever able to pay they will do so. There are no class fees. Books cost very little, and the expenses are a minimum. From the first God has raised up friends to the college who have supplied the needs, and the new year is full of promise. Many of the students hope to enter the mission field, and it is hoped that the various missionary societies will make full inquiry as to the training so as to be able to judge of the fitness of the students should application be made.

Churches and mission stations wishing a supply can always depend on such by application to the Principal.

LIVERPOOL.—Granby Hall, Granby-street, was opened on Sunday last with services specially for non-churchgoers. The preacher was Mr. James Eyres, who has taken charge of the work. Mr. Eyres is joined by a band of earnest workers, and the outlook is promising.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 20.—JOHN IX.

Light for Blind Eyes (1-12).—Of what good is it that the light of the world is shining if our eyes are blinded? "The light shineth in darkness, but the darkness comprehendeth it not." The god of this world blinds the eyes of those that believe not. The man was blind by birth, and Jesus daubed his eyes with clay, thus making him a sign of the blind and blinded people (see ch. xii. 40). Blind and blinded souls can only be healed by going to the true Siloam —the Sent One. How careful was Christ of one blind beggar! Amid a shower of stones He stopped to give him sight. Oh to work as He did! Thoughtless of self, eager only to bless and save during the short day of life.

The Confessor (13-34).—He begins by stating the circumstances of his cure. He dares to pronounce Christ a prophet indeed. He is forced by the urgency of their questions to dwell on the marvel of his cure, and presently to cast their revilings back on themselves, till finally he vindicates Christ against their aspersions. They desired to insinuate that Christ was evil, and performed his miracles by collusion with the prince of evil; he, on the other hand, was sure that only through the co-operation of God could Jesus have delivered him from lifelong darkness. How often in the history of the Church has opposition forced humble souls to heroic words and deeds, and to conceptions of the nature of religion, which had been otherwise impossible.

Cast Out, but Found (35-41).—The Lord does not leave the outcast, but seeks him out as the shepherd his sheep. The man had been true to his light, and the Lord leads him into the perfect day of faith. The light that illumines the sincere and simple-hearted seeker blinds the self-opinionated Pharisee.

MONDAY, JANUARY 21.—JOHN X.

The Porter (1-6).—The porter was evidently John the Baptist, who opened the door of the Jewish fold to Christ. The religious leaders of the people preyed upon them, and he did not recognise them, but of the Jewish people there were many who were Christ's own sheep. These recognised Him, and He them, and He led them out from Judaism to Pentecost and the Christian Church. (4) All through the ages He has been putting forth his own, sometimes amid storms of obloquy and opposition, sometimes into arduous toil, but He never fails to go before those whom He puts out. All true life is following Jesus. We acquire a spiritual perception which is able to detect his voice amid the many that speak in the Babel of the world.

The Door (7-18).—Through Christ alone can we enter into the flock, enjoying its pasturage, sharing its safety, and ultimately resting in its fold. "He shall be saved." Let us claim that we may realise the full meaning of this great promise. Let us go in for fellowship, and out for work, and always find pasture. (10) Pasture is not the only thing that Jesus gives his own, but abundant life. There are two conditions of soul. Let us not be content with life, but go on to its abundance. (11) Only through his death is this life possible. He met the wolf of hell because He cared for us. (14, 15) See R.V. (16) Through the ages He is bringing those other sheep. Not one fold, but one flock. (18) Note the voluntariness of his death.

The Son (19-39).—Evidently the Jews were not his sheep, for they did not heed his voice. This is the ultimate test of men still. The voice of Jesus is still speaking in the world, but the majority of men turn from it. (28) Our safety is guaranteed against man and devil by the double hand, first of the Father, then of the Son. (36) The Father had set Him apart for his great work, but John xvii. 19 ff. tells us how utterly he had entered into his Father's purpose. (38) The unique claims of Christ are supported by his works. The Gospel story is consistent with everything that He claimed to be.

John's Grave (40-42).—We may lack genius, but say true things of Christ which will be remembered long after we have passed from earth.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 22.—JOHN XI.

Lazarus Dead (1-16).—Sickness is permitted as the foil to set forth the glory of God. It is consistent with perfect love, and that love with delays, but He will come though stones threaten Him. (9) As long as we live in the will of God, we walk in daylight, for a single eye is the lamp of the inner life. But when considerations of our own safety or comfort intrude, the light dies off our soul. Christ ever abode in light. (11) This is Christ's remark still, as one after another of his friends falls asleep to awake in his likeness. (15) It was as though He said, I could not have been there and see Him die. It was better to be absent, for an opportunity of performing a miracle which will ever after help your faith. (16) For this speech, Thomas, we can almost forgive thy doubts.

Lazarus Raised (17-44).—So far the sisters only believed that Christ could ward off death. In this awful sorrow they were to learn that He could raise the dead. (25) They must also learn that what men call death does not affect the true life of the spirit. (33) The sympathy of Jesus must still pour itself out for every group of mourners, and over all breaking hearts. (38) But perhaps He groans as much for man's unbelief as for sorrow. (40) Dare to believe, and thou shalt see the glory of God. (41-44) Christ demands our co-operation. He alone can give life, but we must roll away the stone, and unwind the grave-clothes.

Caiaphas (45-57).—Unconsciously he uttered the doctrine of the Atonement. That gathering together of the scattered children of God, into oneness with each other and with God, is the secret of the Cross. (56) He comes to every feast spread for his reception, though Pharisees and priests lie in wait for his life.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 23.—JOHN XII.

Anointed (1-8).—Love counts not the cost of its spikenard, and is betrayed by the sweet perfume of its acts. Those who love not cannot understand love, but Christ throws the shield of protection around the timid loving heart and says, "Let her alone." We are not always to expend ourselves on what is merely utilitarian. Acts of devotion to Christ Himself are very acceptable and well pleasing to Him.

Loved and Hated (9-19).—His opponents were mad with despair and hate, whilst the crowds of his disciples filled the air with Hosannas. Our King is meek. The adulation of the crowd does not flatter Him; He knows that He is riding to his death.

Sought After and Lifted Up (20-36).—The East to the cradle; the West to the Cross. Philip's Greek name encouraged the Greeks. The hour of Christ's glory is that when the hidden wealth of his being is unlocked through death for the participation of all the world. (27) His human nature shrank from the anguish and desertion of Calvary, but He was steadfast in his desire that the Father should be glorified. (31) When the world-rulers and representatives adjudged Christ to the cross, they were themselves judged. (32) Who can He be but God, in whom all men find their centre.

Believed in and Rejected (37-50).—Christ revealed the Father. Faith in Him is faith in God. His words are the Father's words. His life is the outshining of His Father's nature. He who is humble and sincere, and opens his heart to know God, will inevitably detect God in Christ.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 24.—JOHN XIII.

The Washing of the Disciples' Feet (1-11).—When about to resume his glory, our Lord stooped the lowest. We have here in miniature the emptying of Himself that has led to our cleansing. "He began to wash." Surely this act has been drawn out for all the following centuries; those have no part in Christ who are not willing to be washed by Him. We bathed when we first came to the Cross, but our feet need daily cleansing from the pollution which we contract by our walk through the world. It is the sincerest humility to let Christ do his will with us.

The Divine Master our Example (12-20).—Christ, notwithstanding his great humility, expects to be called Master and Lord; do we so call and treat Him? It is easier to know than do. But He who sent us is with and in us, and is prepared to accomplish his Divine ideal. Ah, what sorrow must have been constantly present to the heart of Christ in the knowledge that all his pity and love would be resisted by Judas, as the rock refuses to respond to the genial spring!

The Traitor (21-30).—How well Judas had played his part. No one suspected him of treachery, they thought that so admirable a man was willing to tear himself from his Master's company in order to give something to the poor. Only those who love are admitted to Christ's secrets. Reclining on the breast of Christ is the position for asking questions about fellow-disciples. The sop, an evidence of supreme love, was Christ's last effort to turn Judas from his purpose. To refuse this, was to open the door wide to Satan.

The Glory of the Son of Man (31-38).—That God's love should be perfectly manifested was the purpose of Jesus in executing which He was glorified. Heaven is certain—but delayed; its essence is to be where Jesus is. Peter's education was not complete. Years of discipline were needed yet to temper his vehement spirit, and make him strong to follow Christ to the death without faltering.

FRIDAY, JANUARY 25.—JOHN XIV.

The Father (1-14).—As He neared the end, our Lord could speak of little else than the Father. Heaven was his Father's house. He cared only that through the knowledge of Himself they should come to know the Father. To see Him was to see the Father. He was ever abiding in the Father, and the Father in Him personally. His miracles were his Father's works by Him. From his position at the Father's right hand, He would do greater works in the world by the Church than He had ever done directly. Throughout the coming time He would answer the prayer that his Father might be glorified. It seemed as if He only wanted their faith and love that He might lay them before his Father, securing a personal union between those who loved Him, and the Father, who loved Him best.

Love and Obedience (15-24).—Christ is one Comforter, the Holy Spirit another. His presence is as literal as Christ's, but spiritual. Through the Spirit we behold the Saviour, receive his life, and become conscious of revelations made within the devout and faithful soul. Notice the test of love. It is not emotion, but obedience. What you will do for Christ is the gauge of your love to Him. Obedience is also the one condition of participation in the inner manifestation of God. Note that marvellous we (23), in which this meekest of men identifies Himself with the Eternal.

Peace (25-31).—Where the Spirit is, there the peace of God rests. "Christ's peace," that is the peace that filled his own bosom. The world may be in arms, death imminent, the Prince of this world intent to injure, but the heart which reposes upon the will of God knows no shock, no fear.

SATURDAY, JANUARY 26.—JOHN XV.

The Vine (1-11).—Perhaps it was trailing round the trellis of the window as the Lord rose from the supper and looked out into the night. This parable has rather to do with service than with life. No branch, which has become one with Him, can ever be torn away and be lost, so far as eternal salvation is concerned. But many of his people, who have ceased to be fruitful, have been removed from positions of usefulness in the Church, and taken away so far as their service was involved. (5) Usefulness of the highest character can only be gained through that abiding fellowship with Christ which allows Him to work out his plan speaking his words by the yielded vessel. (7) Abiding in Him we become sympathetic in his plans, and ask what He wills to give. (10) Obedience is the secret of abiding in the radiance of his love, and participating in the fulness of his joy.

The Friends of Christ (12-20).—A little ago we were told that He loved as the Father loved Him, now we are told to love one another with the same love. His command needs to be an enabling, or we can never fulfil it. Our love is not like his, unless it is prepared to sacrifice itself even to death. (14) On our part friendship involves obedience; on his part, the making known of the deep things of God. In so far as we do his will, we know. (16) There is no limit to what the Father will do for those whom his Son calls friends. (18) There is no limit to the hatred and persecution which the world will vent on those who have ceased to belong to it, because of their identification with the Crucified.

The Hatred of the World (21-27).—Persecution has often been inflicted in the name of God, but those who persecute, Christ says, do not know God. The hatred of Christians is the hatred of Christ, and thus the hatred of the Father. (26, 27) In each Christian century there has been this double witness of the Spirit in the Church; the voice of the Church has testified to the living Christ, not arguing, but attesting, and to each word of testimony the Holy Spirit has borne an assenting witness. All Christian apologetics are of less importance than the witness of obscure but Holy Ghost lives.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 27.

THE GREAT CONFESSION.—Matt. xvi. 13-23.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 16.

THE city of Cesarea Philippi was at the extreme north of Palestine, only about four miles east of Dan. It was about twenty-five or thirty miles north-east of the Sea of Galilee, amidst the finest scenery in Palestine. One of the spurs of Hermon rises to the height of 1000 feet behind the city ruins. From a dark cave beneath this cliff there issues one of the three streams which unite to form the Jordan. It must be distinguished from Cesarea on the coast, so often mentioned in the Acts. Its name is a combination of Cæsar, the Roman emperor, and Philip, the tetrarch.

Another fact which adds to the value of our Lord' utterance was that his own cause never seemed in such a depressed and hopeless condition as now. Recall the incidents connecting this with the former lesson (John vi. 66-71, Matt. xv., xvi. 12). Many of his disciples have forsaken Him; opposition has become so strong in Galilee that He has deemed it wise to depart from it, and to work in the regions round about. Through all seeming defeat He goes on conquering and to conquer.

The opinions of the people concerning Christ, as given by the disciples (13, 14), are remarkable for two things. First, not one of them seems to call Him the Messiah. Yet they had beheld his works, and had opportunity for consulting Old Testament prophecy, and professed to be longing for Messiah's coming. Next, every opinion showed that He was regarded as no ordinary person. The very best and noblest of the prophets were suggested even to those who rejected his Messiahship. This was no mean compliment to pay Him, yet it did not prevent them putting Him to death!

The confession of Peter (15-17), who spoke as representing all the apostles, stands in striking contrast to the opinions of the people. Our Lord had spoken of Himself as "the Son of Man" (13). Peter acknowledges Him to be the Christ, the Messiah, the fulfiller of all the prophecies made concerning Him, and consequently "the Son of the living God."

It is not needful to enter fully into the controversy which has raged round the words of our Lord to Peter (18, 19). Of the rock on which Christ builds his church there are three interpretations—(1) that it applies to the doctrine confessed by Peter; (2) that it is Christ Himself; (3) that it is Peter. The last of these appears most natural, but as the Romanists base upon this interpretation the doctrine of the supremacy of Peter and the subsequent authority of the Popes, Protestants have frequently accepted one of the other two interpretations. Of the second it must be said that Christ is the Rock, and that no explanation of this passage can be accepted which denies to Him this title. But if the third, and most natural, interpretation be read in connection with Eph. ii. 20 and Rev. xxi. 14, it will be seen that no supremacy of Peter was intended by our Lord or recognised by the apostles, since all are described as "foundations." Upon Christ, the Rock of Ages, the Church rests, but the first stones of the building, which are as a foundation to the rest, are the apostles. "Hades" is the abode of the dead, and "gates" represent the power of death. The meaning is that even death cannot destroy the Church. Was it not tried upon Christ Himself, and upon the martyrs who succeeded Him? "You may kill us," said one to those who persecuted him, "but you cannot hurt us."

"The keys" (19) have also occasioned great controversy, and Romanists have sought here further proof of the supremacy of Peter. "The kingdom of heaven" is the Church of ver. 18; and the keys represent the power committed by our Lord to those who are commissioned to teach. "Stier quotes a statement from Maimonides that it was the custom when a scribe was formally authorised to teach, to hand him a key, and give him power to bind and loose." This power was committed equally to all the apostles (Matt. xviii. 18), and instances of its exercise are found in the admission of three thousand on the day of Pentecost, the preaching to Cornelius, and the decision given concerning Jewish rites (Acts ii. x. xv.)

How significant that such glorious predictions should be followed by the most distinct and definite announcement of his death that had been made (20-23)! His triumphs are achieved through death. Peter's well meant, but mistaken rebuke may result from the over-confidence inspired by the commendation he has just received. The reply of Jesus is calculated to humble him.

The questions raised by this lesson were never more important than to day. The teacher will do well, not only to refute error, but to teach truth. There are many strong Protestants who are not Christians. What is their Protestantism worth?

For the Young.

SELF-SACRIFICE AND THE REWARD.

"Now, boys, be quiet, all of you, and parse the next three sentences until I come back." Thus spoke Mr. Ruskin to his forty-two pupils; then he departed, after having shut the door. But the sound of his footsteps had hardly died off when, suddenly as the whistle of an engine, a terrible uproar arose in the class. The boys struck their desks with their rulers, jumped over the benches, howled, shouted to the top of their voices. Two seized each other by their hair, and rolled over together far across the spacious schoolroom. Hugey, thus nicknamed on account of his large dimensions, was teasing two or three of the little ones, who had fled behind the table, and were blocked up there by the size of their assailant.

A very few boys had tried to be obedient, but the deafening noise hindered them from working; they were almost stunned when the door flew open, the master returning much sooner than had been expected.

Sudden and deep silence! All bent over their desks like the best scholars in the world. Alas for the two rolling ones, they were still under the benches! "Bell! Smith! You are marked," cried the tutor, "but you are not the only culprits, I know it. Shame on you! The lowest parish-school would not dare to behave so badly. Well! By this afternoon I must have the signatures of the culprits. Else you will everyone of you lose your holiday to-morrow, and receive the severest punishment that I have ever inflicted. Comprehended, I hope?" The boys looked at each other in a way which seemed to imply: "Well! I dare say! Mr. Ruskin (or Paddy-Mop, as he was called) is not easy to manage." One of them, little Henry Guilbert, was a delicate-looking child, so gentle that he would not have hurt a fly, a conscientious worker withal, and yet, the boys perceived it well, not a favourite with the master. Henry's excessive timidity and nervousness made him appear stupid and idle, and often provoked Mr. Ruskin.

At last school is over, out rush the boisterous troop, pushing, jostling each other. "Guilbert," shouts Hugey. "You shall sign this paper, stating that you made the noise." "Yes, hurrah! bravo!" repeated many voices. "But," stammered the little one, paling, "I made no noise at all." "How dare you! We all saw you." "Yes, yes, we also," echoed the others. Poor Henry pleaded and protested in vain; his companions stood fast, they pulled his ears, his hair, screaming, "Sign, Sign!" Hugey trod cruelly on his feet, whilst he squeezed the pen between his fingers. At last, frightened out of his wits, the child signed. Some boys felt indignant, but what was to be done! Better keep the peace, and be led by the greater number.

One however, Johnny Hope, a fair child about twelve years old, ran home at once, trembling all over. "Oh, papa," cried he, as they sat down to their early dinner, "fancy! the boys forced Guilbert to come forward, as having done the row, whilst Paddy-Mop had gone out of the schoolroom." "What do you mean? Speak more plainly," answered Mr. Hope. "But yes, papa; things are so. Paddy Mop had been called out; then they kicked up a row." "You too?" interrupted the father. "Well, no. Maybe I should have set to it also if he had remained away much longer. Anyhow, it was impossible to get on with one's version in such an uproar. But he came back almost directly, and he was furious. He said that if the culprits did not name themselves, he would punish us all. Then, you know, the boys forced Guilbert to say that he was the one, to write it at least, for they wrote a paper that he had of course to sign."

"And he had not made any noise?" asked in her turn Mrs. Hope. "Why, mamma, what are you thinking of? When you know Henry so well! He is as meek as a girl, and so shy. Perhaps he gave three knocks on his desk, but no more. I sat next to him, and I know it. But he dare not deny, because he had knocked a little, and the boys laid all the blame on him. I am quite sure that twenty-five at least ought to have pleaded guilty before he did." "My boy," said Mr. Hope, putting down his fork and looking seriously at his dear child, "you will not allow your companions to be so unjustly punished?" "Certainly not, papa, but what am I to do? I should like to go and speak with Paddy-Mop." . . . . "Johnny," said his mother, "why do you not say Mr. Ruskin?" "Yes, if I went and told Paddy Ruskin that Guilbert is not the one I should be a tell-tale right off, and they would all of them thrash me to atoms."

"Let them beat you," replied Mr. Hope, "One cannot do good without paying the cost. However, that is not the best way to shield Henry. Are there not in your class a few good boys who do not follow the big flock? Then try together to introduce some justice. Do not allow such cowardly tricks. You may be beaten, Johnny," added he, with a kind look at his wife. "Never mind, perhaps even that will teach your companions that John Hope's conscience is not to be trifled with, and it may be a blessing to them. Besides, my boy, true sacrifice always carries a blessing along with it. If you wish to obtain it forget your own self. You know who it was who accomplished the greatest of all sacrifices. He forgot Himself in shedding his blood for us. Follow the footsteps of your Saviour in great as in small things, and sacrifice yourself if so need be." "Yes," added Mrs. Hope, in a low voice, but with her whole heart.

And here I should add that John had already given himself to Christ with all the freshness and warmth of his boyish soul. Delicate health and frequent illness had perhaps been instrumental in this heavenly teaching.

After dinner his mother joined him in his little room, where he was preparing for school. "Johnny," said she, "have you thought of praying for God's help in what you are going to do?" "Yes, mamma; it is done," was the bright answer; and with a tender kiss the boy rushed downstairs. Alas! as he neared the school he heard the bell ringing already. Time failed for collecting together the boys whom he believed to be of one mind with himself and speaking with them. His difficult duty, he must fulfil alone. The master took his place at his desk, and perceived the paper placed there for him. "Well done, lads!" said he. "At least you make up your minds to acknowledge your fault. First, Paul Bell; second, Philip Smith (I knew it; did I not catch you on the floor?); third, Henry Guilbert! (H'm! I should not have guessed that one.) So you are a little sneak, Guilbert? Well, so far you had not shown your true colours."

Poor John! How his heart beat! He felt ready to choke. However, he rose up stoutly. At first his voice was a little husky, but it soon became quite firm. "Sir," said he, "they have told Guilbert that they would knock him down if he did not sign." "What does that mean," asked the master, severely, and looking sharply at John. "It's a crying shame, sir; it is not Guilbert who kicked up the row, but the others forced him to say that it was he. Then I thought to myself that I could not allow lies in our class." "Hurrah," called one voice. But it was the only one, it was drowned with whistlings and kickings. "Hush! silence!" thundered the master, as he rose. During one or two minutes nothing was heard but the sobs of Henry. How he cried, poor child! For the life of him he could not stop, as he retraced in his mind all that he had to endure from those naughty boys. "Never mind, Henry, don't cry," said the master, gently. "I see quite well that you are not to be blamed." Another minute's silence, then Mr. Ruskin, tearing up the paper, added, "For this once I let you off, and I will forgive all of you; but it must be the last time, mind you! I will allow no disobedience, and certainly no cowardice towards the tiny ones." And his brow darkened visibly.

"Mamma," said John that evening, as she bent over him in his bed to say good-night, and he gave her his last kiss; "the blessing of which papa spoke, it was that, wasn't it? that Paddy Ruskin punished no one? Because if he had, I should have been beaten to a powder." "Yes, darling; that and something more must have been the blessing. And you were not bullied at all?" "Well, a shaking or two, but at the bottom they were glad, I am sure. They hissed and shouted, 'Down with him!' A boy said, 'You ought to be shown at a fair for your blunder.' And another, 'It is your parents who told you to say all that.' And Hugey called after me, 'The greenest, the stupidest, the most sheepish boy in the whole creation!' But from Hugey that was a compliment, don't you see, mamma." And Johnny fell asleep almost with those last words, a happy smile on his rosy lips.

THE "CARAVAN" states that sixty meetings have been held during the past year in connection with the Travellers' National Total Abstainers' Union.

DR. BARNARDO'S SUPPER PARTY.

There is no sight in all this great London more pitiful and more pathetic than the party of 2000 street waifs whom Dr. Barnardo gathers once a year for supper at the Edinburgh Castle, Limehouse. This annual event came off on Wednesday evening last week. The guests were not gathered simply by tuck of drum, though that would have sufficed to furnish the required number. They were selected by agents instructed to invite: (1) Genuine waifs and strays of the street; (2) lodging-house children; (3) the children of sub-tenants of furnished rooms; and (4) a small number of the poorest of the poor in the lowest districts of the metropolis. A wide field was covered, as the following localities indicate, they being the points to which the search was pushed: Islington, Drury-lane, Pye-street, Westminster, New Cut, Lambeth, the Borough, Bermondsey, and Deptford. They proved a motley crowd; marshalled by sympathetic but stern-voiced policemen, the ticket-holders were eliminated from the harpies that gathered round the door, eager to pounce on any feeble ticket-holder to secure his ticket and his supper.

The comfortable atmosphere of the large hall was a happy change from the cheerless street, and soon the native talent woke up to accompany the music of the Barnardo brass band. To supply promptly two thousand very hungry children with supper is a feat which few would care to attempt, and fewer still satisfactorily accomplish. But this is Dr. Barnardo's twentieth annual supper, and with such an experience he has graduated an accomplished master of supper ceremony. So, seemingly with the greatest ease, with alternate smiles and trumpet calls, on his part, the supper appears without delay. The supplies are plentiful. A paper bag, containing substantial bread-and-butter, a bun, and a cake, is given to each little guest after grace is sung, and plentiful coffee, in capacious mugs, is supplied. Many, after honest efforts to dispose of their store, are compelled to reserve a portion to carry home.

Now, one with greater ease may look at and learn something of these little atoms of humanity. They have not got that deplorable look of misery that characterised the suppers of even ten years ago. Every year the standard of decency and good behaviour seems to improve. All of them of a school age say they attend school, and the honest work of the elementary teacher of the Board school and the ragged school is telling on the young generation. There is one little boy all by himself who can hardly have seen five summers. He cannot tell where he lives; in fact, he knows nothing but that "Muvver" brought him to the door, and is waiting in the street till he returns. But a big lad who never saw him before is caring for him like an elder brother.

Here are two lads who say they have passed the fifth standard, and are now at work. That sounds well. "At what?" "Selling matches."

"But surely not in this locality?" "Oh, no, we lives in Shoreditch; we starts off to the Strand and Piccadilly by ten in the mornin'; at twelve at night, when the theayters closes, we go home again."

"Get breakfast before you start?" "No, the fust tuppence we gits goes to Lockhart's."

"Make good wages?" "Well, yes, with luck we makes a shillin' a day each. There's no racin' just now. We makes two shillings a day each selling racin' papers in the season."

"But do you mean to stick to that work?" "No; maybe we'll get a better job."

A strong, manly young fellow of about twenty-two years comes in and takes a seat. He does not need much questioning. He overflows in modest talk.

"You see," he says, "I asked to come in because I was a Barnardo boy. I want to see the Doctor. He does not know I'm here. I went out in the Lake Superior in the June party in 1885. I would have been in gaol all my life but for the Doctor. My mother was done to death by my step-father when I was five years old, and nobody cared for me, and I was a bad boy, but Canada has been the making of me. I had the best master in the country. I can farm, I can garden, I can do—well anything, for you've got to be handy out there. And now I have come to take my brothers out. London will do no good for them. I can put them on the right way."

"Ah," said he, "I'll make the doctor's eyes dance when I tell him what I know, and how I spoke up for him out there, when people called his children the outcasts of London."

He was a never-to-be-forgotten object lesson, in a pilot cloth suit, of the good that is done by one boy rescued from idleness and crime and sent to the rich untilled acres of the wide Dominion. A happier change could not be conceived.

But we are neglecting the guests. About three hundred of them are girls. They are not particularly ragged, but unmothered little lassies always appear more pitiable and pathetic in their wretchedness than their strange brothers.

For their amusement the ancient and amusing play of "Punch and Judy" was produced, and over the scenes of their domestic broils, the children chortled in their joy. A fine series of lantern slides shown under the guidance of Rev. W. J. Mayers was much appreciated, and it gave him fine opportunities to point the arrows of thoughtfulness in the bosom of his youthful audience. There was a bag containing 2000 new sixpences kept well in view during the evening, and doubtless the expectation of ownership had something to do with good behaviour. Oranges, too, were known to be in reserve.

Nothing has yet been said to indicate the grand aim of the supper. It was to give an opportunity to anyone to volunteer for admission to the institutions. They would remain at Stepney until their cases were investigated, and all cases truly needful would be accepted. Passing the threshold, each would be trained as would be most suitable, emigration only being for those who proved to be industrious, physically healthy, mentally intelligent, and morally pure. As many as 150 destitute applicants have been admitted as a result of this supper in earlier days. A large number pressed to the front at Dr. Barnardo's invitation, but the number of accepted applicants could not be known for a day or two.

Dr. Barnardo's family now numbers nearly 5000 members, but with perfect faith that the Church of Christ will stand by him, he still stands by his open door.

YOUNG HELPERS' LEAGUE.

ON Saturday afternoon the customary holiday entertainment given by the children of Dr. Barnardo's Homes, specially for the benefit of the members of the Young Helpers' League, took place at the Royal Albert Hall, South Kensington. There was a large attendance, the youthful element, of course, being in the ascendant; and an exceedingly interesting and varied programme was gone through, consisting of singing by a choir of several hundred boys and girls, battalion drilling by ninety little boys, musical drill by a batch of little women from Ilford, a stirring game of football, cutlass drill by ninety small boys, in trim naval costume, a gymnastic display, and a parade by a small squad of Highlanders playing their bagpipes. One of the most diverting items in the programme was the introduction of quite a considerable party of "infantry" from Babies' Castle, the children, ranging in age from a few months to five years, amusing themselves with all sorts of games, and disporting themselves with as much freedom as though they had been happily at home in their nursery. Another important item was the presentation of purses by "companions" of the League to the Marquis of Lorne, who occupied the chair, in the absence of the president, the Duchess of Teck. The programme concluded with an exhibition of over 120 limelight views of the principal institutions and objects of Dr. Barnardo's Homes and Missions, with a number of portraits of children who have been succoured from the streets, showing what they were when rescued and what they have since become through the instrumentality of the Homes.

The "Young Helpers' League," in connection with which the entertainment took place, is a union of young people of the well-to-do classes in aid of crippled, blind, deaf and dumb, and ailing children of the waif class, in connection with Dr. Barnardo's Homes. Its members, or "companions," as they are called, consisted originally of boys and girls under eighteen years of age; but it has been since extended to include a senior branch for those who are over eighteen and under twenty-five years of age, The members of the League are grouped locally into habitations, each of these having its own secretary and treasurer, and its own regular meetings for the transaction of local business; and each habitation, when large enough, is sub-divided into lodges, which likewise possess an organisation of their own, and which must include at least twenty-four companions. 212 habitations and 156 lodges have, up to the present, been opened, many of these being in active operation far beyond the four seas, and indeed over the whole civilised world. The League has its headquarters at Dr. Barnardo's Homes, 18 to 26, Stepney-causeway.

20,746 companions have in all joined the membership of the League. 10,300 companions were on the books at the close of 1894. The following figures represent the annual sums raised by these companions of the League in support of its objects since the organisation was begun. It 1892, £2,816; in 1893, £4,197; and in 1894, 5,305.

BETHESDA MISSION, DALSTON.

A SOUL-SAVING work is carried on by Mr. and Mrs. Alexander at the Bethesda Mission, London Fields. Last week at their anniversary a cheering account was given of the year's work. Missions had been conducted in many places with numerous conversions to God.

A very cheering characteristic of the meeting was the certain Gospel ring in all the addresses, these being given by Revs. W. Miall, M. E. Farwell, J. S. Hicks, and Fletcher Porter, and Messrs. Treverton, Campbell, and Newell. If from all the pulpits in the land such faithful words were spoken, England would not be defaming Latimer and traducing the Reformation, nor lauding the persecutor Laud, and building again the things which our fathers destroyed by suffering on the rack and in the fire.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.—The New Year's prayer meeting was held in the Council Room, Exeter Hall, on Monday evening last. Mr. J. J. Drysdale presided, and an address to the workers in the various Homes was given by Rev. Percival Smith, of Portman Chapel, W. Upwards of 1400 young women and girls were dealt with last year in the seven homes, and open-all-night refuge, the majority of whom belonged to the respectable friendless class, found in this great city in circumstances of moral peril, and to whom the Society rendered prompt aid.

MR. W. R. LANE, EVANGELIST.

We have pleasure in giving a portrait and brief biography of a very useful evangelist. WILLIAM RICHARD LANE was born at Farnborough, near Bromley, Kent, in December 1851, of humble but godly parentage. When eighteen years of age, he enlisted in the Coldstream Guards, in which regiment he remained about three years. For nearly half of this term, he lived a careless life, being much addicted to gambling. His conversion was a clear instance of God seeking the sinner, for young Lane had no thought of religion, and no idea of seeking God. The regiment was just then quartered at Windsor. A medical man in the Royal borough was making an earnest effort to carry the Gospel to the men in the Guards. He was ably seconded by several other Christian friends who had the soldiers' spiritual interests at heart.

The story of Mr. Lane's conversion, as he tells it from time to time, is very striking. With about twelve other men, he was one day, after "duty," sitting in the barrack room, engrossed in gambling. His "luck was out," as the saying is, and he was fast losing his money. A Christian soldier with a handful of tickets — invitations to a Gospel meeting—came and stood at the elbow of the young man, now reduced to his last shilling.

He offered the tickets, but no one took any notice; he then said, "Lane, won't you have one?" Having lost his money, young Lane was not in the best temper, and as he put down his last penny, he said, "If that goes, I may as well have one of your tickets." The penny went; and being no longer welcome at the gaming table, he rose to carry out the promise made to his Christian comrade. Many a time since he has reflected upon the great issue that hung upon that last penny. If his money had held out, he would doubtless have continued gambling, and no meeting would have seen him that night.

Arrived at the meeting, the young man had not listened long before he saw himself a sinner, condemned before God. At the close of the meeting a kind-hearted man talked with him, and also prayed for him. Then there took place that secret turning of the soul to God, which was the beginning of the Christian life. It was a joyous experience; but other experiences were hard upon him. How would he fare when again in the barrack room? The reality of his profession in the presence of Christians had to be shown by his confession in the presence of worldlings. This was the testing time. Between twenty and thirty others slept in the same room as himself, all of them as ungodly as he had been until that evening. Before re-entering the barracks, his comrade prayed that God would give grace and strength for a bold confession. Filled with fear, Mr. Lane hesitated to kneel at the bedside in prayer, but sat, unnoticed, on the bed, thinking what he should do. No one but the great enemy of souls could have suggested the compromise that was speedily adopted. "Wait until, at the sound of the bugle, the lights are put out, and then kneel down!"

Again, in the morning, rising before anyone else, the young man prayed, but the sleeping company saw him not. This was not confessing Christ, and a feeling of unfaithfulness took possession of his heart.

As the day wore on, a comrade, a "great chum," laid the cloth for cards, and beckoned Mr. Lane. Refusal was met by expressions of surprise, and then, "You don't mean to say you have turned, do you?" Explanations followed; old ways were spoken of as past, and new aims and purposes declared. Then came the remark (and oh, how it cut the young convert!): "It's all very well talking like that, but I did not see you kneeling down last night!" Apologetic excuses were of no avail; a resolve was made once for all to testify by word and deed for the Lord Jesus Christ.

That evening, at another meeting, Christian friends encouraged Mr. Lane, who on returning to the barracks was treated to scoffing and banter. All watched to see what he would do. Without for a moment parleying with the natural man, he went to his corner of the room, and in a state of desperate earnestness fell on his knees. Agitated to a high degree, he quite expected boots, belts, and other available properties to reach him in a moment; but, to the credit of the company it is told, not a single article was flung. For nearly two years he was, by God's grace, kept from day to day confessing Christ in the army; and the conflict made him strong in confidence, and qualified him to understand the trials and temptations which others are called upon to endure.

At an early period in his Christian career Mr. Lane commenced to preach the Gospel; he spoke at the Tower Hamlets Mission and other places in his uniform. After purchasing his discharge in 1874, he undertook direct evanglistic work in Kensal Town, in connection with Union Hall Mission. He spent nine or ten years in this connection. During that period he contracted a happy marriage, and it was in this interval he availed himself of the opportunity of diligent and systematic study, thus wisely laying the foundation, in hard toil, for the useful position he has since been privileged to fill. Great spiritual blessing resulted from the sorrowful episode of the death of his first child, not only in his own personal experience, but to those with whom he was then brought into contact. One of those converted at this time, as the result of a brief personal conversation, has since become a highly useful evangelist.

Mr. Lane gradually secured a wider field for his Gospel testimony. He has frequently held missions in London, Edinburgh, Dublin, Liverpool, and other towns, small and large, in the United Kingdom. He has also twice visited the United States and Canada, amongst other engagements giving a series of Bible lectures to the students in Mr. Moody's Training Institution in Chicago. Mr. Moody, it may be said, cherishes a very warm regard for Mr. Lane, and has a high opinion of his evangelistic gifts. During his last visit to this country, Mr. Moody frequently invited Mr. Lane to aid him in the work, or to continue the special effort after he had moved elsewhere.

Mr. Lane has a brother labouring as a missionary in West Central Africa. His doctrinal views are of the sturdy evangelical type. While widely read in modern criticism, he has remained unaffected by its spirit, and very ably vindicates the teachings of the orthodox school. His style of address is quiet, authoritative, and earnest; and the winning tone of his exhortation sends home his faithful presentation of the sterner aspects of Divine revelation. All who know the evangelist will wish and pray that a prolonged course of happy useful service may be granted to him.

During the present week Mr. Lane is conducting a mission at Rev. F. B. Meyer's church in Westminster Bridge-road.

CATTLE DROVERS.—The annual tea for the drovers who attend the weekly Bible class conducted by the City Missionary was held in St. Luke's Hall, Cattle Market, Islington, on Friday last. Some 200 men and wives sat down to tea. The meeting was presided over by Captain Thorn, and addressed by Mr. Randall, of Highgate, Mr. J. Webb (a salesman), Mrs. Down, Mr. Carley (for ten years market missionary), and Mr. Stewart (his successor). Books were presented to the three who had made the most attendances for the past quarter. A few years ago such a meeting would have been impossible, but owing to patient, persistent Christian effort, there are now very few drunken drovers in the Cattle Market, and no knots of gamblers to be seen as in past days.

THE WEEK OF PRAYER.

WEST-END MEETINGS.

On Wednesday the meeting in Portman Rooms was again largely attended. The subject for the day was:—

Nations and their Rulers.—Prayer for national righteousness and peace, that the tendency to lawlessness, national discontent, and strife may cease; for the putting away of legislative sanction to vice and all immoral traffic; for rulers, legislators, judges, and all in authority; that religious liberty may universally prevail, and that all persecution may be stayed.

Gen. Sir Robert Phayre, who presided, read a portion from 1 Tim. ii., and spoke briefly on the recognition due to God as Ruler of nations, as the "God of heaven and earth."

Mr. A. J. Arnold followed with a few words as to who and what the Stundists of Russia are. He described them as true followers of Christ, and lovers of the Bible. There are supposed to be about 300,000 Stundists, and of these at least 3000 are in prison or exile for conscience sake. The harsh rescript, just published, really emanated from the late Czar; his successor having not yet spoken on the subject. The sufferings of the women and children, deprived of their natural protectors, are really pitiful. In the middle of the night the husband and father may be seized, marched off, and heard of no more. There is no respect of age or sex. Not long ago a grandmother, aged eighty, was found in a gang of exiles, on her way to Siberia. The Evangelical Alliance is doing what is possible to bring influence to bear; but, after all, prayer is the most potent force. Meanwhile, some £3000 have been raised by sympathisers, and forwarded by the Alliance, through trusty agents, to the relief of the sufferers.

Amongst those who took part in leading the supplications of the gathering were Revs. H. Sharpe, Dr. Wickson, and Stuart Churchill. A welcome address was given by Pastor Thomas Spurgeon.

As our Chairman read the subjects proposed for prayer (he said), my first thought seemed to be that it is rather a "large order"; in praying for nations, rulers, legislators, and the various matters mentioned, we are praying for things over which we have no control. Quite true; but the prayer of faith reaches to God, and none of these things are beyond his control. After this first feeling, I began to rejoice that we have such themes suggested for prayer. We are called upon to ask great things of God, to come with large requests to a God who delights, I believe, in holy audacity; who loves to have his people ask for much and expect much. Those who expect great things from God will have great things. We cannot ask too much. The more the better, with such a God to come to. You remember how the Lord Jesus Christ is said to have been astonished at the faith the centurion displayed. It would be well for us, well for the Church, well for the world, if we could in such a way astonish our Lord oftener. He is gracious enough to be willing to be surprised in this way by us; and if we had grace to astonish Him oftener He would astonish us by his answers. Let us remember—

> We are coming to a King,
> Large petitions let us bring;
> For his grace and power are such,
> None can ever ask too much.

Now, we pray, among other things, "that religious liberty may universally prevail." What a glorious privilege is religious liberty! We are so accustomed to it we scarcely value it at its true worth. How many of us, I wonder, would have been here this morning, had degradation, persecution, or loss, awaited us for coming here. We who are here, in comfort and security, can scarce realise what it is to be persecuted. We can hardly pray as we ought for the persecuted, because we fail to realise what persecution really means. I remember a poor humble believer who used to lead us in prayer so quaintly that some were inclined to ridicule. It was in the Colonies, where many come to church on horseback, and during service put up their horses outside the place of worship. One day, when the horses tied up outside were restless, and their hoofs clattering, this man prayed: "O God, we thank Thee that the clatter of the horses' hoofs does not tell us that the soldiers have come to lead us to prison and bind us to the stake." It was an unexpected turn in the prayer, but it set some of us thinking that there have been times, and may be again, when the clatter of hoofs in the street meant the coming of ruthless persecutors. It does seem incredible that in such an enlightened country as Russia is, in some respects, there should be such relentless intolerance as that now shown to the Stundists.

We are told in Prov. xxi. 1 that "The king's heart is in the hand of the Lord, as the rivers of water; He turneth it whithersoever He will." We cannot precisely say what may be the meaning of the metaphor, whether it be that God makes, as He does, the streams to flow in the valley from the hills, increasing or decreasing as He pleases; or whether it refers, as it possibly does, to the process of irrigation, in which the gardener is able, with the slightest touch, to divert and control the rills of water flowing over the soil—to turn them whither he will. Whichever be the reference intended, the lesson is the same. God directs, turns the hearts of the kings and princes of this world, even as He will to fulfil his own purposes. God restrains, overrules, and turns the heart of rulers just as in old time. As he raised up Cyrus to deliver Israel; as He changed the purpose of Darius; as He touched the heart of Artaxerxes at the prayer of Nehemiah; as He spake by vision to Nebuchadnezzar, so can He rule and control kings in these days. You remember the Jubilee singer used to sing,

> Didn't the Lord deliver Daniel?
> And can't He deliver me?

What God has done in the past He can do now, when He will. Think of Peter held in durance vile, guarded by sixteen soldiers. What brought him out? The hand of God, moved by the importunate prayer of the people of God—instant and earnest prayer, according to the marginal reading. That is the sort of prayer which makes prison doors fly open, and the gates of brass yield. There is no key like prayer. It fits every ward of every lock. It is the master key, before which every door must yield when God sees fit to open it.

But now there is one clause in our programme of prayer with which I cannot fully agree, "that all persecution may be stayed." I am ready to pray, "Thy will be done." But see you not that in the wisdom of God it may be infinitely better that persecution should not be altogether stayed? I do not know how we should be if there never had been persecution in this land. We are limp enough in many respects; but we owe much to the men who endured to the death. I fancy sometimes that God is working out some glorious plan by these persecutions in Russia. This does not excuse the persecutors, absolve the oppressors, or lessen our sympathy. But in all ages the blood of the martyrs has been the seed of the Church. Who knows what God's intentions are in the way of spreading the light of the truth in that vast empire, or in the way of making that suffering people spiritual and faithful witnesses, full of the Holy Ghost life? These Stundists, now suffering so cruelly, may be designed as the means of bringing a flood of blessing on Russia. Or it may be that these persecutions will drive them together, as they have never been, and result in the building up and stablishing of the Church? God has some purpose, we may be assured. Who knows, too, but that He may be preparing us by their example for some persecution coming upon us? The last times are surely near, and for all we know old England may ere long be lit once more by martyr fires. These Russian Christians may teach us in England how to do, and dare, and die, as our less favoured brethren and sisters are now doing. If it does come, may we be taught to bring such glory to his name as has eventuated from persecution in other places and times.

But there is another clause given in a special programme, "that God's people may be kept faithful." That I heartily agree with. Persecution may go on yet a while, but may the Lord prevent his people turning their backs in the day of battle. I have little fear of it. These Stundists love their Bible, and that is the secret of resistance and strength. Many in this land are throwing the old Book to the winds, but there are still those who are old-fashioned enough to believe in prayer and cling to the Bible. Such men have reason to know that God's ear is open to their cry, and that He is ready to stretch out his hand and deliver, when it is consistent with his grand purposes. Meanwhile, as the chairman has said, "let us hold it tight"—the precious possession of an open Bible. I believe there are many who are ready to die, if need be, for the Gospel they love and hold.

But while we pray for those suffering persecution in other lands, that they may be kept true and loyal, let us not forget ourselves, or those who are persecuted in our own borders. There are such; every minister of Christ, every Christian worker knows, even in London, of men and women and young people persecuted for Christ. "Petty" persecution, you call it! It is not petty to those who have to bear it. It would not be petty to us if we had it to endure it. I am not sure, if we knew all, that the slow fire of opprobrium, taunt, and ridicule is not harder to bear than the speedy flames, putting an end to torture and ushering us into joy. Whatever we have to bear for his sake, the Lord keep us faithful and give us an abundant entrance into his Kingdom. Let us pray for all, whoever they be and wherever they are, who have to suffer persecution for the cross of Christ.

On Thursday Mr. T. Morgan Harvey presided, and introduced the subject for the day:—

Foreign Missions.—Praise to God: For increasing interest in the spread of the Gospel, for offers of personal service, for open doors throughout the world, and for the manifested power of the Holy Ghost in various missions. Prayer: That all missionaries and Christian workers may be endued with power from on high, that the privilege and duty of evangelising the world may be fully understood, and that many more labourers may be sent forth into the harvest.

Rev. W. J. Woods gave an address on "The Progress of the Gospel during the past Century of Missions." He certainly took a rosy view of the matter, showing, so far as figures went, considerable progress in nominal Christianity. He fully admitted that statistics are not everything, but felt that the advance made ought to inspire those who are privileged to be fellow-workers with God to fresh energy and devotion. Much prayer, he maintained, is demanded for the labourers who are now in the field, that they may be kept loyal to Christ, and be filled with Divine power for their arduous task. Amongst the blessed results, at home, of the enthusiasm aroused for missions has been the bringing together of Christians of various denominations for a common purpose, teaching them to understand one another as they have never done before.

On Friday, Mr. Donald Matheson, who presided, very briefly introduced the subject for the day:—

Home Missions and the Jews.—Praise: For enlarged interest shown in Home Mission work, and in Missions to the Jews, and for special blessing attending them. Prayer for all Christian ministers and Evangelists; for all efforts to reach special classes of the people and all who live without God; and for the better observance of the Lord's Day. Prayer for the Jewish Race: That special blessing may rest upon all those who are seeking to make Christ known among God's ancient people Israel, and that his purposes concerning them may be speedily accomplished.

After an interval spent in prayer, an address was given by Rev. Prebendary Webb-Peploe.

The Church of the living God exists in the world for the purpose of glorifying God in saving men. We must not separate these two thoughts, as we often do, and say that our purpose on earth is to glorify God, and to seek to save sinners. The glory of God, as we have to do with it here and now, consists principally in the winning of lost men to Him. For this end have the revelations of his Word been made. In the earliest times, the Word was spoken from the Mount, then came the written Word, then the Living Word; and in later days we have the uttered word through his servants—all these have in view the glory of God in the salvation of men. For this purpose was the Lord Jesus Christ revealed from heaven, and He himself said at the close of his life, "I have glorified Thee on the earth." Having finished his work, He says, ere He departs, "The Holy Ghost shall glorify Me." Jesus Christ glorified the Father, and the Holy Spirit glorified the Son. So we, his members, if we are faithful to the one purpose of our being, must be seeking to glorify God in saving men lost in sin. This is the grand and noble purpose of our calling; and it has a close connection with the double subject before us to-day—Home Missions and the Jews. You remember that in Acts i. we are told that the work of the Church was to begin at Jerusalem, then Judea, going out from thence to Samaria, and then to the uttermost parts of the earth: working, that is, outwards from the centre. So this morning we may take it to mean that we must commence with the inner spiritual life, and working from that we must witness in the home; next among our neighbours—some of whom, like the Samaritans, may dislike us—and from these out to the masses around and to the uttermost parts of the earth. Such then is God's purpose for us; but how should we be enabled to fulfil it? The answer is clear. Those who profess the name of Christ are used in his service in exact proportion to their individual sanctification.

We may learn important lessons, in regard to preparation for service, by considering the preparation of the Apostles, the great human founders of the Church, the early discipulate. How did Jesus prepare them for service? We look back on certain preliminary stages. Turning to John i. we find John the Baptist announcing to his disciples, "Behold the Lamb of God." Two of his disciples appear to have been struck with the saying and followed Jesus. At his invitation they went to see where He dwelt, but they do not appear to have stayed more than one day. They paid Him a visit, as some do to the churches. They were impressed, even as some are by externals, such as the beautiful texts, the service, or the tone of the preacher. They see and admire; but that is all. So these disciples seem after this visit to have returned to their old life. Then the Lord Jesus in his tenderness appears to have gone after them. We find Him in Matt. iv. 18 walking by the seashore and saying to them, "Follow Me, and I will make you fishers of men," that is the very purpose of the Church. They seemed to be willing and did follow Him; but evidently were not yet thoroughly separated from the old life, for in Luke v. we find them back at the fishing once more, seeking earthly gain and the concerns of home life. They were to be fishers of men, but here they are fishing for fish, as multitudes of Christians are doing to day, instead of giving up all for Him. We should never give up all till we are convinced of sin, as Peter was. You see in reading the narrative how the Lord filled the ship with fish and compelled Peter to confess himself a sinner, and confess the Lordship of Christ. What then? "From henceforth thou shalt catch men;" true discipleship has begun.

One cannot help feeling that much of the religion of to-day resembles these earlier stages—it is a mere "card-leaving" religion; a call as visitors, and leaving again. Or perhaps religion is invited to the drawing-room, when a very interesting young man has come from some distant region, and wishes to hold a drawing-room meeting, and the lady opens her house for the purpose. This is, as it were, the primary stage, as we have seen it in John i., but when the Lord Jesus Christ comes into that lady's heart and takes possession, then all is changed, and a new life begins. So it was with Peter when, as a sinful man, he fell at Jesus' feet and became a true disciple.

In the very next chapter we find that Jesus Christ constituted the apostolate, and sent them out preaching and healing. They came back rejoicing that even "the unclean spirits were subject to them"; but mark, we do not read in that great missionary tour of any converts. They had deeper lessons yet to learn. Similarly, we sometimes have those who come forward to help in human energy. Very well, let them do all they can. It is well they should be so employed; but it is not Holy Ghost work, and does not bring sinners to the Saviour.

But now Christ would bring them nearer to Himself. He speaks of them as servants—"The servant is not greater than his Lord." This is really bond servants, slaves. But he wants to bring them nearer still, and He calls them voluntary servants—deacons. "If any man serve Me (diakoné, minister to me) let him follow Me." Thus we have progressed from passing visitors or visited, to disciples, slaves, and now ministers, deacons. Then, closer still, He calls them "little children"; and further on, in John xv., He says, "Henceforth I call you not servants . . . but friends." Finally He brings them one step nearer, when, speaking to Mary, He calls them "my brethren," a term He never used before. Now, are they all ready to serve in a sense unknown previously? We may profitably work the idea backward from brotherhood to friends, child, deacon, slave, disciple, follower, for that we shall ever be. "They follow the Lamb whithersoever He goeth." Let us remember that the Church is called upon in holy consecration, as those who have been brought into such close relationship, to live for the glory of God in the salvation of men.

On Saturday Mr. JOHN PETERS presided, in place of Sir George Williams, still on the Continent for the sake of his health. The subject for prayer was

Families and Schools.—Prayer that husbands and wives, parents and children, masters and servants, may, in their mutual relations, follow the Divine teaching; that parents may have grace to train their children in the knowledge of God; for more abundant spiritual fruit from Christian associations of young men and young women; for Sunday and day schools, colleges and universities.

The Chairman said that on the closing day of the week he felt he ought to make thankful reference to the large, interested, and thoroughly devotional meetings which have been held during the week. And this is but one instance of many such. All over the globe, under the most diverse circumstances, here in large numbers and there in small, Christians of various denominations have been meeting together this week, making common supplication to their common Father.

Rev. JOHN GRITTON, D.D., remarked that, while prayer for the young had on this occasion been arranged last on the list, it is yet a theme most dear to every heart, inasmuch as the family is God's unit, and society consists of the aggregation of these units. As to the godly ordering of family life the speaker dwelt on the lessons in Col. iii. and Eph. v., showing the great and paramount importance assigned to family relationships. The wise and godly upbringing of the children, the true and righteous regulation of relations between masters and servants—all these have the closest bearing on the well-being of society and the progress of the Gospel. Then, as to education, all who serve the Lord Jesus Christ must do their utmost to secure that in the schools the Bible may be held forth as that which alone and ultimately claims the allegiance and obedience of every boy and girl, and indeed of all.

SOUTH LONDON.

Throughout the last week a number of Evangelical clergymen have been uniting with Free Church ministers in South London in a series of special services, combining afternoon Bible readings and evening evangelistic meetings, in various places of worship.

These gatherings culminated on Sunday evening in one of remarkable interest at the Metropolitan Tabernacle. At the close of the evening services the ministers and their people converged upon the great edifice at Newington, which, in spite of the inclement weather, was largely attended. It was a pleasing sight to see on the platform surrounding Pastor Thomas Spurgeon, who presided, representative ministers of every Evangelical branch of the one Church. Prayer was offered by two Church of England clergymen, several ministers and others. A few words were addressed to the congregation by Rev. F. B. Meyer, drawing attention to the joyful manifestation of unity, and expressing the hope that it would date a new era in relation to work in South London, and in presenting a combined front to the evils by which they were surrounded. The meeting was altogether characterised by great spiritual power, and there was a general expression of thankfulness that the series had been brought about.

WANDSWORTH.

The meetings at Down Lodge Hall during last week have been seasons of help and, we believe, of blessing to a good many. The neighbouring ministers, Episcopalian, Presbyterian, Congregationalists, Baptists, and Wesleyans, have all been, more or less, in evidence, and the Union has been good for all. The closing meeting was Friday, under presidency of Rev. Marcus Rainsford, with address by Rev. Dr. Clemance, and made a fitting close to a good series of meetings.

BATH.

The Week of Prayer has been observed by two meetings being held daily in the Guildhall. Nearly all the Evangelical clergy and Nonconformist ministers have taken part in these gatherings. We are very thankful for this opportunity of showing the oneness of the Christian Church, and although the manifestation of unity might be greater, still we are thankful that, in comparison with many other places, there is in our city a cordial union between various denominations of Christians.

EASTBOURNE.

The Lord is giving his people in Eastbourne great expectations for 1895. The year has opened with the best week of united prayer we have had for many years. It has been a great joy to see such true-hearted union among clergymen, ministers, and laymen of all denominations, of one accord in one place, joining in supplication and praise, and asking for a revival. In the autumn of this year a general parochial mission is to be held in all the churches of Eastbourne. We ask the prayers of your readers that God will graciously visit this favourite place with real Pentecostal blessing. M. DIGBY DENT.

BOURNEMOUTH.

The week of universal prayer was observed in Bournemouth in three places. In St. George's Hall, Boscombe, and in four of the churches in Westbourne, the meetings were well attended. In the centre of the town, Shaftesbury Hall, the attendance was very meagre. The chairman of the first day began the meeting by an expression of his grief that so many clergyman held aloof from this week of prayer.

MR. E. P. TELFORD AT WOOLWICH.

MR. TELFORD has concluded a thirteen days' mission at the Soldiers' Home, Hill-street, Woolwich, which has been attended with marked blessing. Many soldiers were present every night, and of these not a few came to Christ for salvation, and are now testifying by life and lip for the Saviour they have found.

Besides these, the blessing also extended to members of the mothers' meetings, and to ex-soldiers and civilians, men and women. One evening a father and his son and daughter-in-law all professed to have found peace in believing. Another case of interest was that of an old pensioner, where the seed sown thirty-seven years ago sprang up and bore fruit in bringing him into the full assurance of salvation. It was very touching to see him and his wife both going forward together to be spoken to and helped to Christ. A few days later his young son did the same.

A cheering sight was the large platform filled with Christian soldiers, the number on which increased as the days went by, as fresh ones enlisted under the banner of Christ. Although the Mission is over, much fruit may yet be gathered in; the arrow of conviction has gone home to many hearts, who will doubtless yet yield to the claims of their Saviour.

This little account cannot be closed without an allusion to Mrs. Telford's sweet singing, which must have aroused many careless ones to seek pardon through the blood of Jesus. B.

DR. NEWMAN HALL has, during the last four months, visited the following places, every evening service being followed by a mission prayer-meeting, at which both men and women have voluntarily offered prayer. Confession of a desire to accept and follow Christ has been made by many by the lifting up of hands:—Barmouth, Plymouth, Calne, Burton, Marlborough, Manchester, Watford, Newcastle, Hartlepool, Sunderland, Cardiff, Newport, Abertillery, Macclesfield, Farnham, Middlesbrough, Beckenham, Halifax, Bromley, St. James's Hall, Finchley, Southampton, Hastings.

REV. H. LINDSAY YOUNG, Vicar of St. John's, Portsea, who, a year ago, in consequence of the expostulation of the Bishop of Winchester, refrained from giving an address at a united communion service at the Presbyterian Church, Portsmouth, has, during the past twelve months, become convinced that he may safely take part in such services. On Friday last he spoke in response to a precisely similar invitation. After prayer by Rev. F. Baldey, vicar of St. Simon's, Southsea, Mr. Young gave an address on St. John xiii. 1, "Having loved his own which were in the world, He loved them unto the end." At the close of his remarks he said that on a similar occasion last year he bowed to the wishes, or rather to the ruling, of his Diocesan—that it would be illegal to give an address during the communion service in that church; but in the correspondence which followed, he three times asked the Bishop to point out to him the law he would have broken had he kept his engagement. His lordship failed to do so, but referred him to the Chancellor of the Diocese, who also failed to indicate the law. Now, the obedience of the clergy in the Church of England was canonical, and not absolute, obedience. The Bishop could only command where there was a corresponding law. He (Mr. Young) had, therefore, used his civil and religious liberty.

A LONELY PASTORATE.

Intimation was recently received in Lerwick (says The Dundee Advertiser) of the lamentable death in the island of Foula of Rev. George Morrison, Congregational minister there. Although not unlooked for, the intimation was received with much regret by a large circle of friends, and much sympathy was expressed with his relatives in the circumstances, Mr. Morrison being cut off from his work at the early age of thirty-seven.

George Morrison was the eldest son of Mr. Hector Morrison, bookseller, Lerwick. He was born at Wick in the year 1857, and shortly after his birth the family removed to Orkney, where his boyhood was spent, and where he received his education. In 1871 Mr. Morrison and family removed to Lerwick.

For some ten years deceased was employed as a clerk, during that period taking a prominent interest in temperance work in Lerwick, and being a leading member of the Good Templar Order. To his enthusiasm and ability much of the lasting interest in the Good Templar Lodges in Lerwick is attributable, and his removal to Foula was a decided loss to the temperance cause in Lerwick. In 1880 Rev. J. Mountain visited Lerwick on an evangelising tour, conducting nightly services in various of the churches. From attendance at these meetings Mr. Morrison received deep religious impressions, and shortly afterwards was admitted a member of the Congregational Church. Being a good speaker, and entering with much energy into the work, he soon took a leading part in Church and Sunday-school work, giving very much assistance to the pastor, the late Rev. W. A. Farquhar, and helping with meetings on all occasions. This brought Mr. Morrison to the front, and prepared him for the future work of the ministry. In the island of Foula the greater part of the inhabitants belonged to the Congregational Church, but could not afford a resident minister, an occasional visit being paid by the ministers from the mainland. In 1881 it was thought possible that a resident Congregational missionary might be got for Foula, and the local brethren unhesitatingly offered the appointment to Mr. Morrison, with the belief that he was eminently qualified for the position. After careful consideration Mr. Morrison accepted the invitation.

His family were naturally unfavourable to the project—not against his resolution to become a preacher, but against his decision to go to the lonely island of Foula. The loss of home comforts and the ties of friendship, however, did not deter him, and in 1881 Mr. Morrison took up his residence in Foula. He threw himself heart and soul into his work. His labours were soon appreciated and his influence felt, and he did very much to brighten the lot of the islanders. His denominational brethren in Shetland recognised and appreciated his work, as also did the Congregational Union, with the result that in 1890 he was duly ordained to the work of the ministry. The isolated condition of Foula, with its severe storms and its dangerous seaway to cross before reaching the mainland, inevitably exposed Mr. Morrison a good deal. His strong constitution, however, was proof against this for a considerable time, but while crossing from Foula to the mainland a few years ago he was caught in a heavy storm in an open boat. Through this he caught a severe cold, but thought little of the matter at the time. His lungs, however, became affected, and consumption set in. He paid one or two visits to the south to receive medical advice, and spent some time with his father in Lerwick, but without permanent advantage. In the beginning of the present winter Mr. Morrison paid a visit to Lerwick, returning not long since to Foula and his family, if possible, to continue his duties. He never rallied from the effects of this trip, but, after being prostrate for a few weeks, he breathed his last on the 7th inst. In 1885 Mr. Morrison married Robina, daughter of Mr. Robert Sair, catechist of the Established Church in Foula; and she, along with three children, are left to mourn the loss of a husband and father.

Mr. Morrison leaves behind him in Foula many lasting testimonials of his work and interest in the people. In 1885, owing to the long-continued stormy weather, the crops and fishing were a failure, and for some three months there was no communication with Foula. Provisions ran short, and the people were in sore straits. Appeals were made to the public to assist the people, and were heartily responded to. Mr. Morrison conceived the happy thought of turning the public generosity into a lasting benefit, and there being no roads on the island, he applied the relief thus obtained by paying those able to work in making roads, placing several bridges over burns, and thus adding to the comfort of the community, and making it more comfortable for children to travel to school. These roads proved a boon to the people. He interested himself in the education of the young, and conducted the school on several occasions for months, when one teacher after another, after experiencing the hardships of Foula, had resigned the post. He drew up an exhaustive statement, and laid it before the Crofters' Commission when they visited Shetland in 1889. To the people he had become almost indispensable. He was their guide and adviser on all things pertaining to the welfare of the island. His presence will be greatly missed, his worth always remembered, and his name honoured and appreciated by a loving community.

THOUGHTS ON PSALM XXXIV.*

By Mr. GEORGE MÜLLER.

It has been after much prayer particularly laid on my heart to speak on three portions of this precious Psalm.

The first two verses are the first portion, "I will bless the Lord at all times; his praise shall continually be in my mouth." All the saints are, more or less, in danger to forget how God is glorified by patient, full, entire submission to the will of God; and they are in danger to lose sight of the truth that "all things work together for good to them that love God"; that is, that all things that can possibly befall us will ultimately be for our good. Out of a thousand afflictions, not only fifty, nor even five hundred, shall work for our good; but nine hundred and ninety-nine and one. And if ten thousand were the afflictions, literally, it is to be taken, and we shall find that in the end all things shall work together for good. This being the case, there is no difficulty in praising the Lord. "I will bless the Lord," that is, praise Him in the highest possible degree. If, in our inmost soul, we are enabled to lay hold on this truth, we shall then be able to say, "I will bless Jehovah at all times," even in the greatest difficulties and distresses

He is worthy to be praised! How wondrously He has proved his love to us in the gift of his Only Begotten Son! And, this being the case, oh, how it becomes his children to praise Him! Verse 2: "My soul shall make her boast in the Lord: the humble shall hear thereof and be glad." If thus we enter into what God is to his people, and what He has promised to be to his people for time and for eternity, one result will be that "the humble," the lowly ones, the believers in Jesus, "shall hear thereof and be glad." It will help them, comfort them, strengthen them. Oh, how deeply important, my beloved fellow-believers, it is to enter into this; that, if we are doing what is said in the first verse, and in the beginning of the second, we not only glorify God, but also comfort our fellow-believers. The next portion is in verse 15: "The eyes of the Lord are upon the righteous, and his ears are open unto their cry." Our Heavenly Father looks on us habitually, not merely when we are in health, but in sickness; not merely in wealth, but in poverty; not merely in joy, but in sorrows and trials; and He looks on us with that pitying eye that He may comfort us.

When we are in the midst of sorrows and distresses let us say to ourselves, "My Heavenly Friend looks on me, He sees how it is with me, He enters into my circumstances and helps me to the utmost of my need, if I am only willing to open my heart to Him." Oh, those precious eyes! looking on us as if to say? "Now, my child, what dost thou want; tell me out thy heart, I am here ready to help thee, I have been most fully seeing thee, and my ears are open to thy cry? Dost thou not know, my child, that I have given thee already the most precious gift, the choicest gift, in my Beloved Son? therefore tell me out thy heart. I have loved thee from eternity, and I shall love thee to all eternity. Now, tell Me, what dost thou want, my child? My eyes are upon thee in all thy affliction and sorrow, my ears are open to hear all thy distress and cries." What a precious word is this! Shall we not act upon it, shall we only read it, shall we not act it out? For many a long year I have found it so; and for the little time that I may yet sojourn here I shall prove it, and many of you here have proved it with me. Let us ever remember his eye is upon us, and his ear is open to our cry.

One more verse. Verse 19. "Many are the afflictions of the righteous: but the Lord delivereth him out of them all." First, what have we to understand by "the righteous"? Not those who are entirely free from sin and blame; not such, but poor sinners like you and me, who have disowned their own righteousness, and trust only in the righteousness of our Lord Jesus Christ, and are accounted righteous by our Heavenly Father through faith in Jesus. It is those poor sinners who, on account of their trust in the Lord Jesus Christ, are reckoned righteous, though unrighteous in themselves. Of these it is said they have "many" afflictions. It is written, it is foretold in the Word of God, it is expressly stated, "Many are the afflictions of the righteous." It does not say some afflictions or a few, but many. And the more we seek to walk in the ways of the Lord, trials will come; and very often trials come on account of our walking in the ways of the Lord. But on whatever account they come, they are "many"; and they are "many" for our real profit, for our blessing, for our good. They are intended to be blessings, therefore they are sent.

But the fact that they are "many" is only one side of it. There is the other side, they do not always last. Though "many," we are delivered out of them. The deliverance is going on while we are yet in the affliction, though we do not see it. The curtain is then drawn, and it is well that it is. Our Friend in heaven is working behind the curtain; we do not see the machinery that is at work for our deliverance, but it is going on while we are in the affliction; and in a little time the deliverance will be seen, and it will be complete, for it will be "out of them all." Every tear will be wiped away from our eyes, the curse will be gone, and the end will be to "go no more out," but serve the Lord as we never served Him before. Not to sleep away eternity, not to fold our hands, but to serve as we never served before; and all this to the glory of Him who bought us with his precious blood.

* Notes of an address delivered at Bethesda Chapel, Bristol, on Sunday morning last, a few hours after the falling asleep of Mrs. Müller.

A GREETING FROM DR. CUYLER.

A happy New Year to my dear brothers, Messrs. Morgan and Scott, and may The Christian send its luminous beams still further and wider this year than in any of its heaven-blessed history!

I have been addressing two grand meetings of the Young Men's Christian Association to-day; for the New Year's Day is one of open doors to crowds of people in our American towns. It is vitally important that this powerful organisation—which in our country has expended fifteen millions of dollars in rearing its many noble buildings—be kept up to its great initial purpose, the salvation of young men. It must not drift away into a mere athletic or literary or social institution. These are but accessory "after-thoughts" and aids to its central work of bringing young men to Jesus Christ. Its leading spirits over here feel this, and many conversions are reported in many Associations.

May we have a good round year of glorious work on both sides of the sea!—Yours, in Christ Jesus,

Brooklyn, U.S.A., Jan. 1. Theodore L. Cuyler.

KINGSTOWN MEN'S CHRISTIAN INSTITUTE.—On Monday week a brass memorial tablet, erected to the memory of the late Wm. M'Comas, the founder of the Institute, was unveiled by the Archbishop of Dublin. His Grace referred to the munificence of the deceased, who not only erected the building for the benefit of the young men of the town at a cost of £8000, but also endowed it by a further gift of £10,000. He had even done more by leaving behind him the example of a holy Christian life, which was characterised by a singular humility.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For much blessing on the twelve days' mission, January 17 to 28, by Rev. F. E. Heape, in Everton-road Chapel, Liverpool.—For blessing on two weeks' special services in Y.M.C.A., Edinburgh, by Mr. Douglas Dunn, January 20 to 27.—For services to be conducted at Landsdown Chapel, Stroud, by Rev. A. T. Jones, of Newport, and others, January 13 to 18.—For blessing on Mr. Matthew Burnett's Mission, in Newport, from January 20 to 27. PRAISE.—For abundant blessing on young women's services in the City, by Mr. J. Albinson.

THE R.S.U. AT THE GUILDHALL.

ON Tuesday last week a great treat was given to waifs and strays—children drawn from the courts and alleys of this great metropolis by the Ragged School Union, whose schools they are in the habit of attending. It was the third or fourth entertainment of the kind held at the Guildhall, and thanks to the efforts of Alderman Treloar—who originated the idea—of his brother Aldermen, and of others, "the children's treat" has now come to be regarded as an annual event. Last week's gathering was organised for 1250, but more than that number were present, because it came to the ears of the "Children's Alderman" after the selected children had been admitted that 150 youngsters were in the Guildhall yard without tickets, whereupon they were admitted. Thus the actual number of children who participated was 1400. They were a poorly-clad family, and their white faces and general appearance betokened want and misery. It was not difficult to picture them in their wretched homes surrounded by all that is miserable, and it was pleasant to contrast with their general surroundings the comparative luxury and comfort that they were enabled to enjoy for a few hours. Not only were they regaled with an excellent dinner, but each child was presented with a Christmas cracker, a pretty New Year's card, and a souvenir of the festivity in the form of a medal.

The Lord Mayor and Lady Mayoress took great interest in the proceedings. Bright words were spoken by Alderman Treloar, Mr. Orsman, and others, who referred to the 100,000 men, women, and children in touch with the Ragged School Missions, to whose highest interests 5000 Christian workers devote time and pains.

It was stated that any surplus there may be after all the expenses have been defrayed will be handed to the Ragged School Union, who will expend it "first of all in a good dinner for the cripples in smaller batches, and in their own localities to save fatigue; and if there is still a surplus we propose to arrange a family dinner in the sad rooms of some of the bedridden children, who will then have the joy of being hosts to the family circle."

THE COLONIAL MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

A SPECIAL meeting of the friends of the Colonial Missionary Society was held on Monday afternoon for conference and prayer. Mr. W. M. HITCHCOCK, who presided, introduced the proceedings by dwelling on the work of the Society, and in particular on the new departure which has been made in undertaking the oversight, and to some extent the partial support, of native churches in the West Indies, Africa, and other colonies.

Rev. D. B. HOOKE, the new secretary of the society, called earnest attention to the commercial ruin which has fallen upon Newfoundland, involving misery and want in hundreds of homes. A pathetic description of the state of things in that colony appeared, he said, in The Times of that day (Monday, January 14). This article ought to be pondered by many, giving, as it did, a comprehensive view of the conditions which had led to this disaster. He was thankful to say that already the Congregational churches, in response to an appeal sent out a few days before by the society, had subscribed £100 for the sufferers in Newfoundland, and he believed there was more coming in.

An address followed by Rev. Dr. MACKENNAL, of Bowden, who touched sympathetically on the Newfoundland crisis, and spoke of the important step taken by the Society in reaching out to aid and help weak native churches. Rev. J. L. GREEN, of Demerara, described the condition of the freed men's churches in the West Indies, and showed how greatly the small scattered congregations needed help, counsel, and sympathy. In addition to these addresses, much time was spent in earnest prayer that God would bless the work in many lands.

THE STEPNEY MISSION TO THE JEWS, conducted by Mr. D. J. Neugewirtz, makes a point of instructing Hebrew children in New Testament truth. A few evenings ago he assembled his school children in Marnham Hall, Cambridge-road, and the festive proceedings were attended by very encouraging results. In the course of the evening the Hon. Mary Waldegrave distributed prizes for regular attendance and good conduct. Mr. Alfred Walters (who presided) and others delivered addresses, and the little ones were made happy in a variety of ways.

PROGRESS IN LIVINGSTONIA.

A CHAT WITH A SCOTCH MISSIONARY.

THE mission which perpetuates the name of the great African explorer and martyr must always have a special interest in the minds of his fellow countrymen. I was glad, therefore (says a representative), to meet a member of the Free Church of Scotland Livingstonia Mission last week, at the Aldersgate-street Y.M.C.A., in the person of Mr. Charles Stuart. He has been at home on furlough since last July, and hopes to return to Africa in June. We had a conversation on missionary matters, and Mr. Stuart, who is a modest, genial, young Aberdonian, willingly answered my numerous questions.

"Tell me, first of all, something of your own experiences in the African field."

"At the beginning of 1889 I went out to Livingstonia in connection with the Free Church Mission. I went, however, as the representative of the Young Men's Morning Fellowship Association, attached to the Presbyterian Church at Highbury New Park, in the North of London. For some years that band of Christian young men have been supporting an African missionary. The first was a Kaffir trained in the Lovedale Institution. Six years ago I was selected to be their representative, and they have been furnishing my support. I am in London now with the view of giving an account of my stewardship at their annual meeting on the 23rd inst."

"Where were you stationed in Africa?"

"I was sent to Njuyu, one of the stations of the Livingstonia Mission, some three days' journey to the north-west of Lake Nyasa, from Bandawe, the headquarters of the Mission. I went to assist Dr. Elmslie, my department being schoolwork. When I arrived there in 1889, there was one mission station, and one school, attended by about 100 children, with four native teachers. I took charge of the school work. We teach the children such elementary branches as reading and writing, but our chief work is Bible instruction, suited to the capacities of the native children. When I left the district last May, on furlough, we had three stations, with five European workers. There are eight or ten schools, attended by about a thousand children, with thirty-six native assistant teachers, male and female. These assistants are taken from the most advanced and most hopeful students, and the great majority of them are professing Christians."

"What results in conversion have you seen in connection with the work?"

"In 1890 the first two converts in the Angoni tribe (among whom we work) were baptized at Njuyu. Now there is a little Christian community there. A few weeks before I left I was present at a service where eight natives were admitted into church fellowship, and twenty-one of us sat together at the Lord's Supper—seventeen Africans and four Europeans. Figures, however, represent very inadequately the fruits of the work among the Angoni. We see very marked results in the general attitude of the people. A few years ago, when the first missionaries went there, they were not allowed to do any teaching work. The tribe was a very warlike one, living chiefly by robbery and plunder of neighbouring tribes. Through the labours of Dr. Elmslie and of the late Wm. Koyi (a native missionary from Lovedale), a great change has taken place in this respect. The people are giving up warlike and predatory pursuits, and are settling down to more peaceful and industrious ways of life. They are more attentive to the Gospel message, and old superstitions are giving way."

"Have you been stationed at Njuyu during the whole of your stay in Africa?"

"I was there for two years. Then I went for a year to assist the late Dr. Henry at Livlezi, at the south end of the lake. Dr. Henry, who died in 1893, did capital work for the Mission, especially translation work. In his recently printed blue book Mr. H. H. Johnston, the British Commissioner for the district, speaks very highly of Dr. Henry's grammar in the Chinyanja language. It is the best grammar for beginners, he says, in the country. Dr. Henry also translated Genesis (which was printed at Bandawé), and his translation of the 'Pilgrim's Progress' is now going through the press in Aberdeen, of which Dr. Henry was a native. After being with Dr. Henry for a year I went back to Ekwendeni, near my first station, having been engaged chiefly in school work all the time."

Speaking of the work of the Livingstonia Mission generally, Mr. Stuart said their great hope lay with the young. It is very difficult to make much impression on the long-established heathen customs and superstitions of the adult natives. As Dr. Livingstone once said, "You cannot turn wolves into sheepdogs in one generation." Dr. Laws, the superintendent of the Mission, returned to his post last year, and is now desiring to form a training institution on similar lines to Lovedale. For some time he has been searching for the most suitable location west of the lake. The most promising of the scholars will be thoroughly trained so as to fit them for becoming native evangelists, pastors, and teachers in the schools. Industrial crafts will be also taught, as there will be a demand for skilled artisans by the British administration, by the planters, and the "African Lakes Trading Company." Mr. Stuart has a high opinion of the value of industrial work in connection with mission work, when properly conducted, for the sake of the natives. A good deal of industrial training has already been done in connection with Livingstonia, so that now they can contract with capable natives for the supply of bricks, for building, and the repair of the roads, etc. There are now twenty-five European workers in the Mission, including the wives of missionaries. A new departure was made last year in a forward movement for work among the women. The first lady teacher then went out, and, in future, this important branch of the work will be done more extensively and thoroughly.

"Are there any other missions at work in the region covered by the Livingstonia Mission?"

"Yes, we work hand in hand with the Dutch Reformed Church of South Africa. Among the workers in that mission are three nephews and a niece of the well-known Rev. Andrew Murray, of Wellington."

"What would you say about the climate?"

"Of course it is a fever district, and we have to be very careful in dieting and dress. Upon the hills at Njuyu the climate is milder; there we are some 4000 or 5000 feet above sea level."

In answer to a question Mr. Stuart expressed himself in very cordial terms with respect to the character and work of Mr. H. H. Johnston, the British Commissioner, who is now on his way back to his post of service. "He has done splendid work in opening up the country, and in repressing the slave trade with a strong hand. I believe he has the true interests of the natives at heart. He firmly keeps out strong drink. It is now illegal to introduce European liquors into British Central Africa. When I came down country on my way home, I stayed a day or two at the extreme south end of Lake Nyasa. From the top of one of the watch towers I saw on the other side of the Shiré river a stretch of country, as far as the eye could reach, filled with cornfields and peaceful native villages that a few years ago was a centre of the slave trade. This is only one of the good results of Mr. Johnston's administration. Companies of Sikhs from India are on his staff. These, as well as native police, with European officers, are stationed all over the territory, and they cope with slavers very effectually. In the matter of commerce and communication very great progress has been made in recent years. When I went out, 1889, there were only four steamers on the river and the lake. Now there are some seventeen steamers belonging to the administration, to the Missions, to the Lakes Trading Co.; the Germans also have a steamer, as their territory borders on the lake to the north."

Mr. Stuart hails from rural Aberdeenshire, near

"where the Gadie rins
At the foot o' Benachie,"

a district that has given to the world not a few famous men. Most of the workers of the Livingstonia Mission are from Aberdeen or Glasgow.

The Evangelist.

A POT OF GERANIUM.

They were very tired, for they had had a walk of ten miles, and being friends who had not met for a year, their tongues had wagged, keeping time to their feet, and they had not noticed how far they had walked.

"Whew! I'm hot and tired!" said he to his companion, "shall we inquire at this cottage if they can give us a cup of tea, and let us generally refresh and rest ourselves?"

"Well, I prefer this cottage next door; there is a flower in the window, a well-tended flower. Try this," said she.

"Poor philosophy, I'm afraid," said he, smiling. Then he knocked.

"Come in; yes, I can give you tea and to spare, and here's this nice, cool room, you won't find a cleaner in all Cheshire, and you can rest till tea's ready," replied the cheery cottager.

"Well, it seems you were right," the man said, "these people generally put on a good deal of 'side,' but the occasion merits it here. I don't think one could find a cleaner place."

When the woman brought in the tea and set it neatly on the snowy cloth, she saw that her geranium was being admired. "Ah, ma'am, I see you love flowers. Now, that pot o' geranium is lover, and child, and friend to me. I set such store by it that I don't know how I should feel without it. I had its grandfather, and its father before it, and I raised it from a cutting. I'm a lone woman, and that flower's everything to me, a'most."

"Not quite everything, is it?" suggested the lady. "You say it is lover and child and friend, and I can well believe you, living alone as you do; but it is not everything—there's your heavenly Father."

"My what? asked the woman sharply; "I don't think it's anyone's business to talk religion to me but my clergyman."

"I shall not talk 'religion' to you," was the reply, "I am simply glad to exchange thoughts with anyone about our Father. You must pardon my reminding you of Him. He is not always so much to us that we have no need to be reminded."

"Well, as for that," said the woman, "I'm not one to talk, but I believe I do my duty better than most, and I'm not afraid to bide by the consequences, as far's that goes."

This was unanswerable, under the circumstances, and the friends began tea, thanking their hostess for her despatch, and for the well-served meal. At its close they sat in the little flower garden for an hour, and while they were here the cottager came out to them, and said, kindly.

"I was a bit hasty in my words, and I hope you'll overlook that, ma'am. I want to ask you if you'd like a slip from that geranium. I feel you'd appreciate it, and treat it properly."

"That I should, if you can spare it!" was the reply. "It is very kind of you to think of giving it, and I shall carefully tend it and will let you know how it gets on."

They parted good friends, and the two left the cottage, one of them richer by a tiny slip of geranium than she had been before.

Three months later she wrote to the cottager, telling her that the geranium was thriving, and threatened to rival the parent plant, and she added, "I wonder if you have thought of our talk of our Father that day three months ago?"

This letter remained unanswered until the following April, four months later. Then a confused scrawl reached her, in which the writer said, in substance, the following:—

"For seven months—ever since you were here—I have thought of your words, and every day my geranium has reminded me that it is not everything to me. I want to know 'our Father' as you know Him. It was not true what I said about my clergyman, for I've refused him so often, I'm ashamed to ask him now. Dear lady, can you help me? I'm sore at heart."

By return of post she got her answer—the help she needed, and the promise that in a short time the writer would possibly follow her letter. And she sent a large print New Testament, with references to special chapters, and giving this advice:—"You may prefer certain portions, but read it through."

From time to time she wrote, getting only one reply, though this was so far satisfactory. Then she paid her visit. The geranium was in full bloom in the window, and one might say that the cottager stood in full bloom in her doorway. She held out both hands, and a smile literally covered her face—there was no need for many words—a happy smile often says more than an hour's talk could do. There was a warm welcome, and the geranium, which had been the original point of union, was noticed.

"But I've great news to tell you, ma'am. I can't think as I was ever content with only a geranium! It's just as much of a pet as ever, but there's something besides. Ma'am," and the happy woman flushed with joy at the thought, "all the sore has gone from my heart, and I've had a beautiful answer to my first prayer that I might be of some use in the world."

"How glad I am! We can rejoice together," said the lady.

"Yes. I was sitting here four weeks ago, when the young gardener up at the Croft brought me some beautiful flowers and vegetables, as he'd done before, and he put a little parcel into my hand, and asked me to keep it for him, and let no one know as I had it. 'I can't take anything, nor charge of this parcel,' I said. 'I've changed masters, William. I may as well tell you that I've made Christ my Master, and I want to serve him straight. I can't do as I've done before, and, William, won't you change masters, too?' Ma'am, he burst into tears, and he said that was how his mother used to talk to him, and we fell into a long talk, and he gave in at once; it seemed as if he'd a-come in on purpose to find Jesus."

"He had. God sent him by the power of his Spirit."

"He restored what he had taken, and confessed all to his mistress, and she has forgiven him, and has kept him on. William is a great comfort to me; he lodges here now, and I feel he's a token that I am accepted of God, my Father." The cottager said this shyly.

"By this time, I daresay, you understand that God often works by the simplest instruments," said her visitor. "He used you, an untried servant, to reach William, and I shall always remember that the means of bringing you and me together was a pot of geranium."

CHRISTIAN HOME FOR YOUNG MEN.

For some time Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant has felt that something must be done for young fellows coming up from Christian homes in the provinces, experiencing the loneliness of life in lodgings, and plunged into the awful whirlpool of temptation in this great city. This has led to the opening of a home intended to provide for the reception of young men on their arrival in London, either to reside, or in search of a situation. To afford help to Christian young men in matters pertaining to the general commercial life of London, to brighten business life, and to engage their sympathies and energies in Church work. To provide a home where young men can meet their friends. To supply to young men introductions to the large business centres, both in England and in other countries. To give young men who are called to take up special Christian or commercial life in foreign countries, letters of introduction to Christian ministers and the proprietors of large commercial interests.

This home, Wyndham House, 1, Wyndham-place, Bryanston-square, was opened on Wednesday week. Mr. T. A. Denny presided, and the large drawing-room was well filled with sympathising friends. Rev. W. Darlow Sarjeant, in the course of an introductory address, gave some account of the way in which God had made it clear to him that such a home must be established.

The chairman said that it was a grand thing that Mr. Sarjeant was going to do. He could not but think that if Mr. Sarjeant succeeded he would be opening homes north, east, and south. It was a much-needed work. London was a very dangerous place for young men. It was a good beginning to see so many warm-hearted men and women present sympathising with the movement. Rev. Allen Rees said he was glad to find that the conception had become an accomplished fact. He drew a very black picture of the temptations of London, and said he was very thankful that a home had been provided which would be a refuge and a protection for young men. Revs. G. W. Olver, J. H. Hopkins, Dr. Miller and others, spoke in support of the work.

LONDON'S DRIFT CHILDREN.

Years may come and years may go, but the tide of London's poverty and want flows on for ever. Much of the tide is self-created, and those who suffer for their own misdeeds are to be pitied surely enough. But a deeper and more practical pity ought to go forth to the poor innocent children, whose teeth are often set on edge by the sour grapes which their parents have eaten. If all the sorrowing, starving and suffering children of East London alone could be gathered together into one vast assembly, what infinite pathos the sight would afford.

Such a thing is perhaps neither feasible nor necessary, but some approach to it was made last week when Mr. Boyer, of the Drift Children's Mission, and his host of willing helpers, brought together, in different relays, some twenty thousand of the poorest of London's poor children. There is no more remarkable or romantic work of Christian charity carried on upon the face of the globe to-day than this Mission of Mr. Boyer's. He pays special attention to those who need his care and sympathy most—the cripples and the deformed. Truly Jesus must smile on such a work, which we are glad to think is dear to many of his disciples. Mr. Boyer has, in his own quiet but effective way, ingratiated himself and his work with the conductors of two of our leading evening journals, The Pall Mall Gazette and The Westminster Gazette, whose readers contributed largely to the cost of the happy evenings spent last week by these 20,000 little people of this great city.

On three evenings during the week the Great Assembly Hall in Mile End-road was one of the busiest spots of this busy town. Each night, and sometimes in the afternoon, it was crowded with Mr. Boyer's special protégés, and a rare sight it was to see. We had not credited our American friend with such powers of organisation. To witness the way in which Mr. Boyer controlled and swayed that multitude of restless atoms was something to wonder at and to remember. We believe the secret is here—every child among them loves the man who loves them all in such practical fashion. As he passed down the serried ranks of boys and girls, he was greeted affectionately at every step, and if he could have been divided into twenty thousand pieces, each lad or lass would have wanted one. Such an object lesson of the power of love and the gospel of help is seldom to be met with. In a very clever description of the first gathering The Pall Mall called it "The Happiness Machine;" the simile is halting; but if there was little of the machine about it, the happiness could not be gainsaid.

Plenty of entertainment was provided for the successive throngs that gathered day by day, and plenty of bodily good cheer. But what struck us above everything was the way in which the huge choir of children sang as with one voice to the baton of Mr. Boyer's waving arm. The sound of three thousand shrill and tuneful throats pealing forth the praises of the Saviour, or declaiming, as if they meant it, thrilled us, we must confess, more than the finest rendering of the grandest oratorio. The songs of the cripples were peculiarly pathetic and heart-moving.

Shut up the public-houses,
We don't want any beer,

The evening specially set apart for The Westminster Gazette treat was Thursday, when the lordly domain of the City Corporation at the Guildhall was kindly given up for the occasion; and the civic structure was never put to a better use. Besides a large company of children, cripples and others, there was a party of grannies, who were royally entertained to tea, and sent home in due time with some useful gifts for the winter season. Many friends contributed to the merry-making and feasting at these delightful gatherings, and certainly all who could be present to see the disposition of their charity must have been well rewarded. This Mission of Mr. Boyer's goes on all the year round, and ought to be continually in the memories of the well-fed and well-housed part of the community.

CAPT. BARING.—Owing to a break-down in health, this esteemed Christian brother, resident in Tunbridge Wells, is obliged to cancel all his engagements for January and February.

A LICENSING FUND.—£250,000 is said to be at the command of the drinking interest, to defray the expense of obtaining new licences and appealing against adverse decisions.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIAN MADNESS CONCERNING MONEY.

DEAR SIR,—Lieutenant-Colonel Alves seems to have fallen into the mistake of supposing Mr. Bazett spoke of the world in general, whereas it is clear throughout his letter that his remarks, as those of "Enquirer," only concerned those who profess to acknowledge Christ as their Lord and Master. Can Christ's words, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth," be made to agree with the laying up of wealth, small or great, for future "rainy days"? This is the question, the sincere answer to which frightens us all.

For there is no getting out of "Enquirer's" dilemma, and Mr. Bazett's conclusion, if we look at the words in the light of their context. For, that considered, it is plain enough that our Lord, in using the phrase, "Lay not up for yourselves treasures on earth," chiefly intended to warn his disciples against the universal practice of accumulating money for future necessities. Else why did He go on to say, "Be not anxious for the morrow," unfolding his meaning by illustrations that can leave no doubt that He expressly condemned that condition of mind which leads honest and good men and women to lay up treasure on earth—anxiety as to their material wants in the future, this being a sign of little faith, and a mode of action which impedes its growth.

I am intensely alive to the far-reaching importance of the question in debate, and earnestly beg your correspondents not to think it answered by commonplaces on consecration and stewardship, upon which all Christians are theoretically agreed. The outcome of nearly all modern commentaries on the Sermon on the Mount is to lead to the impression that our Lord spoke casuistically rather than simply to simple men. To me the failure of modern Christianity to retain its hold on the masses in every Christian country, that is, on the sort of people who heard Christ gladly, is owing to the fact that modern Christians will prefer the world's ethics to those of their Lord and Master, and will not see that the laws of the Kingdom of Heaven form a code opposed to those of this world, gathered from human reason and natural law. Until this essential opposition is admitted I see no hope of anything but ever-increasing failure. Already the world has in social ethics made steps in advance of the churches. How truly in this matter the words of the prophet Isaiah apply to modern Christianity, "Oh, that thou hadst hearkened to my commandments, then had thy peace been as a river and thy righteousness as the waves of the sea."—Yours faithfully,

Jan. 7, 1895. RICHARD HEATH.

THE WAR IN THE EAST.

SIR,—The war between China and Japan has brought to light a fact not hitherto recognised—namely, that the Chinese Army has been so demoralised by the vice of opium smoking as to unfit them for standing against the Japanese forces. The history of it is shortly this: In 1858 Lord Elgin concluded with China the treaty of Tientsin, by which opium, which had formerly been smuggled into the country, was compulsorily legalised. He then proceeded to Japan, and there concluded a treaty by which opium was rigorously excluded from that country. Thirty-six years have passed since then, and we now see Japan saved from the opium vice, while China has been so enfeebled by it as to be unable to withstand the Japanese.

In support of this statement Dr. Dudgeon, for many years resident in Pekin, assures us that the officers and soldiers of the Chinese army are addicted to the opium pipe, and are consequently demoralised by it. The threatened break-up of the Chinese Empire is, therefore, due in a great measure to the growth and manufacture of opium by our Indian Government for consumption in China for nearly a century, a traffic which has been pronounced by our House of Commons as morally indefensible, yet for which we, as a nation, have made ourselves morally responsible. Is it not time that we washed our hands of this traffic, by causing its growth and manufacture in India to cease; and we may rest assured that other sources of revenue will be found in the providence of God.—Yours, etc., D. M.

OGLE MEWS RAGGED SCHOOL.—For a considerable time the work at Ogle Mews, Foley-street, W., has been carried on in a large and conveniently-planned building, a large part of the cost of which was given or collected by the late Sir Robert Carden. The influence of the school has been far-reaching, and the work was never more successful than it is to-day. The institution is famous for its day-nursery for the reception of infants and little children, who are taken care of while their mothers go out to work.

The Book World.

ANNUAL VOLUMES.

THE CATHOLIC, edited by Rev. Thomas Connellan, is a monthly full of instruction on the Romish controversy, and calculated to prove of real service in the evangelisation of Papists. Last year's parts have been stitched in a volume, and the contents include many items of permanent value. (Office: 18, Batchelor's-walk, Dublin.)

FAITHFUL WORDS for old and young. Vol. XXIII. of this serial contains a variety of true stories and incidents illustrating the Gospel, some from abroad, others originating in the home mission field. Edited by Mr. H. Forbes Witherby, this is a capital publication, and the bound volume should be introduced in Sunday-school and village libraries. (1s., 1s. 6d., 2s., according to binding. A. Holness.)

THE MORNING STAR, edited by Dr. McKilliam, is a monthly "Herald of the Coming of the Lord Jesus Christ," which has its readers in all parts of the world—a fact invested with a peculiar significance at the present time. The year's parts make a goodly volume, which many Bible students would appreciate as a friendly present. The papers cover a wide field of exposition and instruction, and there is a useful index. (2s. cloth, 3s. extra gilt. A. Holness.)

FORTY YEARS OF WEEKLY SERMONS.

THE METROPOLITAN TABERNACLE PULPIT. Vol. XL. (Price 7s.. Passmore & Alabaster.) Yet another volume is added to the series of the late Mr. Spurgeon's published sermons, which now number 2393. An interesting feature of the collection is that some of the discourses are those of the early years of the preacher's ministry in Park-street Chapel, enabling the reader to compare his then style and matter with that of his later years. But through them all runs the same scarlet thread of the atoning work of Christ, to which he held tenaciously to the last. The volume also contains a few cursory "expositions," and complete textual and subject indices of the entire series, which add greatly to its utility. It will be welcomed as heartily as have been its predecessors.

THE KING'S DAUGHTER, and other Poems. By Matthew Hunt. (Elliot Stock.) Though unable now and then to follow the author's style and sentiment, we discover in his work general nobility of thought, and poetry as well as versification.

HERBERT FRY'S ROYAL GUIDE TO THE LONDON CHARITIES is a very useful work of reference, showing in alphabetical order the name, date of foundation, address, objects, etc., of a large number of institutions. The new issue is the thirty-first annual edition, and is thoroughly up to date. (1s. 6d. Chatto & Windus.)

SANCTIFICATION, by the late Canon Hoare, is a little work that many will find useful. The fourth edition, enlarged, just issued, is a concise and comprehensive exposition of a great Scripture truth. The doctrinal and practical are admirably combined in these pages, which contain the substance of a series of sermons by their lamented author. (W. Hunt & Co.)

THE BEAUTY OF HOLINESS. By W. Lancelot Holland, M.A. (Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.) Sound teaching on a theme of supreme importance, dedicated to "the chosen, redeemed, sanctified, and scattered members of the one Church of the Living God." Ten of the twelve chapters were originally addressed to Mr. Holland's congregation in the form of letters; and therein he tells us something of his own experience.

COUNSEL AND COMFORT on the Way of Life. By Jane Pelly (1s. net. Elliot Stock.) A collection of addresses, ten in number, prepared for a young women's Bible Class, and the meetings of a Christian Band. Spiritual and thoughtful in substance, lucid and vigorous in style, we are not at all surprised that repeated requests for their publication should have been made. They deserve many readers, and we hope they will have them.

THE PEOPLE'S BIBLE: Discourses upon Holy Scripture. By Joseph Parker, D.D. Vol. XXIV. ROMANS—GALATIANS. (8s. Hodder & Stoughton.) This volume of Dr. Parker's colossal work covers a very substantial section of the New Testament. The discourses are full of life and force. If doctrinal teaching is weak, the practical exposition is strong. Occasionally rhetorical speculation shows itself, but then the student only has to read on to find that the preacher does not abandon himself to theories.

MESSRS. CASSELL AND CO.'S PERIODICALS are, as usual, rich in illustration and matter, both instructive and entertaining. Work (a journal for mechanics, weekly 1d.), and Cottage Gardening (weekly ½d.) are each useful and practical. The Quiver (6d.) adds to its well established reputation for what is good by such articles as "Temptations of Public Men," by the Bishop of Winchester, "As one of the Penniless Poor," by T. Sparrow, "King David's Vision of Christ," by Prof. Blaikie, as well as three serial stories, music, and other matter. Little Folks (6d.), an old and dear friend of those whom its title indicates, and Chums (6d.) for older lads are both up to their usual standard. The Magazine of Art (6d.) has for frontispiece an engraving from a charming original etching of Kilchurn Castle (Loch Awe), by David Law, which is very effective, and a beautifully illustrated article by Mrs. Frank Topham entitled "Perugia, a City set on a Hill." These are only a few of the stream of excellent weeklies and monthly parts which pours forth from this enterprising firm.

THE DISENDOWMENT OF THE CHURCH IN WALES is an address for the careful consideration of all religious Churchmen and Nonconformists, by J. Swain Scriven, M.D. (One penny. A. W. Gale, The Foregate, Worcester.) The author speaks of the proposed disendowment as wholesale theft.

CHRISTIAN REUNION IN IRELAND. Addresses on this subject, by Revs. R. D. Bluett, B.D., Samuel Prenter, M.A., and Wallace McMullen, D.D. (delivered at a conference during the Annual Christian Convention at Dublin in September last), have been issued in pamphlet form by Hodges, Figgis, & Co., Dublin. 3d.

Two very instructive booklets, by Mr. James Van Sommer, are: CHRISTIAN ORDINANCES AND SPIRITUAL GIFTS: Have you Received any Gift by the Holy Spirit, and are you Exercising the Same in Love? and DISCRIMINATION: Are you a Student or a Listener only? (2d. each, post paid, from The Author, Cuffnells, Wimbledon Common.) Mr. Van Sommer knows the Scriptures, and he elaborates their teachings in a manner very helpful to all who would learn.

ONLY A MILL-GIRL is a booklet giving a brief but touching autobiography, also some factory life experiences. In the preface Isabel Mary M.Kenward shows how, by means of the Girls' Letter Guild, ladies with a little leisure at command may at once befriend disconsolate young women, and reap a rich reward of spiritual satisfaction. (2d. Drummond's Tract Depôt, Stirling.) Mrs. V. M. Cattermole (widely known as Miss Skinner, author of "Friendly Letters") writes an introduction to this life and heart story.

KENNINGTON PARK.—St. James's Hall, Kennington Park, has been secured and opened under new auspices as a Gospel Temperance Mission Station. The first week's services were conducted by Mr. Lancelot Middleton, of Hanley, and much interest was created.

PASTORS' COLLEGE.—The free evening classes for Christian workers held at the Pastors' College, Temple-street, Newington, S.E., will be resumed on Tuesday, 22nd inst., when fresh students are at liberty to join. All wishing to do so are requested to write to the secretary, Mr. G. Hall, enclosing a stamped enveloped for reply.

IMPERIAL MISSION HALL, HANLEY.—The first Sunday of last year the intense frost burst our hot-water pipes and induced a boiler explosion which cost us £90 to repair. The corresponding Sunday this year, the extraordinary snowstorm has resulted in the collapse of our great ceiling roof. We have for a long time realised the necessity of a thorough renovation, including re-windowing and a considerable re-seatage, with other alterations and improvements. Now the need is forced upon us. The expenditure of £300 to £400 must be incurred at once. —Ambrose Wood, Treasurer; Lancelot Middleton, Superintendent.

ST. GILES.—Christ Church, Endell-street, was built expressly for the poor of the neighbourhood, and its various agencies aim at helping and evangelising the weak and distressed. In the eleventh annual report, the vicar speaks of blessing, in spite of many discouragements. He writes:—"While our first aim and purpose is the presentation of Christ as the Saviour in all his fulness, we do not forget that He is a social Saviour; society, the home, and the family are to be made beautiful and happy by his presence and teaching. The continued downpour of rain this autumn has very much aggravated the conditions of precarious living; street-hawking, board carrying, and kindred pursuits are not only wretched means of existence, but also entail a crop of diseases, like rheumatism and bronchitis, the bête noir of our struggling and wretchedly-clad people. If friends will give us the funds, we will help those whom we know to be in need and deserving. They must be helped to eke out a miserable existence during the winter months. A half hundred of coal, some grocery or soup and bread, with some warm clothing and boots (a most important item), saves many a widow or family from actual want." Address, Rev. S. A. Griffiths, Christ Church Mission Rooms, Endell-street, W.C.

THE Y.W.C.A.

The annual meeting of the Association in Adelaide, South Australia, was largely attended. The report showed that the effects of the recent crisis are passing away, and that the work is progressing well.

The Folkestone Association reports encouraging progress during the past year in the work amongst young women in the Seaside Home (which had 754 visitors), and in the special mission effort in the "Narrows."

On January 8 Rev. E. H. Hopkins gave the first of a series of four addresses on Bible definitions, intended specially for Christian workers and teachers. All who know Mr. Hopkins' clear logical way of presenting truth will, we are sure, be glad to attend these meetings. The addresses are held at Morley Halls, 316, Regent-street, on Tuesdays at 3.30.

The first general "social evening" for 1895 at the Central Institute (316, Regent-street, W.) was given by Mr. and Mrs. Keeble, on Tuesday, January 8. About 240 young women, members, associates, and their friends were present, and after the social hour from 8 to 9, they listened with interest to Mr. A. K. Langridge's lecture of Dr. Paton's early struggles and later triumphs.

THE Y.M.C.A.

At Folkestone branch there was a successful meeting on the 9th inst., when a new hall was opened free of debt.

The Tunbridge Wells Association, where the outlook is exceedingly good for the New Year, held an encouraging meeting last week.

In connection with the Penrith Y.M.C.A. a Missionary Parliament has just been formed. There are seventeen members, who have undertaken to represent various missionary societies.

Letters to hand state that the Malta Association here continues in a prosperous condition. 208 members and associates have joined since its formation during Mr. Geo. Holmes's recent tour.

The Aylesbury Y.M.C.A. has recently acquired new premises in the High-street, which were successfully opened by a social meeting at which the president, Lieut.-Col. Horwood, C.C., occupied the chair.

Mr. W. R. Lane's recent mission at Ramsgate has greatly benefited the Y.M.C.A. A number of new members have been enrolled, and a promising branch has been formed of the Bible-reading Union.

The Sunderland Association has started a Sunday evening meeting for men only. Forty were present upon the first occasion, when Mr. J. C. Moor delivered an address, and there were indications of much blessing.

The Trowbridge Association has derived much benefit from the conference held in Trowbridge about two months ago. Thirty-four new members have joined since that time. The Association also reports several conversions during the week of prayer.

It has been decided, at a meeting of the members of the Richmond Association, to employ a paid secretary, who can give adequate time for the proper carrying forward of the work. The devotion and faithful service rendered to the Association by Mr. Percy Gouldsmith in the capacity of hon. sec. were warmly acknowledged.

The New Year's address at the "Straight Talk" of the Y.M.C.A., Hull, was given by Rev. J. Ford Simmons, who, just before proceeding to speak from Psalm xxx. 5, "Joy cometh in the morning," said that he hardly remembered any year upon which so many expectations were based upon as the year 1895. Undoubtedly the joy referred to in the text was that of the coming of the Lord Jesus Christ.

On Wednesday week, a very successful New Year's reception took place at Stafford Rooms, W. Mr. W. H. Seagram was the host, and welcomed a large number of young people of both sexes, for whom a most enjoyable entertainment was provided. The work of this old Association, under the guidance of Mr. Basil Hewer, is making considerable progress, and is exhibiting much of the spiritual vitality of earlier years.

Says the organ of the Sunderland Association:—How graciously God has answered prayer this month. Such warm and earnest meetings have not been witnessed for some time. The revival began where all true revivals begin—in the prayer meeting. It has been said that the prayer meeting is the thermometer of the Association. The readings during the past two months have indicated a considerable rise in temperature.

Says The South London Magazine:—In reviewing the past year as an Association, we have cause of much thankfulness to God for continued growth. We have two hundred men now in touch with us, and are still going ahead. Our last "Social" was the largest ever held in Clapham, while our Sunday afternoon meeting for men is one of the most successful in South London—not only in numbers, but also in results, for the year has been signalised by several conversions.

IRISH NOTES.

The Belfast Y.M.C.A. has accepted a tender for the erection of its new buildings, Belfast, at a cost of £12,500.

The usual Week of Prayer in connection with the Evangelical Alliance was observed last week in Dublin, Belfast, Newry, Armagh, Londonderry, and various other cities and towns throughout Ireland. The meetings on the whole were well attended.

Arrangements have been completed for a week of Gospel evangelistic services to be held in thirty of the Presbyterian churches of Belfast, and to commence on the 20th inst. At present there is a widespread religious awakening in Belfast and the North of Ireland, and much prayer is being offered that these services may be made a great blessing.

An interesting meeting was held in the Mission Hall in Townsend-street, Dublin, on Wednesday, January 9, to commend to the Lord Miss Linda Wade, who has been working for some years with the Irish Church Mission, and is shortly going out to China, to join the band of earnest workers in the Fuh-Kien province, under the auspices of the Zenana Society.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

Rev. Mr. Ewing, of Birmingham, has declined the call from the Gorbals Tabernacle, Glasgow.

Mr. Forbes has been holding afternoon services for theatrical employees in the Christian Institute, Glasgow.

Rev. W. H. Rankin, of St. Boswell's, and Miss Davidson, deaconess, have conducted a series of mission services at Sandyford Parish Church, Glasgow. The impressions created were deep.

The Pan-Presbyterian Council is to meet in Glasgow in 1896. A large committee of influential clergyman and laymen has been formed to make arrangements. No effort will be spared to make the gathering a success.

The annual entertainment given by Mr. Quarrier to street children took place on January 8, and was attended by a lively company of 2000. Many of these are the children whom the magistrates of Glasgow propose to license to sell, under the "Omnibus Bill," shortly coming before Parliament.

Gospel temperance meetings for the people connected with the travelling shows were recently held in Edinburgh. A similar gathering was held by the Leith B.W.T.A. for the travellers there. On each occasion earnest Gospel messages, in speech and in song, were delivered to a most attentive audience.

Addresses were given at the Glasgow noon meeting during the week of united prayer by Preceptor Dickson, Rev. Mr. Clark (Barrhead), Rev. J. Elder Cumming, D.D., Principal Douglas, D.D., Rev. Jas. Wells, D.D., and others. The attendances were small, owing to the dense fogs prevailing and the extreme cold.

Lord Overtoun presided, on Tuesday, 8th inst., at the meeting of friends of the Children's Homes at Saltcoats, which are the special care of Mr. John Galloway, Ardrossan, and are part of the work of the Glasgow United Evangelistic Association. Mr. Galloway, Rev. Dr. Andrew, Mr. W. M. Oatts, and others spoke, and a distribution of gifts to the children from the Christmas tree followed.

On Sabbath week anniversary services were held in Hilltown Free Church, Dundee, on the occasion of the thirty-fifth year of the pastorate of Rev. John Macpherson. Professor Robertson, Aberdeen, preached in the forenoon and evening, and Rev. John Macpherson in the afternoon. There was a large attendance at all the services, and the collection for congregational purposes amounted to £150.

A new departure has been made this winter in connection with the Free Church of Towie, Aberdeenshire. At the close of the afternoon service on Sundays, the pastor, Rev. A. M. Macdonald, has been giving, with the help of a magic-lantern, a series of illustrated sermons. Originally intended for the young, these Bible scenes proved so attractive that the whole congregation remained to witness them, and even others dropped in for the occasion. In Leochel-Cushnie Free Church, which is conjoined with Towie under the same pastorate, a three weeks' mission has been conducted by Mr. J. Esson, evangelist. The meetings stirred considerable interest, and on Sundays the church was crowded.

Dr. Marshall Lang, of Glasgow, is delivering a short series of lectures to divinity students in Edinburgh University on "Pastoral Theology." Speaking of the call to the ministry he said:—"In Scotland, when a youth was not strong enough for outdoor work, his friends said, 'We'll make a minister of him.' Many an utterly incompetent person had been thrust into the ministry through the ambition of friends to see his head wagging in the pulpit. All this was a miserable trifling with highest interests. Many men had passed into parishes at the call of congregations who had proved to have no call of God, and he could conceive nothing on earth more deplorable than a minister with no such call, unspiritually minded, and without a genuine zeal for God and love of Christ and desire of saving souls."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

A new society has been started in connection with the Atherstone Congregational Church.

A very pleasant and profitable gathering of the Gifford Hall C.E. Society took place on Saturday week.

There are now 150 C.E. Societies in the Methodist New Connexion, and these hope to take specific part in the coming centenary of the denomination.

A Covenant Band, it is stated, has been formed in connection with Dr. Pentecost's congregation at Marylebone. It is composed of young workers, and resembles a Christian Endeavour Society.

Writing from Wellington, New Zealand, Rev. C. A. Baker says: "I have been much encouraged in my work among sailors by the way that the Endeavourers here have taken up the work. Yesterday six of them visited the ships with me."

At Yokohama, Japan, the Endeavourers of Union Chapel received the other day quite a surprise at their meeting. There entered the room some dozen or fifteen boys in blue from the United States man-of-war Charleston, which had arrived in port a few days before. These were the floating Endeavourers of that vessel. The following Sunday afternoon a number of Yokohama Endeavourers held services on board the Charleston. The meeting was very interesting, and eight of the ship's company asked for prayers.

RESCUE WORK IN PICCADILLY,

BY THE WEST LONDON MISSION.

In dealing with such a complex subject as the social evil of a great city like London there are many things to be taken into account. It is a subject that can be approached in so many ways, and must be carefully handled to be of service to the community and its victims.

You can make a raid and find all you have seized are apparently members of a law-abiding people, while in secret they are carrying on a most iniquitous trade in the degradation of innocent girls, who have not been trained to meet the snare of the fowler and easily fall a prey to the allurements spread out before them. During the remainder of their lives they have to bear the sole punishment, some of which ought to have been meted out to others.

The bitter cry of outcast London that has touched our hearts for years still speaks loudly in Piccadilly, Regent-street, and all the principal streets of the West End.

For eight months I have been working at midnight in Piccadilly and Regent-street among the class of women and girls called "unfortunate."

And now I appeal in the name of Christ asking you to consider the question of the degradation of woman in a Christian land, to assist me by your prayers and means to provide them with a "shelter" where we can offer them a night's rest and so take them completely out of the life many long to leave, but have not the courage to come to me the next day. They cannot stand the sneers of their evil companions, but many would come while they have one to lead them and help them to realise that we still care for them.

Young women and girls who are out in the world having mothers and fathers at home who care for and cherish them, have much to be thankful for. Think of the hearts of the poor who are bound to send their children out into the world to earn their livelihood, and send them in ignorance to London, and they are betrayed. Will you help me to rescue the helpless and gladden some mother's weary heart? Also to raise the standard of women in the world and live the life ordained by God by the love and sympathy in your heart towards them.

I hope everyone who reads this appeal will do their utmost for Christ's sake to raise the fallen; that your prayers may be heard, and that you will be able to sing out of a thankful heart the well-known hymn:—

Hail, Saviour, Prince of Peace,
Thy kingdom shall increase,
Till all the world Thy glory see,
And righteousness abound
As the great deep profound,
And fill the earth with purity.

Sister Margaret.

Winchester House Rescue Home, Walthamstow.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. James B. Wookey will preach in the Corn Exchange, Northampton, on Sunday next, at 3 and 8, and lecture in the Town Hall on the Monday.

Ireland.—A Gospel mission has been held in the Methodist Church, Kinsale, by Rev. John Good, and a similar mission has been held at Killymaddy, co. Armagh, by Rev. Wm. Meara.

Great Missenden.—An eight days' mission has been conducted here by Revs. H. E. Stone (St. John's Wood), H. Trueman (Chesham), and W. Dorey, pastor. The meetings were interesting, and it is hoped much blessing will result.

Gipsy Smith, of Manchester, has consented to conduct a series of special missions in London, under the auspices of the London Congregational Union. The first is being held throughout this week at Claremont Chapel, Pentonville.

Mr. Thomas Payne has been preaching in churches in Rhode Island, U.S.A. Last month he held a week's mission in the Free Baptist Church, Park-street, Providence (Pastor E. G. Wesley). Mr. Payne has gone for a time to the Western States.

Mr. Charles Inglis has returned from the United States after a four months' successful tour, with large meetings and great interest. For the next three or four months he hopes to be engaged evangelising at Caterham, Highgate, in various parts of Ireland, and elsewhere.

Porton, Wilts.—A fortnight's special services have been held here by Mr. H. Murch, of the Evangelisation Society. Notwithstanding the severe weather the meetings have been well attended. Christians have been quickened, and careless ones deeply impressed.

PERSONALIA.

The Hon. Mackenzie Bowell, the new Prime Minister of Canada, is an earnest Christian.

Mr. George Blaiklock, the well-known temperance advocate and missioner, expects to be called to the Bar at the end of June.

Rev. Thos. L. Johnson, African Missionary, has again been compelled to give up all work and cancel all appointments for a month on account of his health.

The Bishop of Exeter, with his usual cordiality and brotherliness, gave the address at the opening prayer meeting last week at Exeter in connection with the Evangelical Alliance.

Dr. R. W. Dale, to the great joy of his people, is able again to preach at Carr's-lane Chapel, Birmingham. The improvement in his health seems to be maintained, and on Sunday he spoke with much power.

Bishop Ridley, of Caledonia, is making Birstall, near Leeds, his headquarters while in England. Mrs. Ridley is still in very poor health. The Bishop is one of the many devoted men given by Devonshire to the missionary cause; he is a native of Brixham.

Dr. Talmage will preach every Sunday afternoon at four o'clock at the Academy of Music, New York City. He proposes simply to preach at an hour when he will not interfere with the regular services of the churches in the neighbourhood. His church in Brooklyn disbands.

Dr. and Mrs. Bergin, who went forth a few months ago to undertake mission work in China, arrived at Hankow on Nov. 12. They will work in association with Dr. Parrott, who writes:—"I have delayed several baptisms until Dr. and Mrs. Bergin arrive. Several military Mandarins have called to see me lately. They were very friendly and promised to come again. We get a great many sick children. A ward in the hospital is much needed for women and children."

Mr. C. S. Adama van Scheltema, the well-known Dutch writer on Christian and temperance topics, attains his eightieth year on the 25th inst. He still enjoys health and vigour, and is fully occupied with his weekly and monthly papers. For thirty-five years he has been secretary of the Netherlands Religious Tract Society, writing and translating many books, and producing year by year a useful Bible almanac. He has also written hymns out of number. He has just published, in memory of all who have assisted him, a choice volume of daily meditations.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers celebrated on Sunday the completion of fifty years' ministry. For thirty years he has been labouring in London, where his work has endeared him to many. As a preacher, Mr. Rogers is known and honoured throughout the Nonconformist community, and even beyond its borders; while as a public man he has made a name for enthusiastic and eloquent advocacy of philanthropic causes. The testimonial at present being promoted to Mr. Rogers, and to which many distinguished men have given their support, is a testimony to the respect and esteem in which he is held.

OBITUARY.

MR. GEORGE E. ELWIN.

MANY will hear with regret of the death of Mr. Elwin, who succumbed to a severe attack of heart affection on Sunday last. He was for many years an elder of Mr. Spurgeon's church, and for fifteen years the very capable secretary of the Tabernacle Evangelists' Association. In connection with this branch of work Mr. Elwin won for himself a very wide circle of friends in the London churches. His body will be laid to rest at Abney Park on Saturday, 19th inst., at three o'clock. THOS. COX.

REV. HENRY JONES.

On Friday last, the mortal remains of a faithful servant of God were laid to rest in West Norwood Cemetery. Rev. Henry Jones, for twenty years secretary to the Turkish Missions Aid Society, had many friends, who would wish to be informed of the news of his death, at the ripe age of seventy-seven. Since his retirement, which the infirmities of age demanded, he lived quietly enough, but the zeal and fervour of youth had not died out, and to the last he exerted himself for the souls of all round him. Like Barnabas, he was "a son of consolation."

MRS. GEORGE MÜLLER, BRISTOL.

On Sunday morning last, at the age of 71, Mrs. Susannah Grace Müller, wife of Mr. George Müller, founder and director of the Bristol Orphan Houses, fell asleep at Ashley Down, Bristol. Mrs. Müller was the constant companion of her husband in the extensive missionary tours which he undertook in various parts of the world during the seventeen years from 1875 to 1892. When at home in Bristol she was always his active and energetic helper in the affairs of the orphanage. Her health failed seriously after she and her husband returned in November last from a short stay at Torquay. Paralysis of the nerves of the lower limbs soon after set in, and subsequently this condition extended to the nerves of motion throughout the body. She became unconscious on Thursday, the 10th inst., and continued in this state until she breathed her last between seven and eight o'clock on Sunday morning. Mr. Müller is thus left a second time a widower, being now in his 90th year.

REV. R. BUCKLEY BOYER.

This devoted friend of the sailors died at Wisbech on 12th inst. It is thirty-three years since Mr. Boyer entered upon the hazardous duties of ministering to the shipping windbound in the various outer roadsteads of the Bristol Channel, to the lonely lightship crews, and to the isolated islanders. In the course of his work afloat, Mr. Boyer gained an insight into the debasing and demoralising results of the pay system of the mercantile marine, which gave rise to all the evils of crimping. By the advice and aid of the Board of Trade, he procured changes of the law which did much to ameliorate the evils inherent in the system of withholding seamen's wages for long periods after they are earned, a system which has now ceased in the Royal Navy and is unknown in merchant ships engaged in short voyages. Though Mr. Boyer was made clerical superintendent of the Missions to Seamen in 1874, he continued his Bristol Channel chaplaincy for six years longer, when he came ashore to devote his whole energies to the superintendency.

MAJOR-GENERAL J. H. P. ANDERSON, R.A.

This fearless Christian soldier has, to the regret of many, been called higher. During the past few years, he has devoted himself specially to work in connection with Soldiers' Homes in London and elsewhere. Says The Presbyterian:—The sad tidings will be received with deep grief throughout our Church that Major-General Anderson, for many years elder in our church at Wimbledon, and unwearied there in all good works, died of pneumonia on Monday. His career was in many respects a most remarkable one. There was a time in his life when, from his daring as well as his wild deeds, he came to be known in the Army as "The Mad Colonel." Under the power of God's grace, however, the soldier of the Crown came to be the simple, earnest, indefatigable soldier of the Cross. Yet through all his good deeds and sterling devotion to his Master, there was ever the bright ring of the cheery happy Christian. The church at Wimbledon has a special claim at this time on our prayers. Whilst yet in the shadow of its great sorrow at the sudden death of its loved pastor, it is now called on again to mourn the loss of one of its best and noblest office-bearers.

MR. H. T. LODGE.

This Christian brother, who for many years had been a prominent worker in connection with the Open Air Mission, entered into rest on January 3, and his body was interred at the Edmonton Cemetery on Tuesday, the 8th. Up to about five years ago the deceased had been a most indefatigable and earnest worker in almost every department of the Master's vineyard. Then influenza "weakened his strength by the way," and, physically, he has never been the same man since. The two branches of Christian work to which he specially gave both his hand and his heart, were the Y.M.C.A. and the O.A.M. His greatest cross during the last two years was the failure of his voice, which prevented him from doing the work he so dearly loved, and in which God had so richly blessed him. Three years ago the deceased removed from Highbury to Winchmore Hill. With his family he became associated with the Congregational Church there, and heartily threw himself into the varied work of the Church. He organised cottage meetings, preached at mission stations, addressed Sunday schools and Bands of Hope, and was always present to pray, when he could not speak at open-air meetings.

ARCHDEACON BLAKENEY, D.D.

This faithful servant of Christ, who has been honoured for many years to do a good work in the North, has been called home. He died at his residence, Belmont, Sheffield, on Saturday afternoon. He suffered from a severe attack of influenza two years ago, and has never fully recovered. On Wednesday last he was seized with paralysis. He was a man of Evangelical principles, very much beloved by all classes of the citizens, rich and poor. He was particularly strong in the matter of organisation, and under his charge the church extended and prospered to a considerable degree. He was born in 1824, and was educated at Trinity College, Dublin. After serving the curacy of Idle, near Bradford, from 1849 to 1852, he joined his brother, the late Rev. Dr. Blakeney, Vicar of Claughton, Birkenhead, where he remained for eight years. In 1860 he accepted the incumbency of St. Paul's, Sheffield, a poor and densely-populated parish. In 1877 he was appointed to the vicarage of Sheffield, in succession to Dr. Rowley Hill, and in 1890 his thirty years' ministry was marked by a presentation, to which every class subscribed. His loss will be widely mourned by all who know his high spiritual character and devoted service.

THE BIBLE IN PEKIN.

A CORRESPONDENT in Pekin writes to The Times:—"The Testament for the Empress Dowager was sent to the Palace in Pekin on November 12. This 'Jesus Religion Book' was received and immediately sent in to her Majesty, who lost no time in examining its contents. The Emperor was anxious to see the book, but, on finding that her Majesty was too busy looking over it, he got impatient and immediately ordered the head eunuch to go out and purchase a copy, and to lose no time about it. Shortly afterwards one of the eunuchs named Li, dressed in his official robes, made his appearance at the American Book Store and Bible Depôt. He carried with him a slip of paper, on which was written, in Chinese characters, 'One Old Testament, one New Testament.' The Chinese assistant at the store, who is very highly educated, was struck with the uncommon look of the characters, and out of curiosity asked who had written them. The eunuch replied, 'The Emperor.' 'Oh, indeed,' said the assistant, 'to-day the women of the Christian religion presented a beautiful copy of the New Testament to the Empress Dowager.' 'Yes,' replied the eunuch, 'the Emperor has already seen it, and now wishes to obtain copies of the books of the Jesus religion.'

"The books were got ready, taken possession of, and paid for. Just after noon on the same day the eunuch returned to the depôt with the New Testament, many of the leaves of which were turned up. He said his Majesty the Emperor had looked through it, and that he had observed a number of errors in the printing. The assistant at once changed it, giving the eunuch a more correct copy. Since then the Emperor, the Empress Dowager, and other Royal personages have been busy reading the Holy Scriptures."

THE OPIUM CAMPAIGN.—The fixtures for January of Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell are:—17th, Newport (Mon.); 19th, Swansea; 22nd, Victoria Rooms, Clifton; and 30th, Darlington. Meetings are arranged for February:—4th, at Portsmouth; 18th, Bradford; and 21st, Sheffield.

PAVILION THEATRE, WHITECHAPEL-ROAD, E., was crowded on the first Sunday in the year. In the afternoon Rev. E. A. B. Sanders, rector of Whitechapel, preached a thoroughly practical sermon from the words, "To this end was the Son of God manifest, that He might destroy the works of the devil." In the evening the theatre was filled with some three thousand persons, whose appearance denoted their indigent circumstances. Mr. George Nokes gave the address. Amongst those present at the services were Rev. T. C. Udall, Captain Lowe, and Mr. H. Ehrlich, the latter having acted as manager of this branch of evangelistic work for a quarter of a century.

AMERICANS AND ARMENIA.

The London correspondent of a Scottish daily paper says:—

I understand that the Government of the United States of America is carefully watching the official inquiry into the reported massacres of the Armenians in the Sassoun region south of the plain of Moush. That Government does not stand in the same relation to Turkey as do the European Powers under the Treaty of Berlin. But several hundreds of its most influential subjects are missionaries in the Turkish Empire; the Congregationalists alone, working through the American Board of Commissioners for Foreign Missions, have 177 agents there. Because of the democratic constitution in which they glory, and of the historical teaching in their most efficient colleges, to which the freedom of Bulgaria is largely due, they are far more suspected by the Sultan personally, and closely watched by his detectives, than any other foreigners. They have never countenanced sedition or rebellion, while sympathising with the many, and especially with Christians, suffering from poverty and oppression. Their local assistants, many of them Armenians, have not always been so careful, hence the recent persecution at Marsovan. The American Board's missionaries in Eastern Turkey have many out-stations on the Moush plain, which they know well, but their work has not extended into the Christian part of the Sassoun district where the Armenians lived, and hence they have no direct reports from the massacre. But they call for a "most thorough investigation as to the condition of affairs throughout Armenia."

HINDOO INFANTICIDE.

Of the many unnatural crimes sanctioned by the Hindoo social system, against which, by legislation and executive vigilance, the British Government has waged continual war, it has failed in the case of one only—that of the systematic murder of female infants. Three Scotsmen have distinguished themselves by their efforts to expose and prevent the infanticide—Jonathan Duncan, a Forfarshire man; Dr. John Wilson, of Bombay; and Sir William Muir, when Lieutenant-Governor of the North-Western Provinces. The caste and marriage customs of the Hindoos, which are outrageous contrasted with those of most other peoples, are responsible for this and other crimes. Steadily in North and in Western India the guilty castes have been watched and reasoned with and punished. Now, by legislation, there must be a certain proportion of girls born to boys in every proclaimed village, for the census shows that the proportions of the sexes are nearly equal at birth. At the end of the year, under surveillance, the proportion of girls had risen to 5340, against 7777 boys. Practically, allowing for transfers, the ratio was forty girls to sixty boys, instead of fifty to fifty, but it had improved in one year. No case of girl murder could be proved—the zenana is too clever for that—but neglect and the use of a drug and suffocation are enough, while the zenana cannot be entered to discover the actual facts. A change of marriage customs and of caste laws as to intermarriage will alone effectually prevent female infanticide in the highest castes of Hindoos. At the other end of society there is the curse of widowhood, with all its injustice and cruelty. The Hindoos must themselves be the effectual reformers.

PUBLIC-SCHOOL BOYS.—During the Christmas holidays addresses were given to past and present Public-school boys by Oxford and Cambridge men, many of whom had distinguished themselves in the athletic world. The meetings were held in St. Mary's Church House, Hammersmith-road, and were very well attended, and richly blessed, many boys coming out on the Lord's side, and others consecrating themselves afresh to his service.

PROTESTANTISM IN BRITTANY.—The Quarterly Record of the Trinitarian Bible Society publishes the translation of an article on Protestantism in Brittany, which recently appeared in the Paris daily newspaper, L'Eclair. The indefatigable labour of M. Lecoat is viewed with something like alarm. We read: "The Bible is recruiting the faithful throughout the country of Armorica. Reform conquers the hearts of this stronghold of religion (Roman Catholicism). All the villages in the neighbourhood of Plounérin station, on the Paris-Brest line, are captive to the ideas of Lecoat and his numerous English co-religionists who come to spend the summer for solitude and religious contemplation. There is one thing certain, that Protestantism is gaining ground. Fervent Brittany is not wholly converted, but she is letting herself become so with a surprising facility. It is at least instructive to notice this, at the moment when Leo XIII. is seeking to rally to Rome the Eastern Churches and the dissident sects of France."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The new rector of Rothbury, Canon Mallett Young, has entered upon his duties.

The new Dean of Durham is announced to preside at a C.M.S. Meeting at West Hartlepool on Monday, February 4, when the Bishop of Caledonia will speak.

Recently someone wrote to the Bishop of Liverpool (says the Liverpool Courier), calling his attention to the fact that there were some young undergraduates in Durham University who attended a weekly Greek Testament reading in Durham, and who were known by the name of "Fox's Martyrs." As a result of this communication, the Bishop sent Rev. H. E. Fox a parcel of books of his own writing, asking the popular vicar of St. Nicholas to present them to "Fox's Martyrs in Durham," along with the hope that the latter will light such a candle in Durham as will never be put out.

Rev. R. Hobson, vicar of St. Nathaniel's, Windsor, in his address to communicants in the current number of the Parish Magazine, says:—"It is to be noted how God the Holy Ghost has so graciously used the simple preaching and teaching of the pure Gospel of the grace of God in a truly Evangelical fashion, without even the faintest accent of Popish imitation, in this parish, and, too, despite of its miserable surroundings and deep poverty, in that there are six of its former communicants at this moment ordained ministers of our Church; six more became Scripture readers in Liverpool; and that six men were trained here as missionaries for the Protestant Reformation Society; and, though last not least, two Roman Catholic priests have been brought out of Popery in this church."

Dr. Cameron Lees, of St. Giles' Cathedral, Edinburgh, Rev. P. T. Forsyth, of Cambridge, Principal R. H. Roberts, of Regent's Park College, and Rev. Hugh Price Hughes.

At Westminster Chapel, on Sunday week, Rev. W. Evans Hurndall gave the right hand of fellowship to forty-two new members. In the evening he delivered a sermon to young men; the spacious first gallery being crowded with members of the "Men's Own" meeting and their families. This men's meeting has now an average weekly attendance of 600; it is held every Sunday afternoon in Westminster Town Hall.

Rev. W. Clarkson, preaching a memorial sermon at Redland Park, Bristol, said that the late Dr. David Thomas was endowed with intellectual capacity of a very high order, possessed of a fearless spirit which flinched from no consequence of fidelity, gifted with a penetrating insight into the higher truths of religion, expounded his message with much logical sequence and often with much natural eloquence, his teaching was more than interesting or even instructive.

METHODIST.

Rev. Joseph Olphert has arrived in New Zealand much improved in health.

Rev. E. Holyoake, of Newcastle-under-Lyme, is laid aside by serious prostration.

At Millom, new Sunday-schools, which have cost £1037, were opened on Sunday.

At the Hull Mission hundreds of ragged children are being breakfasted five mornings in the week.

Rev. F. B. Turner, of Kai Ping, North China, has been greatly out of health, but after rest at Che Foo is much better.

At Mevagissey Quarterly Meeting it was reported that about forty had professed conversion in the chapel during the quarter.

At Waller-street Chapel, Luton, under the auspices of the Men's Bible-class, more than fifty men and women over sixty years of age were treated to a feast.

The Grove Mission, Southwark, has taken a house in St. Margaret's Court, Borough High-street, in which to hold services. The new house will be called "Bethesda," and in it will be given free breakfasts and halfpenny dinners to the poor children of the neighbourhood. Other extensions are contemplated.

The Wesleyan Book-Room authorities have just acquired by purchase a MS. book of sermon notes, bound in vellum, by Dr. Adam Clarke. The volume contains 106 sermon notes. The book was given years ago to an English clergyman, who, having made good use of it in his own parish, has just sold it to the Book-Room.

The Forward Movement started five years ago by Wesley Circuit, Birmingham, and involving an expenditure of £14,500, has resulted in the building of a new chapel in Somerset-road, the extension of Asbury Chapel, the renovation of Wesley and Summerhill Chapels, and the securing of a large range of buildings for the Lozells Mission.

The long and urgently needed Women's Shelter of the "Rescue Work," in connection with the Manchester Mission, is at length secured, opened, and occupied. The new Night Home for the friendless and helpless is capable of accommodating sixteen females besides the matron, and it is both airy and lofty. Standing on the main street of this populous district, with a good frontage for coffee bar, and easily approached from all sides of the city, it is admirably adapted for the work.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new chapel has been opened at Cefncanol, Mont.

Mrs. Lewis and Mrs. Gibson have now left Cambridge, on their return to Egypt.

Rev. D. E. Jenkins, Llanbadarn, has entered upon the pastorate at Portmadoc.

Rev. Ambrose Jones, of Ruthin, has entered on the charge of the church at Trefnant.

Mr. Stark has resigned his position as evangelist of the North London Presbytery.

Rev. Robert Greenshields, formerly of Henley, has entered on his new pastorate at St. George's, Liverpool.

Rev. H. Miller, of Hammersmith, has obtained six months' leave of absence to exchange pulpits with Rev. James Macpherson, of Port Elizabeth.

The varied views prevailing as to the proposal to remove the College to Cambridge finds reflection in the result of the discussion before the Presbyteries. For example, North London voted for removal, South London against.

The Presbyterian students at Cambridge, two years ago, subscribed a sufficient sum to maintain a native theological student in the College at Amoy in connection with the English Presbyterian Church. The next year they subscribed sufficient to pay for two, and they have just raised the sum needed to maintain three students during the present year.

CHRISTIAN COMMUNITY

All-night Shelter Rescue Work

(Thrawl Street, Spitalfields).

ALREADY, since this work began, 45,000 poor Homeless and Starving Men have been gathered from the streets in the dead of night, Sheltered, Fed, and otherwise assisted, with the most gratifying results.

This season has commenced with more than usual pressure, and from present appearances a very hard season is apprehended, making our appeal all the more urgent.

The continuance of this much-needed work must depend upon the liberality of those having the means to support it. Contributions will be gratefully received by the SECRETARY; the Treasurer, F. A. BEVAN, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C.; or at the Office of THE CHRISTIAN, 12, Paternoster-buildings, E.C.

JAS. ATKINSON, Secretary.

AT THE "BRIDGE OF HOPE"

We are now regularly giving Breakfasts to 80 little children from Betts-street Board School, the most needy being selected by the teachers. We are very thankful for contributions towards this fund; also for gifts of boys' and girls' old clothes for the children.—Address—Miss STEER, "Bridge of Hope," 28, Betts-street, St. George's, E.

LORD'S DAY OBSERVANCE SOCIETY.

URGENT APPEAL.

The recent judgment in the Court of Appeal has unhesitatingly upheld the contention of this Society, that the Sunday lectures complained of are a breach of the law forbidding Sunday entertainments at which a charge is made for admission. But it decided that the parties against whom the committee were advised to proceed are not those legally responsible for this violation of the law. The effect of this latter decision is to impose on the Lord's Day Observance Society the heavy costs incurred in successfully disputing the legality of these Sunday entertainments. The committee, therefore, earnestly appeal for contributions to relieve their general fund from this demand upon it, and to enable them to carry on with unabated vigour their varied endeavours to secure the religious observance of the Lord's Day.

Contributions may be forwarded to the Treasurer, F. A. Bevan, Esq., 54, Lombard-street, E.C., or to the Secretary, Rev. Dr. Peake, 20, Bedford-street, Strand, W.C.

We implore Christian friends to help us, that the work may not flag. Particulars of the mission and its agencies may be had of the founder, JOHN DUPEE, 165, Hemingford Road, Barnsbury, N.

LONDON CITY MISSION DISABLED MISSIONARIES' WIDOWS & ORPHANS FUND.

This fund was formed to give support to aged and infirm Missionaries who, after a life-long service—enriching the poorest of the poor with the unsearchable riches of Christ—are compelled to cease from their labours. Forty-two of these receive yearly grants of from £20 to £52, according to length of service. Fifty-six widows whose husbands died in the work—several from disease taken when visiting, and in some instances leaving families—receive grants of from £10 to £20 yearly. Among these true helpmeets to their husbands are those who work earnestly among the London poor. Five orphans of Missionaries who have lost both parents receive help during childhood.

Last year this fund was deficient by £349 7s. 6d.

The Committee earnestly ask you to cast generously into this part of our Lord's treasury, that these aged and worthy disciples and widows may for the present year have their needs supplied.

PROTESTANTISM IN SHOREDITCH.

On Monday a conference of Protestant ministers and workers was held in the Shoreditch Tabernacle Lecture Hall, Mr. W. H. Taylor in the chair. The speakers included Pastor W. Cuff and Dr. Grattan Guinness. The morning and afternoon meetings were attended by about 150 clergymen and ministers; in the evening rousing addresses were delivered to a large audience.

Resolutions were adopted indicating Ritualism and Romanism as a main cause of the widespread apathy and inattention on the part of men to the claims of God; urging upon ministers the importance of a revived attention to the special and allied doctrines which were emphasised at the Reformation; pointing out the unscriptural character of the Mass, and the immoral tendency of the Confessional; and submitting that the time has come when Reformation Bible Protestantism should be more vigorously promoted, and the anti-Christian nature, teachings, and practice of Sacerdotalism be distinctly exposed and definitely controverted.

The sudden resignation of the President of the French Republic came as a great surprise. The instability of things in France seemed to have one firm support—a stable Presidency; if Presidents come and go like Ministries, then things will be unsettled indeed. But let us be hopeful; this unexpected turn may be a turn for the better. May the new President worthily fill such a high position.

In these days of increasing missionary devotion it is highly important that the best possible equipment should be placed at the disposal of all intending labourers in the foreign field. As it has been well said, God has no use for our ignorance, but He can fully employ our completest knowledge and skill. It will be interesting to many young workers connected with the Y.M.C.A., Y.W.C.A., Y.P.S.C.E., &c., that a series of missionary examinations has been arranged for by the friends at Harley House, Bow. The examinations will be held quarterly, and each will embrace some well-known part of the great world field. For particulars as to dates, terms, and conditions we refer our readers to The Regions Beyond for January, copies of which may be had through any bookseller, or from Harley House direct, price threepence.

The lesson given by the fall of the nations which Israel supplanted in Palestine, that sin will bring decay and ruin, may easily be read in the histories of nations, both in the East and West to-day. It was pointed out in our columns last week that "China, which has gone down before the flag of Japan like rice before the harvest knife," has been physically and morally broken down by the vice of opium consumption, whereas Japan, whatever its faults, is free from that curse. Sir Edwin Arnold, does not in his article in The Minster, lay his finger upon this specific cause, but his words point the same moral. Nations depend upon the inner national life, "patriotism, loyalty, faith, manhood, public spirit, and private self-respect." These are not the only terms we should use when describing a healthy national life, but they mean that nations must have such a life if they are to remain and be potent. We should prefer to say that a nation needs the fear and love of God, which shall be expressed in honesty, truthfulness, sobriety, purity, kindness, and justice.

Mr. P. Rao Telang, a Brahmin, protests, in the columns of The Forum, against Christian missionaries being sent to men of his caste: they may do for Pariahs. He begs us to send machinery, mechanics, schoolmasters, and scientists to teach the Indian people our practical arts. "Let us," he says, "pray Him whom you call God, and I call Brahma, to send us enlightenment, and make us love each other without consideration of caste or creed." We wonder whether he includes Pariahs in this bond of love and brotherhood. What hope is there for the poor and the outcast in Brahminism? Indeed, to say, as he does, that Christianity is best suited to western nations, and that it will do for Pariahs, is to display that spirit of exclusive pride which is opposed to love and unity. And he has much to learn, as have also many Englishmen, when he says that we should civilise and educate the savages and barbarians. For all that, his article is a sign of interest for which we are thankful.

London is preparing for another great struggle, its County Council having to be elected early in March. We know nothing of its politics; indeed, we think that politics ought to have no place in the election of citizens to fill any civic office. But we do know something of its tone and deeds on moral questions, and are thankful to it for having set so good an example to every municipal body in the kingdom. The London County Council has manfully striven to purify our social life. We cannot forget its action in the Empire case, neither can we forget that it has done its best to diminish intemperance. It refused to be involved in the liquor trade. In our eyes one of its chief glories is this policy, for which, of course, others blame it. No corporation can grow rich on the demoralisation and impoverishment of its citizens, a city can prosper only as its citizens are sober and godly. We cannot believe that the electors will forget this truth when they have to give their votes, but will choose a new Council as good as the old.

The comfort of our firesides has been greatly diminished by the tale of the flooded Audley Coal Mine. It gives a shudder to think of men and boys working within a short distance of a lake of water which may at any moment rush in upon them. Few sights can be more terrible than that of a number of drowned-out miners struggling in the black waters with lamps in their mouths, as did these men at Audley. They appear, many of them, to have been worthy men. The vicar of Audley says that most of them were parishioners of his, and that a more respectable, steady, and industrious lot of colliers he never knew. One of them was superintendent of the choir; many of them were members of the Bible-class; several of the boys were in the choir. That deeds of heroic unselfishness should have irradiated the gloom of the tragedy, is what might have been expected; for was there ever a colliery disaster which was not distinguished in this way? Somehow, the Gospel has obtained a peculiarly powerful hold upon the men who, at the risk of life, win for us the warmth of our hearthstones. And many of the women are like them. Their sorrows are indeed heartbreaking—wives weeping for husbands, mothers for sons, lovers for lovers, weeping till the fountain of their tears is dried up.

In prison treatment our American kinsmen appear to be before us. Mr. John Burns testifies that he saw much of it, and though it is too lax, he is convinced of its incomparable superiority—including a far greater moral effect—to our own, which is too brutal and morose. He says "The American penitentiaries save a much larger proportion of the inmates from crime, though they may pamper a minority of habitual tramps and bad characters. Humanitarianism, though it may be pressed too far, sends the prisoner out of gaol built up for industrial life—it does not herd him and unman him, as our harsh military and bureaucratic system does." We believe a good deal of this wise treatment is due to the labours of such friends of prisoners as Isaac T. Hopper, in whose "Life" are recorded some of the most remarkable cases of reform we ever heard of.

In the interesting, suggestive, and, in some respects, encouraging summary of American church work for the past year, which we give on page 12, there is one sentence that ought to be written in letters of gold over every pulpit :—

> While apathy in spiritual work fosters dissension, activity on Gospel lines fosters union.

This is only another version of the old metaphor as to the full tide blotting out of sight the little pools on the sea shore. When a great and wide-spread revival is in progress church boundaries and divisions are forgotten. We believe the organic unity of Christendom on any large scale to be a dream, the fulfilment of which is neither attainable nor desirable. But we most thankfully recognise and realise the essential unity of the mystic Church gathered out of all human churches, as it exists in the mind and purpose of God. At the same time, there are many divided communions for whose divisions there is no rational excuse, and the best way to get reunited is to stand shoulder to shoulder in the great warfare with the common foe.

"One is your Master, even Christ." Yes, in moral and religious things; not the priest, nor any other mortal man. But is this to honour Christ as we honour God, whom we ought to obey rather than man? Clearly. But do we see also that Jesus should be our Master in trade, in art, and in science? We do not mean in the sense of merely remembering his supremacy, but of going to Him for guidance, for suggestion, for the only initiative which can lead to the right terminus? Jesus Christ can directly and indirectly make a better painter, a better composer, a better writer, a better scientist, than all human masters. The soul, from whence proceed all beautiful forms, is never stimulated and led out to its highest and best until it has found its true Lord and Master. Jesus will yet redeem and reign over all worlds of life.

The suggestion has been made in a contemporary that mothers might be aided in attending public worship by the institution of crèches to receive their young children while they get away from home for an hour or an hour and a-half, or by ladies going to their homes and doing the work of nursing for them. The plan has been for some time carried out successfully at Rev. F. B. Meyer's Church. The idea is a good one, especially under the second form. It would do a great deal of good to the volunteer nurses, and prepare the hearts of the mothers to welcome the good news of the Gospel. Such a service, rendered for a few months to some overworked mother, would be worth more than can be computed, to her strength, to her quietness, and to her cheerful patience. Let sisters with leisure see whether they cannot organise nursing bands or mothers' helps.

God-sent Evangelists.

They are greatly needed at this time. The history of evangelisation is the history of universal preaching. The blood-bought soul, urged by the Holy Ghost, is driven by prayer and by close Bible study to minister Life, Life, Eternal Life to others. If close Bible study is not one of his great powers, his work may be showy but never deep: he may plant cuttings and slips; some may, perchance, rapidly take root, but the work will be transitory, short, and shallow.

To the God-sent evangelist, who has a firm hold of God's truth, who really has the callings and utterances of an evangelist, God will open doors in a mysterious way. Sometimes in a very small room, sometimes in a large temple or church; and the evangelist must enter every God-opened door. The Temple was open to the apostles "daily," although Temple services had practically closed in God's eyes. Where people go, there goes the evangelist; he carries wonderful food, and he follows them and presents it. Roman churches were often opened to the early preachers in Europe and there they preached.

KNOX, WHEN AN EVANGELIST,

preached in England. He was offered an English bishopric by Edward VI., but he declined it on Bible grounds; yet his rejection of it produced good fruit afterwards. He was practically the "overseer," to use a Bible word, of all Scotland at a later period. If he had cut his Bible wings to please England, and to please the flesh, he would have lost a glorious field, and suffered the rod probably. His labour in Scotland yielded great fruit, and upon Scotch trees you will find some of his fruit hanging still.

IF THE EVANGELIST REFUSES TO ENTER DOORS,

he incurs heavy responsibility; every cry for help sounds like the midnight call which the Apostle received from Macedonia: "Come over and help us." He need not leave his trade but work where he is placed, "abide in his calling." Paul so acted to the very last. (Read Acts xx. 33—35.) And Church History tells us that all the early apostolic workers so laboured. "They pursued the customary employments of society—tilled the ground, kept shop, worked at trades, held civil offices, etc." "Centuries elapsed before trade was forbidden to the clergy."* Let them help all the churches as they assuredly did in early days. Denominations may now reply: "No; only work among our own friends." Could any God-sent evangelist be shut up into one little cage—a self-made cage, a mere pool on the rocks?

THE FULL TIDE IN 1857

regarded not such small pools. Scotland was roused from north to south. The evangelists who laboured were frequently called in the papers "laymen of the Church of England," but they had no narrow sympathies, and the Holy Ghost acknowledges no such family disputes. The true "saints," called by the world various names, named no one but Christ Jesus. "Established," "Free Church," "U.P.'s," "Independents," and "Methodists" forgot their designations. A letter came to the evangelist signed by seven leaders of congregations; letters signed by all the leaders in a town generally appeared. What kind of evangelist would he be who refused because all the sections desired it, and asked only his own little party to sign a request? He who did so, would nourish an extreme denominational spirit.

PREACHING FOR ALL SECTIONS—

as an apostle did—destroys sectarianism; preaching for only one denomination cultivates mere sects. I remember arriving in one town, called to preach by a Presbyterian minister. The only other section there consisted of a large, so-called "exclusive" meeting; but the exclusives understood evangelisation. They called upon two of us, and said, "We are willing to receive you as evangelists on Sunday morning if you will come; we know you do not belong to our party, but as 'evangelists' we will gladly receive you." We went of course, and they prayed for our work, although we laboured with all Christians.

Even the "Cameronians," the stiffest section in Scotland thirty years ago, were constrained to admit the same, and besought us as "evangelists" to minister there. They were true saints, but they had cut their own wings, and would have cut our wings also if possible. They were apparently afraid that a rush should be made by the sinners towards truth, and they were afraid lest other children of God should for an instant be compared with them, or partake of their exclusivism. Young converts never dream of anchoring in a little cold nest. Even the apostles were framing a little cold suspicious nest once; they forbade one who laboured, and the beloved John said, in Luke ix. 49, "WE forbade him, because he follows not with US."

Thank God the apostles did so, because our Lord's blessed correction thus came to us. We can all be apostle-like in error, and yet truly the errors of the apostles are our lighthouses. Every mountain and valley, every building on earth, is a platform for the evangelist; if Satan forbids him to work, or commands him to avoid open doors, he is either partial or sectarian if he obeys.

The writer of this paper was, in 1856, a layman of the Church of England, but an open-air preacher frequently, and often called to witness in various London halls. A cry came from Scotland, "Come and speak in all sorts of churches here." He reported the call to others, and a large influential meeting of saints in Orchard-street, London, urged him to respond to it; and although he did not strictly belong to their meeting (only an occasional member), yet they held a meeting for prayer, and their zeal, love, and sympathy in commending him to the work, although they knew he would be among all denominations, and be in various churches, induced him to respond very heartily as an evangelist to the call. This is certainly the evangelist's place. Oh that the Lord would send forth many in our day! Let them leave all their old denominational clothes behind them, and preach boldly and lovingly to sinners, proving also to all sections of Christians that their commission is from Christ himself—that they desire to love all blood-washed saints, and to bear and forbear, but never to compromise any truth of God's. Like Paul they may often say to saints, if called upon to speak a word to them, "I have fed you with milk, and not with meat, for not yet were ye able, neither yet now are ye able to bear it." Forbearing other Christians without compromising truth is an attainment in grace. It is very easy to be rude, sharp, severe, with a brother, but to bear and forbear when a younger brother is perhaps boasting and manifesting ignorance, requires much grace and abundance of love—it is not everyone who can correct even a faulty one. Are any of us in Gal. vi. 1? Do we remember our own failures so as to be qualified to act? A serious examination must be passed first. God help us all.

THE NEEDS OF NORTH AFRICA.

Having lately returned from visiting Tunis and Tripoli, I feel constrained to lay before your readers the deep needs and open doors in these parts. The Regency of Tunis has a population computed at 1,600,000, the great bulk of whom are Moslems. The country is not entirely under French laws like Algeria, but is under French protection. There is more liberty for the Gospel than in Algeria.

is easily reached from England viâ Marseilles, in four or five days, at an expense of from £6 to £10. There is no practical difficulty in finding a place of residence, either in the city of Tunis or in other towns. The cost of living is rather less than in England. The country is perfectly safe to live in, and the climate is healthy, if rather hot in July, August, and September.

Though so accessible little has been done to evangelise the people among the Moslems. The North Africa Mission has a band of workers and medical mission in the city of Tunis, and there are some other workers there, and also in Bizerta, a town on the northern coast. The Central Soudan Mission has a station at Gabes, in the extreme south. These places have together a population of less than 200,000, so that 1,400,000 souls are still untouched, except as now and then some itinerating missionary passes along. Ought there to be a district within five days of London with more than a million Moslems as yet unreached by the glad tidings of salvation?

The great majority of these people live in villages, but there are some large towns without a witness. Sousse has 10,000, and a number of large villages near by, in all 20,000 or 30,000, and yet no messenger of peace goes there to tell of the only way of salvation.

Sfax has a population of 40,000, of whom 35,000 are Moslems. What a parish for some servant of Christ!

TRIPOLI

is a still larger country, under the unsatisfactory rule of Turkey. It is difficult to estimate its population, but it is over a million. The city of Tripoli has been occupied by the North Africa Mission since 1888, and the Central Soudan Mission has a training home here. There have been hopeful professions of faith in Christ, but we long for more decided cases of conversion to God. There, again, more than 1,000,000 souls are still unreached, for outside the city the country is untouched. It is not so easy to extend work here as in Tunis. The Turkish authorities are afraid to let anyone, missionary or merchant, go inland, lest some harm should come to them, and the Government be held accountable. Notwithstanding difficulties, there are places on the coast that might be occupied if only there were missionaries to occupy them.

MALTA

is a place of peculiar interest, not only because of its place in Scripture history, but also as the most fanatical Roman Catholic place in the world. Practically nothing is being done for the 150,000 Roman Catholics. Some seem to think nothing can be done at present. Out of over 10,000 voters more than 6000 are illiterate, and priests swarm everywhere. If tracts are given away, the giver will probably soon be lodged in prison. Malta is a disgrace to the British people and Empire, for there is less religious liberty there than in Rome itself. Who will be an apostle to these people? It will be a difficult business, and might mean imprisonment and death, but the work sorely needs doing.

THE UNVEILING.—4.

REV. i. 10—19.—OUR GREAT HIGH PRIEST.—I.

JOHN was in the Spirit on the Lord's Day, the first day of the week, the eighth day, beyond the seven of the old dispensation. So the passage is usually understood. The words rendered Lord's Day fairly admit this meaning, and were so used in the early ages of the Church. Yet it is a question whether we are to understand that all the visions in the book were seen in one day. And the words rendered "the Lord's Day" seem capable of a deeper meaning. A very similar form of expression in 1 Cor. iv. 3 is rendered "man's judgment," and in the margin, "man's day." It seems to me that the words kuriakē hēmera might be rendered "the Lord's judgment," as well as anthropinē hēmera "man's judgment"—conveying much the same idea as "in thy light shall we see light." John was in spirit (or in the Spirit), looking at the principles, circumstances, and events, shown him in vision, as God saw them and judged them. This at all events is true, whether we think it contained in the words before us or not.

We have said that the Old Testament Scriptures contain the key to the symbolism by which the prophecy of this book was revealed to our brother and companion John. The most important object in the Old Testament was the Tabernacle, the Tent of Meeting between God and men, where the communion broken by sin in Paradise was re-established with the chosen nation through which all mankind were to be blessed: "Let them make Me a Sanctuary that I may dwell among them" (Exod. xxv. 8). The essential object in the Tent of Meeting was the Ark of the Covenant, covered by the Mercy-seat, and overshadowed by the Shekinah, the visible Presence of God. Here the symbolism of the Book of the Unveiling naturally and necessarily begins: for "There will I meet with thee, and I will commune with thee there from above the Mercy-seat" (Exod. xxv. 22).

Here John was worshipping God in spirit and in truth. Not in the literal tabernacle, not in the temple at Jerusalem, but in the isle of Patmos, in the Real Presence, symbolised by the Shekinah, without a veil between, for the veil had been rent when Jesus died, and having liberty to enter into the holiest, and having a Great Priest over the house of God, John had drawn near, with a true heart, in full assurance of faith, having his heart sprinkled from an evil conscience, and his body—his entire being—washed with the pure water of the cleansing Word. Perhaps, whether in the body or out of the body, he could not tell. The Lord was in his holy temple, and all that was of the earth in John kept silence before Him. Suddenly he heard behind him a great voice* as of a trumpet,† speaking with him, the voice of the Great Priest himself, declaring Himself to be the First and Last, and bidding him write in a roll what he saw and should see, and send it to the seven churches—the one sevenfold Church of God, as the seven spirits are the one sevenfold Spirit of God.

John turned from his worship before the Mercy-seat and saw One like a son of man—the great High Priest, Jesus the Son of God—walking amidst the seven golden candlesticks which symbolised—as the seven-branched candlestick had symbolised in Moses' tabernacle—the seven-fold Church of the New Covenant.

He first observes the priestly dress—the white garment in which the priest taken from among men offered gifts and sacrifices for sins; the garment, characteristic of One who can have compassion on the ignorant and on them that are out of the way. The priestly robe reached "to the foot," wherewith judgment is executed, showing that the judgment executed by the feet as of red-hot brass is tempered by the mercy of the compassionate High Priest.

Girt about the breasts with a golden priestly girdle, to assure John and us of his womanly tenderness, and to say to us, as to them of old, "As one whom his mother comforteth so will I comfort you."*

The feminine thoughtfulness and considerateness of the Lord were specially manifested in each of the three recorded instances of raising the dead: "He delivered him to his mother." "He commanded that something should be given her to eat." "Loose him, and let him go."

The whiteness of the head (probably forehead) and of the hair, is expressive of holiness and glory (Isa. i. 18; Matt. xvii. 2; Mark ix. 3), for our High Priest is "glorious in holiness" (Ex. xxviii. 2, 36, 38). Because He died, our scarlet and crimson sins are made white as wool and snow." And when He, the brightness of the Father's glory and the express image of his Person, had by Himself purged our sins, He sat down on the right hand of the Majesty on High—Jehovah-Jesus, glorious in holiness, fearful in praises, doing wonders.

His searching "eyes of fire" remind us that "the priest shall look," "the priest shall see" (Lev. xiii., xiv. repeatedly); and "his feet, like unto refined brass, as if they burned in a furnace," remind us of Phinehas, who saw, and rose up from among the congregation, and took a javelin in his hand, and executed judgment, and the plague was stayed (Num. xxv. 1-13; Psa. cvi. 30), whereby he obtained the covenant of an everlasting priesthood, and became a type of our Melchizedek High Priest, who is first King of Righteousness and after that King of Peace. The evil that his eyes of fire discern, his feet of refined brass, burning as in a furnace, tread down in judgment. "For our God is a consuming fire." M.

* As the voice proceeded from the Holy Place among the golden candlesticks, behind John, he must have been (in the vision) inside the Tabernacle with his face toward the Mercy-seat, or at the door of the Tabernacle with his back towards it, worshipping the Sun toward the East, which latter is impossible, as he was in spirit in the Lord's day.

† "A Trumpet, as of the Law (Ex. xix. 19; Num. x. 1-10), but articulated with human utterance, as of the Gospel. Comparc Isa. xxvii. 13; Matt. xxiv. 31."—Speaker's Commentary.

* The breasts of the seven angels (xv. 6) are indicated by another word. The word here used is only found elsewhere in N. T. in Luke xi. 27; xxiii. 29.

WORK IN MANITOBA.

SIR,—Since my last communication in reference to my work in this great lone land, God has been working in our midst. On a recent Sunday fifteen came out on the Lord's side, declaring themselves to be the followers of our Lord and Saviour.

A little over a year ago some of your readers very kindly helped me to fix up our house (at least, one room) as a reading and recreation room, which has proved most useful. We have had to enlarge it this winter. I trust many of your readers will be able to help on this work for the Master by sending books, magazines, and other literature of an elevating nature. I shall also be most grateful for magic lantern slides of an interesting and elevating tendency.

Our people are trying to build a small mission-room. It is felt necessary, in order to have a centre in which to gather our people together for worship. Our services have hitherto been held in private houses, etc., which have proved both inconvenient and inadequate.—Yours in his service,

(REV.) ALBERT TANSEY.

After the Thousand Years.

IT has been said, with respect to Mr. George F. Trench's book, "After the Thousand Years,"* that he is not the first who has suggested that the Reign of Christ extends beyond the Millennium. This is true. Probably at this late period of history Solomon's assertion that "there is nothing new under the sun," applies to doctrines, true or false, as well as to other things.

In 1877 the present writer published in these columns a Bible-reading, of which the following is the substance:—

The reigns of David and Solomon are very generally regarded, by those who have given attention to the types of Scripture, as foreshadowing the present dispensation and the millennium, respectively. I am, however, led to think that the reign of Saul represents the present age; that of David, the millennium; and that of Solomon, the everlasting kingdom of Christ and his saints beyond the thousand years.

We have received a leaflet by Mr. J. C. Akester, of Hull, of which the following is the opening paragraph:—

For the forty, or more, years that I have been a believer in the personal advent of the Lord Jesus Christ, I have not met with a single writer that distinguishes between the thousand years and the reign of Christ; the one is for a definite time, the other indefinite; the one will end in failure, the other in glory; the first for a thousand years, the other for ages of ages (Revised Version), and it must be clear to the simplest reader of the Word that one thousand years cannot be for ages of ages.

If Mr. Trench had claimed to be the first who had ever conceived or broached this idea, he would doubtless have been met with the well-worn adage, "That which is new is not true, and that which is true is not new."

But we are indebted to him for having diligently, if we may not say exhaustively, studied, and set forth the subject, and written a book which must take its place as a Christian classic in the domain of Prophecy. While it is nearly twenty years since we began on the same track, we gladly and gratefully accord to him the credit of having placed all Bible-students under a lasting obligation, and added so important a treatise to our evangelical literature.

We do not agree with all Mr. Trench's collateral conclusions. We are convinced that the Apostle Paul was Christ's own chosen Apostle in the place of Judas; that there are only twelve Apostles of the Lamb, and that Paul was the twelfth, after the defection of the traitor.

But it is an advantage to have the view opposed to your own, boldly, ably, and adequately stated. It either shows the weak points in your own argument, or leaves you with a deeper conviction of its strength. From reading a book, to every page of which we can only say ditto, we are apt to rise, asking Job's question, "Is there any taste in the white of an egg?" No one will so rise from Mr. Trench's book; but with his mind refreshed, his intellectual faculties quickened, and his Scriptural knowledge largely increased. M.

RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.—During the Christmas holidays the R.S.U. Holiday Home at Dingle Cottage, Coulsdon Common, was entered by burglars in the temporary absence of the matron, and completely ransacked. Nearly everything portable was taken away, including private property of the matron and her daughter. The council are anxious to make good this private loss (about £30). Miss Gardiner, White Cottage, Caterham, who is helping in this effort, will be glad of help, which may also be sent to the Secretary, R.S.U., 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

"Prepare the Way."

We cannot work up a revival; it must come down. The Living God is our only hope; our eyes are upon Him. And we are profoundly convinced that He will soon kindle a fire, which shall spread and burn its way into every city and town, village, and hamlet in the land. But yet we must not forget that, as a rule, God calls us to work with Him. Let us not talk of walking with God unless we mean to work with God. For how is it possible for the Great Worker and an idle believer to walk together?

Formerly, when powerful Eastern monarchs marched at the head of their army, they compelled their subjects to repair the roads, remove all obstructions, and make their journey as easy and expeditious as possible. And before "the King eternal, immortal, invisible, the only wise God," can come and reveal his glory we must, individually and collectively, obey the herald voice, "Prepare ye the way of the Lord, make straight in the desert a highway for our God."

But how is this to be done?

1. Consider the need. Lift up your eyes and look. It was when our Lord saw the multitudes that He was moved with compassion on them. Before Ezekiel was permitted to preach to the dry bones, he was caused to pass by them and make a careful inspection. What a moving there would be amongst the dry bones next Sunday if all our preachers and workers would follow his steps, and for once, instead of dissecting learned theological books, make a careful survey of the iniquity in their midst, see again for themselves the hideous nature of sin, and its soul-destructive mission. Sight, sympathy, service—"Mine eye affecteth mine heart." Therefore "lift up your eyes, and look on the fields, for they are white already to harvest."

2. We must remove every obstacle. The life-giving voice of the Son of God will soon reach the dead when the stones of worldliness, inactivity, pride, wrath, and jealousy have been gathered out of the way. "Bring ye all the tithes into the storehouse, that there may be meat in mine house, and prove Me now herewith, said the Lord of hosts, if I will not open you the windows of heaven, and pour you out a blessing, that there shall not be room enough to receive it," "But the rebellious dwell in a dry land."

3. We must wait upon God. "Prayer," says Dr. Pierson in his "New Acts of the Apostles," "has been the preparation for every new triumph, the secret of all success. God's Pentecosts are but the rewarding openly of those who have learned how to get hold on Him in secret." And God has pledged Himself to fulfil all the promises that we plead in prayer. "Every place that the sole of your foot shall tread upon, that have I given unto you." Why should not the Lord's people arrange prayer meetings, in their immediate neighbourhood, for the definite object of bringing a lost world, in prayer and faith, to God?

4. Let us believe that God will Himself work. God never disappoints those who expect Him to bless and save souls. Faith, looking at the promise of God and the fathomless depths of his power, gives glory to God, being fully persuaded that what He has promised He is also able to perform. "And blessed is she that believed; for there shall be a performance of those things which were told her from the Lord." Then, whenever God does a great work, the human instruments are lost sight of, and He gets all the glory. "The stars, as well as the darkness of night, disappear before the sun."

5. Let us tell what God is doing. We must follow the example of Paul and Barnabas, who rehearsed to the Church what God had wrought by them. This will secure the interest of others, and help to sustain it where it has already been aroused. When the people near the North Pole expect the long weary night to end, they send men up to the highest point to watch. And when the first streak of light appears they cry, "Behold the sun!" Go up, brother! go up, sister! Watch for the rising of the Sun of Righteousness. Be ready at daybreak to cry, "Behold the Sun!" "Come and let us declare in Zion the work of the Lord our God."

Whene'er we meet, you always say,
What's the news?
Pray, what's the order of the day?
What's the news?
Oh! I have got good news to tell!
My Saviour hath done all things well,
And triumphed over death and hell;
That's the news!

His work's reviving all around,
That's the news!
And many have the Saviour found,
That's the news!
And since their souls have caught the flame,
They shout Hosanna to his name,
And all around they speak his fame
That's the news!

6. Let us lay ourselves out for a great ingathering of souls. "Launch out into the deep, and let down your nets for a draught," is certainly an appropriate word for all Christian workers at the present time. There is a going in the tops of the mulberry trees. And I would suggest that churches, gatherings, and Y.M.C.A.'s should do more than ever before in arranging special missions—united if possible. Let them get men full of the Holy Ghost and of faith to conduct them, and at once set to work in dead earnest to bring God to the people and the people to God. Shall we not dare to go forth in the power of the Spirit to take the hearts of the people for Christ?

7. Lastly, let us continue in thanksgiving and praise. The more vapours go up, the more the clouds empty themselves upon the thirsty ground. Remember, when the birds begin to sing, the sun is about to rise.

THE LATTICE.

"What is the lattice, O my Lord, that keeps thy love from Thee,
And yet through which at favoured times thy face of love we see?
And wherefore dost Thou lonesome stand so close behind our wall,
And utter thus that cry of love which on my ears doth fall?

"Thou lookest through my window, too, but I would bring Thee in;
Thy loving cry has touched my heart, thy face my love doth win;
Oh, come Thee in, Belovèd One! and stay not at the door,
For Thou shalt be my Honoured Guest, I long to know Thee more!"

And yet my love, He came not in, but lingered near the door,
And said with sweet but solemn tone, "Oh, would'st thou know Me more?
The daylight now is breaking fast, the shadows flee away,
Rise up, my love, my fairest one, arise and come away!

"The lattice which doth come between is all upon thy side,
For though thou hast believed on Me, and that for thee I died,
Within thy heart there lurketh sin, and pride, and selfish will,
How can I come in unto thee, when such thy heart do fill?

"For know ye not when I come in I must come in to reign?
I cannot reign with Adam old; so out with all his train!
Arise my love, my fairest one! arise and come away!
And then thy Sun on thee will shine, thy shadows flee away."

Oh, 'tis the voice of my Belov'd! He doth the mountains leap,
His fiery love has thawed my heart, and for the past I weep;
"Beloved, I will follow Thee! wherever thou dost go,
And Thou in me and I in Thee shall satisfaction know."

My winter now is past and gone, the singing birds appear,
And I with them my song shall raise without a doubt or fear;
For Jesus now has entered in, the lattice cleared away,
And on the path where Jesus leads, I'll take my gladsome way.

MUTINY, OR WHAT?

TO CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOURERS.

By ONE OF THEMSELVES.

"More trouble in the East," muttered the Colonel, as he hastily scanned a telegram, which had just been put into his hands. It was from the War Office, ordering him to proceed with his regiment the following morning en route for Portsmouth, where a transport was waiting to carry them to Egypt. The order was immediately issued accordingly, and the men were to parade at 8 o'clock the next day and march to the station.

Eight o'clock came round all too soon, and as the Colonel reached the parade ground, he found—three men, instead of five hundred. "Hullo! what's up?" and off he goes to the barracks. No sooner inside, than he finds men in mufti sitting all about the place, most of them busy enough over something or other, but not one preparing to go on parade. Purple with indignation, our astonished Colonel thunders out to the man nearest him:

"Why are you not on parade, sir?"

"Oh!" replies the man coolly, "you never sent me a special command that I was to go."

"But you are one of the regiment?" says the Colonel.

"Yes," assents the man; "but you never called me specially."

"But an order to the regiment includes every man in it, unless he has a special order not to parade."

And all the evening papers have a sensational heading, "Mutiny of the — Regiment. A Court-martial to Follow."

"Quite right, too," I fancy I hear you mutter. Suppose you were one of these soldiers, would your judgment be the same? Perhaps you are a soldier? I hope you are. I hope you have taken service under the Great Captain Jesus Christ. Now, He has issued an urgent command. He says, "Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature." He says this to each and everyone of his soldiers—to his Church. Why are you not obeying Him? Have you a sufficient reason for staying at home? A reason you will care to give to Him when you stand before Him?

You profess, in being his soldier, that the love of Christ constrains you to do what you do, and that you are seeking first his Kingdom. Is that the constraining power in your life? I found in mine it was not. I found my home, friends, business, social position, and pleasant Christian work, were the things which kept me where there was hardly a soul to speak to, who had not time and again heard the Gospel—certainly not one who had not the opportunity of hearing the Gospel if he wished. I knew of the millions—yes, of two-thirds of the world's population—without the Gospel, and some of them without it through my fault.

Remember, there are plenty of doctors and lawyers, engineers, manufacturers, and merchants in our land; yes, and even ministers, for where is there a desirable charge vacant, without a good score of candidates? while there are far too few missionaries.

Study the prophecy of Haggai, and "consider your ways." Are you a worker at home? See what Paul says in Romans xv. 20, 21.

Do you ever pray the prayer in Matt. ix. 38? I mean in earnest. Could you not help to answer it with your own life? Do you pray Matt. vi. 10? Will you solemnly offer yourself to God for this great work now? And that done, seek for an opportunity to go, as you would for a partnership, or a situation, were you in want of such.

Sometimes the door seems to be shut, and locked in our faces, when it is only on the latch, and God is waiting to see if we are sufficiently in earnest to try it.

Your Missionary Society says it has not funds to send more workers out at present? Is the work to stop because of that? I trow not. I appeal to the young men and ladies of our land. Many of us could go out at our own charges, were we content with a living instead of a fortune. Will you be one? I do not say "Go," I say "Come," for I am going myself.

LANSDOWNE HALL, WEST NORWOOD.—At the convention on the spiritual life to be held at Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, on Jan. 30 and 31, Revs. J. Douglas, G. H. C. Macgregor, J. J. Luce, F. B. Meyer, R. Middleton, and J. G. Train, Dr. R. McKilliam, and others are expected to speak. Meetings will be held both days at 3 and 7 p.m. Tea will be provided at 5.30.

ADVANCING APOSTASY.

SIR,—I have read with painful interest the letters bearing upon the difficulties and sufferings of Evangelical parishioners in the country at the hands of Ritualistic priestlings. It is all only too true. This morning I received two letters; one from Norfolk, the other from Devonshire. The one says: "We are shut out from all fellowship with the clergy around, as our clerical neighbours are not in sympathy with our Evangelical Protestant views. This is good Bishop Pelham's diocese, and his successor has not been long bishop of the diocese; yet faithful Protestant Evangelical clergymen are already dying out. We feel very much alone." This is a sad indication indeed of advancing apostasy.

The other is from a lay pen. "Your letter was doubly welcome to my dying mother, as the clergy about here are all so very High Church that we cannot have, and do not desire their visits. We have no one whom we can truly regard as our clergyman. A curate has been once, but we do not care for his priestly manners and sacramental doctrine. It seems to get worse instead of better. So many of our country friends complain that they cannot have an evangelical ministry for their sick." And this is in the diocese of Exeter, whose bishop bears the sainted name of Bickersteth!

Is the diocese of Chichester any better? I have a letter, dated the 4th, from a friend, who says: "A young Ritualist has succeeded our old Evangelical rector. The first Sunday he requested the choir and people to stand up when the priest entered. One of the choir, a godly Christian man, refused to do it, and was dismissed. In a letter to the innovating rector, he said that if he could be shown any rubric in the Prayer Book ordering such usage, he would at once comply. The church services have been quite altered to the confusion of the poor villagers, who cannot understand these changes in a High Church direction. Another order has been given that, at the close of service, none of the congregation are to leave their seats until the priest has left the church and reached his vestry. The parish is in a ferment of strife, some taking one side, some the other. Spiritual things are suffering in consequence. The rector rails Sunday after Sunday in his sermons against the faithful Evangelical parishioners who stand firm."

Take another diocese (St. Albans), which I visited a few weeks ago. I stood with a rector on the hill where his church and vicarage are. He said, "You see eight miles all round; and in the circumference of twenty-four miles I am the only Evangelical clergyman. I am all alone, and can have communion with none of my clerical brethren." Last summer I received a letter from a West of England clergyman saying, "The nearest Evangelical brother I know is thirty miles off. Everywhere are Ritualists, or worldly-minded Broad Churchmen. Protestant parsons there are none." In the autumn a clergyman said to me, "I am the only Evangelical clergyman in our deanery. When we hold our ruridecanal meetings, I find myself absolutely alone, and am outvoted in every matter."

These may be multiplied a hundredfold in the provinces of Canterbury and York. Your correspondent, "H. S.," speaks of the boycotting and social ostracism which Protestant laity have to suffer for their faithful maintenance of Reformation principles. It is worse with the loyal clergy. The bishops and their official entourage deliberately look askance at them. Diocesan and even Church societies (nominally Evangelical) persecute them, deny them pecuniary help, and hamper them in all official arrangements. They receive the cold shoulder from rural deans and great rectors. They are pointed out to wealthy Churchmen as persons opposed to Church principles, and no better than Dissenters. Last week came a letter to me from a Shropshire clergyman: "I am fighting the Lord's battle all alone here. I am branded as a Dissenter because I belong to the Evangelical Alliance. It is uphill work nowadays."

How long, O Lord! How long? It cannot last much longer. The Established Church in Wales is almost wholly Ritualistic, and but few Evangelical clergymen are left to be faithful and true. The same is steadily on the increase in the Church of England. The light is dying out in many parishes where Nonconformists have no chapels or meetings. The truth is never heard from many a Church of England pulpit; while, by services and in sermons, all the loathsome heresies of Romanism, ancient and modern, the parishioners are being prepared to welcome the restoration of the yoke of Babylon upon the neck of the nation. The faithful are driven to do as "H. S." says her family did; they must come out, and be separate, they must hold conventicles, Bible-readings, and prayer meetings; and they must partake of the Lord's Supper in the Nonconformist Chapel, or amongst themselves in the hall or home-circle.—Yours faithfully, AN EVANGELICAL CLERGYMAN.

AMONG RUSSIAN EXILES.—2.

BY A STUNDIST.

I NOW spent over a year in foreign countries, and during this time the authorities seemed to have forgotten me. I then returned to the town where I first was persecuted, in order to try afresh the work of enlightening the people. I went from house to house, trying as much as possible to avoid suspicion. I established a school for children, and though I intended to avoid taking children of Orthodox parents, yet I could not refuse to take their children when they came and asked me to do so, although I knew this might cost me no less than my liberty. Soon the authorities learned about the existence of the school. Then they began accusing me of giving money to the poor and helping them, in order to win them over to my heresy. I continued my work for three months, not paying the least attention to these calumnies, but the last week of these months I had to hide myself from the police, who were searching for me. I moved in the dark nights from one place to another.

At one time the police came to the family where I was hidden, where they found a little boy, who told them where I was, not understanding any better. I then had forthwith to hurry away from the place. Early on the following morning, thanks to the care of my friends, a carriage, with four strong and beautiful horses, stopped before the place where I lodged, and within half-an-hour I was, without molestation, outside the gates of the town, speeding away on the great Grusinian military road. Soon the joy of having succeeded in escaping was changed into sadness at the thought of the contrast between the beautiful nature which surrounded me, and the sorrowful events and scenes of which I had been the silent witness every day during the past months.

As I was thinking of the events of those months, I remembered, among other things, two women from Southern Russia, who came to me in Tiflis and asked for help, and who, crying and sobbing, told me their sad story. They belonged to two Baptist families, who had been banished to Transcaucasia for their religious views. I mentally recalled those emaciated women, carrying each a baby in her arms, and with several half-naked little children hanging to their dresses, crying and sobbing, while with great exertion they dragged themselves along the road in order to be able to follow their husbands, who, in the grey prison uniform and with irons and chains on their hands and feet, were marching some 200 miles over the snowy mountains of the Caucasus. The poor women and children especially had to suffer terrible hardships. Being without means they could not pay any driver for taking them, and so they had to walk most of the way. Their shoes and clothes had been so much worn on the journey that they had to travel almost barefooted in the deep snow which covered the mountains (it was at the end of November). It was heartrending to the poor parents to listen to the cries of their children, while entirely unable to help them. On their arrival at Tiflis, the fathers were shut up in the prison, and the exhausted, sickly, and destitute mothers were compelled to go about begging a little food and clothing, so as to keep themselves and their children alive.

After some time—perhaps a few weeks, or may be a whole year—the religious exiles are forwarded from Tiflis to the places which the governor assigns to them. In some cases they are first sent to Elizabethpol, and have to wait there. The position of these exiles, after their arrival at these places of banishment, is generally as hard as during their journey, if not worse. They have at first no shelter against the sharp winter cold or the scorching heat of the summer; they are in a barren mountain district, inhabited by half-savage nomadic tribes, who hate the exiles, or, at the best, are indifferent to them and their destitute condition. There is no opportunity to earn a living, and if any such occurs then a series of inhuman police regulations in many cases forbid them to do work for which they are trained, and shut them up within a certain district. The consequence is that the great majority among them are suffering from the greatest misery and destitution, from which many are only delivered by a slow death of starvation and suffering.

But even if their economical condition happens to be tolerable (which is very seldom the case), yet their sudden transition from an active spiritual life, a religious enthusiasm which rejoices in enduring opposition and persecution for the sake of truth, to a forced state of inactivity in the most gloomy and dreary surroundings, is almost unbearable. Families of religious exiles in such a condition could be counted by the hundreds. My own observations, and those of others who have visited these places of exile, prove that thousands of honest Russian workmen and useful citizens are ruined and changed into homeless and destitute beggars in consequence of the bigoted religious intolerance of the Government.

To return to my flight. Thanks to the excellent horses and the good road, I reached, on the following day, Vladikavkas, a town situated on the other side of the mountains. In this place the police did not as yet know anything about "heretical propaganda" or my flight from Tiflis. Therefore I could spend a few days here, moving as usual from one family to another, in order to hide as long as possible from the police, and at the same time gather information about the condition among the sectaries. In Vladikavkas are many exiles, all of them having settled together in one part of the town, which is called "Molokanskaja Slobodka" (the Molokan suburb). As far as I was able to find out, their condition was better in this place than in any other part of Caucasia. This was owing, they said, to the fact that the governor of the place (now dead) was a liberal and generous-minded man, who appreciated the industry and high moral character of the exiled sectarians. But the priests, on the other hand, were very much dissatisfied with his clemency. After the death of this governor a prominent Orthodox "missionary" visited the place, and inaugurated a new era of persecution, during which several sectarians were banished a second time to other places.

Fearing lest I should, through my staying too long in this place, only cause harm to the brethren, instead of serving them, I hurried away from the town, and proceeded to the steppes near the Black Sea. Here, I thought, as I drove over the seemingly endless steppes, out on these wide plains liberty must surely be left unchallenged. What fine pastures, what stretches of cultivated fields of black rich soil! Here there can surely be no hunger and poverty. But my pleasant dreams were to be dispelled before I reached my destination. A few versts from the farm where I was to put up, I had to pass through a small village, consisting of small half-subterranean hovels, which scarcely could be seen above the surface of the earth. I asked my fellow-traveller what people lived there. "They are exiles from the Government of Mogilew," he answered brusquely. "From Mogilew?" I asked. "You will hear the particulars when you get to your destination. Every Sunday they used to come together at the house of the owner of the farm, or that of his brother, who lives twenty versts from here, and there you will get an opportunity to speak with them personally."

On the first Sunday after my arrival I went to the meeting, which was held at the house of my host's brother. The gathering was in a large farm building erected for the purpose. Everything was very plain; the Gospel was proclaimed in its simplicity and directness, and the hymns were sung in an artless and spontaneous manner, and great freedom of spirit prevailed. The poor and simple people offered up such fervent prayers, that I at once felt at home among them. In fact, I began to love these my poor, uneducated, and more than humbly dressed compatriots. After the meeting they approached me one after the other, and bade me welcome with a spontaneous simplicity and cordiality. I asked them if I might visit them at their homes. Child-like joy mixed with astonishment shone in their eyes when they heard that "a noble person," as they expressed themselves, did not despise their miserable subterranean hovels.

THE BRITISH AND FOREIGN SAILORS' SOCIETY opened on Tuesday a beautiful Sailors' Rest and Bethel at Dover. The Cross-channel steamers and the ships in the harbour hoisted flags in honour of the occasion. Sympathetic addresses were delivered by Dr. Gritton and several other clergymen.

THE AMERICAN CHURCHES.

WITH its usual enterprise the New York Independent has secured the reports of nearly forty correspondents, representing twenty-two church denominations throughout the United States, giving a summarised view of the progress or otherwise of these bodies during 1894. With a catholicity that will seem to many to be extreme, the conductors include Romanists, Jews, Unitarians, and Universalists. We briefly summarise these interesting summaries, giving them, as our contemporary does, in alphabetical order :—

The spokesman for that section of the "Adventists" which observes the seventh day of the week, asserts that "Sabbath observance with them is not a matter of convenience or of choice of days, but of loyalty to God." The past year has been a prosperous one in their educational and mission work. They have three hundred young men and women "who have consecrated themselves for life or death to arduous humble service in the dark regions of this lost world."

Advances in various directions are reported on behalf of "the Regular Baptists (white)." The prevailing financial depression has not caused any marked check to progress at home or abroad. Large accessions have been made to the membership throughout the country, while "the phenomenal growth of the denomination among the negroes, which is in the history of missions, has met with no check during the year." Of "the Free Baptists" we learn that the year has been one of "wide spiritual prosperity. The evangelist has been in demand, and faithful ministers have witnessed not a few conversions." The "Coloured Baptist Churches" do not appear able to tell of any great forward movement. They "are strongly denominational in their feelings and views, and are not much inclined to interdenominational affiliation."

The next body to give in a report are "The (River) Brethren," whose delegate regrets that no practical progress has been made towards coalescing the different branches of the once united church of the "Brethren in Christ." The greatest missionary progress has taken place in the West, though Ontario has also made "greater efforts to reach the unsaved in new fields of labour."

A "Professor in a Catholic Institution," undertaking to speak for the Romish Church in the States, says the year has been largely uneventful. The Pope's Encyclical on the Scriptures "has not advanced the higher Scripture studies among us, though it has induced the people to read the Bible a little more, and directed priests who preach the Word of God to look to God's Word for inspiration." "Of course there have been shocks and scandals, but the old Church pursues the even tenour of its way."

For "The Christians" the year was one of prosperity, though the only specific fact quoted in support is the addition of the Young People's Society of Christian Endeavour to the other agencies.

A somewhat slow but steady gain in strength is testified of "the Congregational churches." "Recent dissensions" and financial depression, have rather weakened the foreign missionary cause, but differences have passed into oblivion and the churches have responded loyally. It is noted that some trouble may be brewing, because "a few churches seem to be setting up the colour line." If so, "the offending churches will be instantly dropped from the rolls. The Congregational churches for a single hour." The following statement will be read with interest :—"While the latest German speculations may have induced some charges of doctrinal emphasis among our scholastic ranks, the theology of the Christian Endeavour is the theology of Calvary. Its hymns are hymns of the atoning sacrifice. Its faith is unhesitating trust in salvation through the blood of the Lamb. It is loyal to the Bible as the inspired Word of God. We should find it peculiarly suggestive of Divine methods, if this great uprising should be the preservation of Evangelical doctrine and the magnifying of the Word of God in simple faith."

WILL NOT TOLERATE CASTE OR COLOUR LINES

"The Churches of God," with a membership of 40,000, report "renewed and increasing activity in home, frontier, and foreign missionary work." Most of the churches are in country districts, and are small.

The people who desire to be known as "The Disciples of Christ" have had a most fruitful year in missionary effort at home and abroad. They support 150 evangelists and teachers in the foreign field, and are projecting work in Africa. The body is looking forward to a union with the Baptists.

"The Dunkards," or German Baptists, have received unusually large numbers into church fellowship, and have sent their first foreign missionaries (except in Sweden and Denmark) to India. This church appears to be divided into "progressive" and "old order" branches; the latter, it is stated, do not report any accessions.

Another divided organisation is "The Evangelical Association," with its off-shoot, called "The United Evangelical Church." The latter states that it seceded because of the transformation of the governing body into an ecclesiastical hierarchy, with absolute power of suspension and excommunication. The majority, however, have remained in the parent body, which successfully maintained its property rights in the civil courts. They say they have been misrepresented, but they harbour no ill-will, and purpose to devote themselves with increased zeal to the spread of the Gospel and the conversion of the world. The seceding minority have some 650 ministers, and between 50,000 and 60,000 members; extensive revivals are in progress in a number of places.

The next in the roll call is "The Society of Friends," of which it is said that their numbers have increased during the year, though the gain is not large; the work of evangelisation has been carried on with definite and gratifying results. There has been in the Society "a growing apprehension that non-essential points ought not to divide those who are united on the essential truths of spiritual Christianity."

"The German Evangelical Synod" have nothing of general interest to report.

Of "The Jews," it is said that "the year has witnessed continued activity in benevolent work and the enlargement of charitable institutions in large cities, with the erection of new ones." There has been "a gratifying activity in literary matters"; while "the most suggestive feature of the year was the appearance of a few cultured Jewesses as active critics of the synagogue and its leaders."

"The Lutherans" have severely felt the financial strain. There have also been doctrinal differences, the solution of which can only be looked for "through the gradual work of the Holy Spirit in the calm, prayerful, and patient study of the Holy Scriptures." The spirit of the Lutheran Church "is pre-eminently that of historical conservatism."

The Methodist Bodies have four spokesmen. The first representing the "Methodist Episcopal Church" tells of steady advance at home, and decided growth in foreign missions—18,000 converts in India alone. The Epworth League, for work among young people, started five years ago, now numbers about 900,000 members. It has given a remarkable evangelistic impulse to American Methodism. No steps have been taken as to organic unity with closely allied communions, but "a cordial spirit of fraternity is in the air."

The divine who speaks for "Southern Methodism," thus winds up his report: "But over and above all other things, it is to be set down that 1894 has been a year of the signal outpouring of the Holy Spirit upon the congregations—the annus mirabilis of our history. The number of conversions is estimated as high as 250,000, with a corresponding increase in the membership. Many thoughtful men are inclined to look for a close connection between and the unprecedented financial troubles through which the country has been passing. At any rate, it is at least true that the wide quickening of the moral and spiritual instincts of the people is much more than an ample offset to the temporary depression in trade. In the meantime, Southern Methodism is girding up her loins for still greater victories. She hopes to march into the twentieth century a full 2,000,000 strong, singing jubilant Wesleyan hymns and shouting the praises of God."

As to "the Coloured Methodists" there is this gratifying record, given in addition to much statistical information :—"The increase of membership of the Church last year was very large. There were great revivals in each of the Episcopal districts. The bishops report that the moral, educational and financial condition of the people is improving, and that the ministers are bearing aloft the standard of Christian education and temperance earnestly, as never before. The people throughout the Church are awake to the subject of the elevation of the race; a strong sentiment in favour of an educated and trained ministry is manifested in the petition from almost every congregation. The accessions were over fifty thousand members; some of them are the most intelligent in the communities in which they live."

The "Non-Episcopal Methodists" of America are chiefly Congregational, Primitive, Wesleyan, and Methodist Protestants. The writer speaks only for the last named division, and says that the progress has been gratifying, despite hard times; 12,000 to 15,000 is the estimated increase for the year. There are indications of a growing feeling towards Church Union.

"The Presbyterian bodies being partitioned off into sections, have five spokesmen. On behalf of "The Northern Presbyterian Church" it is stated that the past year has been extraordinary for financial stringency, and for the strain of controversy, both as to doctrine and administration. Yet there has been no little spiritual advance, no less than 75,000 persons having joined the Church on confession of faith—twenty-five per cent. more than during any previous year. The deposition of Professor Preserved Smith from office "was a third declaration within three years that this Church maintains stedfastly both the plenary inspiration and the historical reliability of the Word of God." Another writer of the same church, states that "the Christian Endeavour movement has been during the past year one of the most significant signs of the times, the Presbyterian Church being now in the number of such societies." The "Southern Presbyterian Church" has not quite such a glowing account to give. "All its enterprises have been steadily maintained, and in some instances extended. There has been no step backward." The year has been one of extraordinary financial trial. The "United Presbyterian Church" is able to tell of "more special evangelistic work than at any previous time. The reports are very gratifying as to the revival of members, and the conversion of sinners." The "Reformed Presbyterians" have prosecuted home mission work with new zeal, and one section of it has appointed two missionaries for China. The "Cumberland Presbyterian" representative strikes a curious note :—"The most hopeful sign of this ending year is that there is a revival of the denominational idea: that there is a place and a specific work for Cumberland Presbyterians in the world." What that specific work is the outsider is not able to gather from the article.

The "Protestant Episcopal Church" is obliged to report a considerable shrinkage of income. The mission work of the Church, however, has been most encouraging in its results; and there has been a marked reaction in various quarters against the loose thinking and talking on dogmatic theology which made the Congress of 1893 an offence to conservative churchmen. The "historic Episcopate" is still the crucial point in all negotiations for the restoration of broken unity. The "Reformed Episcopal Church" makes room for both Calvinists and Arminians, and thus "stands for the unity of Christendom." It has attained its majority, reporting encouraging progress in all directions.

"The Mennonite Church," we are told, "teaches the world the fact that while apathy in spiritual work fosters dissension, activity on Gospel lines fosters union." It seems that this Church is greatly split up into small sections, so we gather that its history has been marked at certain periods by spiritual lethargy. Some of the sections observe close communion, and there are differences of view as to the true mode of baptism.

"The Reformed Church in America" speaks of healthful growth, notwithstanding losses by removal. The work of the Church has gone on without interruption from distracting discussions or doctrinal controversies. Curiously enough, though there is a general desire for union with some closely-related body, there is no general agreement as to which one they should join. The nearest one in point of constitution is "The Reformed Church in the United States," which reports a steady growth and increasing liberality.

The "Christian Reformed Church" admits being one of the smallest in the United States. Originating in 1854 among Dutch refugees in the State of Michigan, it has been weakened by further schisms, the result of "an exaggerated individuality." Now it has 120 congregations and about 16,000 communicants. There have been attempts at reunion on the part of two of the divided bodies, but mutually destructive programmes having been put forward, old issues were revived and old wounds opened, and has been wiped out for some time to come.

The "Salvation Army" is briefly reported on, special mention being made of the General's present visit to the States. Large plans for the future are noted, while it is stated that "the Army now possesses in the United States, in round numbers, 2000 commissioned field officers or evangelists, 600 corps, fourteen slum posts, four rescue houses, and two shelter depots."

The "United Brethren in Christ" is in two divisions. The new section reports an improved spiritual life with piety quickened and broadened. More than 30,000 have been brought to Christ and a net increase of membership of over 15,000. There has also been activity in church building, the statistics showing "more than four-and-half churches per week"—rather a remarkable development, if correctly stated, for such a small body. The "Old Constitution" branch of the Church is "able to say that 1894 has been in every respect the most prosperous year since the unfortunate division in 1889. It has been characterised by a general revival influence which in some places seemed almost Pentecostal in power, and brought a net increase in membership of from 5000 to 6000."

Lastly, there are reports from "Unitarians" and "Universalists," but they do not call for detailed notice.

In addition to these specially contributed reviews of the Church events of the year, our contemporary gives some remarkable statistical tables, showing in fuller detail the various divisions of these and other religious bodies in the States. It may be of interest to reproduce these in summary. There are, according to this table, six sects of Adventists; thirteen kinds of Baptists (one having this extraordinary name, "Old Two-Seed-in-the-Spirit Predestinarians"); three sorts of River Brethren and four of Plymouth Brethren; seven divisions of Catholics; eight Communistic Societies; four kinds of Dunkards; four sections of Friends; eighteen of Lutherans; twelve of Mennonites; seventeen bodies of Methodists; and twelve tribes of Presbyterians. The net combined gain in adherents during the last four years of all the organisations was 2,356,222, but of these about a million and a-quarter are "Catholics."

ISLINGTON CLERICAL MEETING.

The annual gathering known as Islington Clerical Meeting was held on Tuesday last week in the Wilson Memorial Hall, Upper-street, Islington. There was a large attendance, including some of the best-known Evangelical ministers. The subject was "The Evangelisation of Mankind," which was dealt with by a number of speakers. Last week's Record contained the text of the various papers. The Vicar of Islington, Rev. W. H. Barlow, was, as usual, in the chair, and opened the proceedings with a clear statement of the duty of proclaiming the Gospel on every side, and some remarks on various approved methods of work.

"The Jew first" was the order of the programme, and a thoughtful paper on the evangelisation of Jews was read by Archdeacon Perowne, who took for his text, "Whose debtors we are." We must preach the Gospel to the Jews because they belong to the family of man; because they gave us on their human side the Holy Scriptures, and in his human nature the Saviour of the world; because they are a standing witness to the truth of God; and because in the past the Jew has been cruelly persecuted by those who have borne the name of Christ. Rev. A. Lukyn Williams dealt with methods of evangelising the Jews, concluding by deploring the prevalent ignorance concerning the Jewish mission. He said: At the recent (Anglican) Missionary Conference it was painful to see how, on the one hand, very few took any interest in it, although matters were discussed at every meeting from which lessons for the Jewish missionary could be drawn, and on the other, how utterly most of the speakers ignored the very existence of missions to the Jews. Even more typical of the present state of apathy in the English Church is the fact that, although the Board of Missions has lately issued an elaborate and excellent report, there is not a word in it of work among the Jews. Yet missions to the Jews call aloud for our thought, our care, our prayer; yes, and a consecration on the part of God's people for the blessed work of carrying the Gospel to that nation which has ever been the chosen of God, whose honour has been great in the past, and will be still greater in the future.

"The Evangelisation of Heathen and Mohammedan Lands" was the second division of the subject, the first speaker being Bishop Moule, of Mid-China, who affirmed the perpetual obligation resting on the Church to engage in this work. After addressing himself to Scriptural arguments and historical facts, he said: "I have ventured to speak of the Scriptural witness to the missionary obligation of the Church, as tested in my own case, when my aversion for all the conditions of missionary life was overborne, and I was constrained to offer myself to the Lord and his Church for foreign service. I did not mean that the argument from the Scripture operated, directly and without a medium, on my conscience. My father and mother, convinced themselves, had accustomed us their children to think of the

as an axiom, and to expect that our Lord might honour their house by calling for volunteers amongst us. We learnt that as an elementary Christian principle, before ever Christ had been revealed with power to any of us. When at length I saw Him, "telling me all that ever I did," and then by degrees relieving the terrors of conviction by holding out the hope of pardon through his blood, it was not long before the reviving soul asked itself, "How can I thank Him?" "Can He possibly make use of me?" So it came to pass that I cast myself at his feet, ready for whatever He would have me to do. His claim, once recognised, has never been questioned since. For nearly ten years, however, He postponed the requisition, and set me meantime tasks at home; till, I confess it, I began to cherish the hope that home, England, might after all be my life-long scene of service. But the pillar moved at last, and He helped me to follow it to China. The obligation on the Church is clear and cogent. The obligation on the individual Christian, to "offer and present" himself a living sacrifice, in unreserved devotion to his Lord, is equally clear. But the field of service, at home or abroad, and all the details of duty, are for Him to dictate, "the latchet of whose shoes we are not worthy to stoop down and unloose." He will dictate in his own language to the soul whom He has once made "willing to do his will."

Rev. A. J. Robinson followed, saying in the course of his address: There are two last commands of our blessed Lord, uttered by Him at two specially-appointed meetings. The last command to the Christian, as regards his own soul, is, "Do this in remembrance of Me." The last command to the Christian, as regards other people's souls, is, "Go ye into all the world, and preach the Gospel to every creature." Both are binding. But, besides the commands, may I not ask, Are we sufficiently mindful of the Christian's "blessed hope," even the coming of our Lord and Saviour? Thousands upon thousands of Christian people repeat day after day, twice at least a day, the Lord's Prayer. They say, "Thy kingdom come." How many realise the true meaning of these words? It is evident they refer to the future; how can we of what has arrived? We meet week by week around the table of the Lord to show forth his death "till He come." Many and many a time have we prayed at the open grave "that it may please God shortly to accomplish the number of his elect, and to hasten his kingdom! that we, with all those that are departed in the true faith of his holy name, may have our perfect consummation and bliss, both in body and soul, in his eternal and everlasting glory." Thus, as Christians and as Churchmen, we long and we pray. But it is also given to us to hasten that "coming." We can do it. How? Our Lord said, "This Gospel shall be preached for a witness to all nations, and then shall the end come." In conclusion, Mr. Robinson dealt with home efforts in furtherance of foreign mission work.

The duty and responsibility of the Christian Church in regard to missions was also urged by Rev. F. S. Webster, who said: We do not need to found an All Souls' College to pray for the souls of all men, but we must impress upon all true Christians that they are already, by virtue of their union with Christ, members of such a body, that the salvation of all souls, the strength and good health of all Christians, as much in Africa and Japan as in London or Birmingham, depend upon the closeness of their communion, the fervour of their prayers, the depth and strength of their spiritual life. So while endorsing all that can be said as to the need of careful organisation for the development of missionary interest. I plead most of all for a further realisation of the complete spiritual solidarity of the Christian Church throughout the world. It will prove the finest corrective of that narrow parochialism or congregationalism, or still more selfish individualism, which often stagnates the current of Christian love and enterprise.

"Evangelisation at Home" was the Third Division, the Dean of Norwich appealing to the audience as Christians, as Churchmen, and as patriots. Canon Eliot dealt with the aim, agents, and methods of home work. The last set speaker was Canon McCormick, who advanced some cautions to be borne in mind in evangelistic work. The met with no sympathy on his part. He said: I do not for one moment believe that there ever has been or ever will be any successful evangelistic work without clear, sharp, well-defined, distinctive doctrine. Vague generalities in religion will not save souls. "Virtue for virtue's sake" is a fine-sounding expression, which heathens as well as Christians have used, but it is practically valueless. Abstract doctrine, or theory, or moral principle, separated from the living Saviour, and without a Divine impulse and motive, will never lead to the evangelisation of the worldly and irreligious. And there is a danger, both great and obvious, in some evangelistic efforts, and notoriously in the Sacramentarian school of teachers, of forgetting that salvation is by grace. In upholding man's free will, the sovereignty of God must not be ignored. God saves, not man. God saves, and not a sacrament. God saves, and salvation is through faith that it may be by grace. The doctrines of grace may be misinterpreted and misapplied, but to say there are no doctrines of grace, or practically to ignore them, must have a most injurious effect upon evangelistic effort. In successful effort God must have all the glory; in apparent failure the faithful evangelist must console himself as the Master did, with the assurance, "All that the Father giveth shall come."

Later on the Canon declared his firm conviction that to know the history of the Jews, the causes of their rejection of the Messiah, and of their ultimate dispersion, and also the Judaising efforts of professing Christians to split and damage the Christian Church, is a certain safeguard against Romish and Ritualistic aggression.

In conclusion, Prebendary Webb-Peploe made a few remarks on the general subject, referring to the positions that the various speakers had taken up. He said: You have but to travel by train or in the omnibus—if it is possible to make oneself heard in the omnibus—or to enter any circle of people, in order to find that the multitudes do not resent the attempt to bring the Gospel to them. Often I have found in a third-class carriage on a train that if I spoke, and spoke sufficiently loud, the people in the other seats would rise and listen, as a rule, most attentively, while I addressed myself to those in my own compartment.

THE PEOPLE ARE WILLING,

the people are ready; and therefore the opportunity, one may say, is superabundant, whether to Jew, to heathen, or at home. "Spirit, soul, and body, all is God's, and God shall work through it," and the man who is willing in the day of God's power will find that, notwithstanding the blatant infidelity of the day, notwithstanding the criticism of the wise men of the world, notwithstanding the philosophy that would reject our Lord as God, and notwithstanding all the superstition and bigotry that gathers ominously around us, I do believe (and I say it with all solemnity) God will own and will magnify Himself in, and will bless the year to every man in this assembly who can bow the knee, and with the knee the whole being, no longer to trifle with the pleasures of this world, no longer to claim opportunities for self-advancement, no longer to think how much he can get, but only how much he can give to our God.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, JANUARY 27.—JOHN XVI.

The Mission of the Comforter (1-14).—Whilst Satan pours floods of opposition on the heaven-enkindled flame, it is nourished from heaven by the oil of the Holy Ghost. The Comforter comes when the Saviour's outward presence is withdrawn. Our Lord had to ascend in his transfigured glory, that as man's representative He might receive from the Father the Holy Ghost. He must receive Him as man, before He can give Him to man. (7) The Lord Jesus is the text from which the Holy Ghost preaches the sermon to men. Every phase of human experience centres in Him whom the Holy Ghost reveals. Whether it be conviction of sin, or faith, or hope; all begin and end with Jesus. (11) How foolish for Christian people to imitate or seek after the world, when its prince has been judged and condemned! (13) The Son did not speak from Himself, but from the Father. The Holy Spirit does not speak from Himself, but from the Son. When we have most of Christ, we have most of the Spirit.

The Little While (15-24).—The anguish of the cross lasted but a little while. The forty days were but a little while. And compared to the eternity of blessedness that awaits us, the present is but a little while. The anguish of the church is to life. Her groan not of death, but of birth. Out of all the darkness and sorrow, joy is already springing, but its fulness tarries. (23, 24) Let us pray more in the attitude that receives as well as asks.

The Father's Love (25-33).—The Spirit reveals Jesus, and Jesus the Father. God has a personal and special love to those who love the Son. (32) Therefore we need never again be lonely. Whoever leaves us, God will not forsake. However much the world chafes, we may stand above it, superior to its smiles and frowns, in fellowship with the Risen Lord.

MONDAY, JANUARY 28.—JOHN XVII.

The Glory of Christ (1-5).—Christ's desire for glory, though it meant the cross, was that He might reflect it back on his Father. He is glad to have authority only that He may use it to give life. His earthly ministry was inspired by the supreme purpose of bringing glory to his Father. With this intent He had accomplished each item in his given work; and now, as He approached the hour of his home-going, He desired to incorporate with his human nature those attributes of deity which He had voluntarily laid aside, thus, as the Divine man, He would secure a greater revenue of adoration and homage for his Father.

The Father's Gifts (6-12).—They consisted in the men He gave Him, the words He spoke, the works He did, the name He bore. How careful the Good Shepherd was of these given ones! He prayed for them, He kept them, He entrusted them as his dying legacy to his Father's care. Though He did not directly pray for the world, He was doing his best for it, when He concentrated all his solicitude on the depositaries of his Gospel. Note the different appellations Christ gave the Father: Holy in relation to his people; Righteous in relation to the world.

The World (13-23).—It hates those who condemn it by their other-worldliness. The salt must be left, the light must burn, for the world's own sake. Christ, whilst in the world, separated Himself as a holy Nazarite from its spirit, that we also might live in the world and yet not be of it, whilst giving it those inestimable gifts which He has entrusted to us for it. Now in the glory of Heaven He is still pleading for the world He loves, and the surest way of bringing it to believe is when his own people endeavour to keep the unity of the spirit.

The True Unity (24-26).—It is spiritual. When we abide in Him, we abide in each other. Men do not recognise it, but the special spiritual unity already exists. If we are one with Him, we must be one with all who are members of his mystical body. If one on earth, we must be one with Him for ever. He can no more do without us than we without Him. The revelation to us of all that is meant in the name and character of God is continued through our earthly life, and will be the employment of Eternity, and in proportion to our knowledge will be our love.

TUESDAY, JANUARY 29.—JOHN XVIII.

The Arrest (1-11).—This garden, with its shadowed walks, was a congenial resting-place for Christ. Perhaps the olives that still stand, with gnarled branches, heard Him pray. (4) Knowing all, He chose all. (6) There was something more than surprise—there was the forth-putting of a power which might easily have secured his deliverance from any force that man might bring against Him. His death was voluntary. (8) How beautiful his care of his own! Is not this what He says to the justice of God and to our foes, "Take Me, and let these go their way"? Faithful shepherd to the last!

Caiaphas (12-27).—John introduced Peter. His attachment to Christ was boldly confessed and recognised; therefore his entrance was not challenged. Transparency of character and boldness of avowal disarm hostility. Peter's mistake was in hiding the heart of a friend under the semblance of indifference. (18) Beware of the world's fires and company. Had Peter kept from these he would never have denied his Lord. (23) We have a perfect right to remonstrate with evil, but not to retaliate after its committal.

Pilate's Palace (28-40).—The ritualist is punctilious in the observance of rite, but it does not transform his evil heart. Christ's kingship is founded on his witness to truth. He came into the world to bear witness to Divine and eternal truth. Every word and act of his life reflected some lineament or feature in her majestic countenance. This is our function in the world. Let us hold commune with heaven, and tell earth what we have seen there. Not that the world will heed us, for its ways are evil, and it hails Barabbas as king, whose false and loveless life is as darkness. You may judge men of their ideal leaders.

WEDNESDAY, JANUARY 30.—JOHN XIX.

Condemned to the Cross (1-16).—Pilate adopted every method to secure Christ's release through the people's voice. He appealed to their national pride when he presented Him as their King; and to their pity, when he led Him forth bearing the marks of scourging. If only He had asserted Himself at the first, He had escaped the infamy of his life. Weakness is sin, and leads to sin. (9) In each man's conscience Christ stands waiting for the verdict of the soul. (11) We think ourselves free, but are really working out the determinate counsel and foreknowledge of God. To everyone power is given. Let us see that we do not abuse it. When Pilate gave Christ to the cross, he gave his conscience to the rack.

The Title on the Cross (17-22).—Hebrew, for religion; Latin, for government; Greek, for literature. In these words and this act Pilate anticipated the Divine verdict on the Jewish people. Their King was crucified by the Romans, and so their nation and city would be presently in the same way destroyed. Our estimate of Christ registered at some supreme moments of our life is probably the result of deep conclusions, which we had never before expressed, but which, once uttered, are unalterable.

The Group at the Foot of the Cross (23-27).—The gambler's heart is impervious to pity. The love of selfish gain hardens him to the sight of suffering. Beside the soldiers, how different the group that stood with tearful eyes beholding sufferings they could not mitigate. With a love stronger than death Jesus thought of his mother. Is it likely He will forget one of his own?

The Death of the Cross (28-37).—Scripture supported his failing spirit. (29) But He would have nothing to dull his mind. (30) The work of redemption; the rites of Judaism; the predictions of prophets and kings, were all fulfilled and finished at that supreme moment. We need add nothing to the finished work. Submissive in life, He was equally so when He yielded up his spirit in death. (35) Water will not avail for the cleansing of sin. "Not by water only, but by blood." But if blood purchased us to God, water is the symbol of daily cleansing.

The Burial (38-42).—A royal burial! Love carried the body, sweet spices scented the air, a new-hewn grave received the precious treasure, and angels mounted guard.

THURSDAY, JANUARY 31.—JOHN XX.

The Empty Tomb (1-10).—How different the effect of that empty tomb. For the Magdalene, consternation; for Peter, a hope that he might yet somehow hear his pardon spoken by those dear lips; for John, belief.

The Magdalene (11-18).—How little she understood the magnificence of that occasion. It is because we know so little of the inner meaning of events, which are happening around us, under the hand of God, that we weep so bitterly. What we suppose ourselves to have lost is really close at hand. What we count only disastrous is part of the process which is to irradiate our lives for evermore. Do not let tears blind you to the presence of your mercies. (16) Evidently the tones of the resurrection body will recall the familiar intercourse of earth. (17) The Lord first employed women as evangelists.

Thomas (19-31).—Christ's message of peace was more than the ordinary Oriental salutation. Our hearts need the assurance of forgiveness, hence his wounds, and the inspiration of the Holy Spirit, hence his gentle breathing. It is a mistake to forsake the assemblies of the saints, in doing so we miss the coming of the Lord; but He is prepared to come all the way from heaven, on purpose to stoop to win the faith of one loving heart, sorely perplexed, and longing above all things to know the truth.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 1.—JOHN XXI.

Night (1-3).—This return to fishing denotes a misconception of the mission to which they were called, and some impatience in waiting for the Master. There is almost despair in Peter's exclamation. And the failure to take anything added to their depression. But the Master appeared to tenderly put them right. How often have similar mistakes wrought a similar result.

Morning (4-14).—The breaking day revealed the Lord. There is always a right side of the ship, a right time and place. Fellowship with Christ can alone show what this is. (7) Love is quickest to detect the presence of the beloved. (9) How thoughtful this provision of fire and food for these wet and weary fishermen. So all through life, the Master is caring for his workers, as well as helping them in their work.

After Breakfast (15-25).—He gave Peter the opportunity of cancelling the thrice denial by a thrice confession. There are two words for "love." Jesus asked, "Lovest thou me," with the appreciative love of choice—Agapas me. Peter replied, "I love Thee," with the love of relationship, as a child loves its mother—Philō se. Peter was grieved that the third time Jesus used Peter's own word, and seemed to question even the natural and instinctive love, which was all that he claimed to possess. How sweet to know that Christ can look beneath the appearances of things, and find the moss beneath the snow! Love is the indispensable condition of service. Those that love can minister alike to sheep and lambs. (18) It is easier to gird ourselves than be girded. (20) We must not pry into the Lord's plans for others. Each is led along his own prepared pathway. Life and death are determined by the Master's "I will." It is enough for us to follow Christ.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 2.—ACTS I.

The Forty Days (1-5).—The instructions of this period were given in the power of the Holy Ghost, resting without measure on the Lord. Mark that word "infallible"; those early witnesses could not be deceived. Luke had not been among them himself, but he had searched out all things from the very first, and was perfectly satisfied. Probably many teachings and directions which took shape in the epistles, and in the constitution of the early Church, were given during this period. It was meet that the great facts of redemption should be consummated in Jerusalem, in the heart of the chosen people, and that they might have one more chance of salvation.

Witnesses (6-11).—He will not gratify our curiosity about his plans, but will equip us to do his work. We are not called to argue for Christ, but to witness for Him; living in fellowship with Him, through the illuminating grace of the Spirit, we are to tell men what we have proved Him to be. (8) The circle of influence is ever spreading further outwards. (9) His chariot. (11) The certainty and reality of the Second Advent. As He went, so shall He come, literally, clothed in a human body, with the same unchanged love towards mankind.

The Upper Chamber (12-26).—It was doubtless the same room in which they had taken the last supper. (14) The women were there, recognised and honoured, and presently baptized with the Holy Ghost. (15) Probably Peter was premature in this. Saul of Tarsus (how little he expected it) was destined to fill this office. It is noticeable how they began to quote Scripture, as the voice of the Spirit of God, and how true an ideal they had of the precise function they were called to fulfil as bearing witness of Christ's Resurrection. Be this our mission,

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 3.

THE TRANSFIGURATION.—Luke ix. 28-36.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Matt. xvii. 5.

THE conversation of the previous lesson had left a profound impression on the minds of the apostles. Our Lord had spoken both of triumph and of death, and of the death as necessary and preparatory to the triumph. They were probably still in the region of Cæsarea Philippi, and the scene of this event was one of the spurs of Mount Hermon. "About eight days after" (28), Matthew and Mark say "after six days," counting only those which intervene between the day when the prediction (27) was uttered, and that in which it was fulfilled. The week's silence was necessary after such truths had fallen upon their ears.

Jesus Transfigured (28, 29).—It was night when this change appeared (see ver. 37), and it took place while He prayed. Compare the example of Moses (Exod. xxxiv. 28-30). No one can be much in communion with God without his whole life and character, and even his very countenance, showing the effect of it. The change is variously described. "Transfigured," the word used by Matthew, is also used in Rom. xii. 2 and 2 Cor. iii. 18. Conceive what it was for his whole being to be radiant with such glory that his face shone in the night like the sun, and his very raiment became dazzling and white. In this it excelled the glory which shone in the face of Moses. A veil was sufficient to conceal that, because it was the reflection of a glory which shone upon him from without. This is the outshining of a glory which dwells within. What was it? For answer see John. i. 14 and 2 Pet. i. 16. It was the majesty and glory of the Son of God which shone through the vail of his human flesh. We shall know Him better, and worship Him with a deeper reverence if we tarry with Him on the mount. And it was a picture of what He will yet make his people. They are to be with Him to behold and to share his glory (John. xvii. 22, 24), and to be like Him (John. iii. 2).

His Companions (30, 31).—The two men were about the most remarkable mentioned in the Old Testament. Both had fasted forty days. Moses represented the law, the design of which was to show men their condemnation and need, and so prepare them for the Gospel. The types and sacrifices instituted by Moses were also waiting for their fulfilment in Christ, whom they foreshadowed. Elijah represented the prophets, the subject of whose testimony was "the sufferings of Christ and the glory that should follow" (1 Pet. i. 2). Both appeared with Jesus, in whom both type and prophecy was fulfilled. Their conversation was upon "his decease," etc. (31). Just the theme about which the disciples were unwilling to hear. Had not Peter, in his bold rebuke of Jesus (Matt. xvi. 22), simply expressed the aversion of the natural heart to the cross? Yet that very death is the theme which most deeply interests those who are in glory. The term "decease" means exodus, and recalls the departure of the children of Israel from Egypt. Death was to Jesus just a departure, and He has made it to be that to us (Phil. i. 23).

These were the two men whom the world lost. The place of Moses' burial could not be found, and the sons of the prophets made diligent, but futile, search for Elijah. But they are found here in glory with Jesus. That is where we shall find all those who have died in Christ.

The Witnesses (26).—Why choose these three apostles for this special honour? They were with Him in the chamber of Jarius' daughter (viii 51), and in the garden of Gethsemane (Matt. xxvi. 37). They were thus privileged to witness a remarkable display of our Lord's resurrection power, to behold something of the depth of his anguish, and to be eye witnesses of his majesty. Such personal acquaintance with Him was a preparation for the life of testimony and suffering that awaited them. But how signally they failed here as in the garden. As they slept during our Lord's anguish, so they slept during the first part of his transfiguration (32). They are not the only men whom sleep has robbed of most blessed experiences of the manifestation of Jesus. Of course Peter spoke (33). It would be unlike him to be silent in presence of such a vision. About his remark there was the usual mixture of good and evil. Such fellowship was undoubtedly "good" and Peter was willing to let everything else go to perpetuate it. But he mistook the purpose of our present life, which is not mere rapture, but active service. It is selfishness that wants more enjoyment on the mount, and leaves the demon-possessed people uncared for in the valley. Power with God is in order to power with men.

For the Young.

THE STORY OF THE PEARL.

LITTLE MARGARET was sitting in the firelight, on a footstool at her mother's knee. "I want to play with your rings, mother dear," she said.

Margaret's mother was quite used to this request, so she slipped her rings one by one off her slim fingers, and put them carefully in the little girl's pinafore.

"This one is to be mine when I am a big girl, isn't it, mother dear?" said Margaret, holding up a beautiful pearl circlet.

"Yes, dear, that is to be yours," answered the mother, "because your name is Margaret, and Margaret means 'a pearl.'"

"Did it cost a great deal of money, mother?" "Yes, dear, a great deal. I do not know how much, because father bought it for me, but pearls are always costly."

"Mother," broke in Margaret's brother Herbert, who was lying on the rug, "what makes precious stones so precious? I mean, why are they worth more than little bits of coloured glass, which are almost as pretty?"

The mother thought for a minute, and then answered gently, "Though I do not quite agree with you, dear, that coloured glass is as pretty as the real stone, yet there certainly are other reasons beside their beauty which make these jewels so costly. First, their rarity. If pearls were as plentiful as pebbles they would not cost so much. Anything becomes costly when it is difficult and dangerous to get. You know, that unlike other precious stones, the pearl is brought up from the bottom of the sea. It is found in the shells of oysters, in the Indian Ocean, the Red Sea, and many other places. The work of diving for the pearl-bearing oyster is both difficult and dangerous. The divers tie large stones to their ankles and throw themselves into the water. They cannot stay below for more than a minute and a half, and in this time they cut away ten or twelve oysters from the bank. Then they are pulled up again to breathe, and other men go down in their place. There are often hungry sharks about, of which the divers are very much afraid."

"Do the oysters make the pearls, mother?" asked Margaret.

"Yes, Maggie, they do. When the water is quiet the oyster will often lie with the valves (the two sides) of its shell open, and apart from one another. But if a fish swims close by, he, perhaps, disturbs the water, which washes up a grain of sand or a tiny bit of wood from a wreck, into the oyster's mouth. Now, the oyster, being so soft himself, does not like to be touched by anything rough or hard. What can it do to get rid of this sharp thing which hurts it? It has no hands, so it cannot push it away. I will tell you what it does. It covers up the sharp bit of wood or sand with a soft white covering, very like the material with which it lines its shell. Covering after covering is laid on until the hard rough sand has disappeared, and in its place is a smooth round thing, which it does not hurt the oyster to touch, and which we call a pearl."

"I should not have thought an oyster would be so sensible, would you, mother?" said Herbert; "oysters look such stupid things."

"I suppose it is the instinct which God has given them, in order that they may protect themselves from injury," replied his mother. "I think we should be wise if we followed the oyster's example, and covered up our annoyances with a good firm layer of good temper, instead of constantly irritating ourselves with them, as we so often do."

"I daresay," remarked Herbert, "that oysters think pearls are very ugly things."

"Very likely," said the mother, "just as we think our troubles very ugly. But if we bear them rightly they may perhaps look as beautiful to the angels as pearls look to us."

Margaret looked long and thoughtfully at the beautiful circlet on her chubby finger, and then said, "Please tell us something else about my ring, mother, dear!"

"Does my little girl remember the story which the Lord Jesus told his disciples about a pearl?"

"Tell it again, please, mother," said Margaret, nestling closer to her mother's knee.

"This was the story which Jesus told: There was once a merchant who bought and sold precious stones. But most of all he liked to get hold of a fine pearl, for that was worth more than any other stone. One day he heard of a man who possessed a very precious pearl, larger and more beautiful than any he had ever seen before. But this wonderful pearl was worth a great deal of money, and the merchant had not sufficient money to buy it. What was he to do? He must have that pearl. He went home and gathered together all the precious stones which he possessed—rubies and emeralds and sapphires—and sold them all that he might gain money enough to buy this one beautiful pearl, which was finer than any he had known before. That is the story. What is its meaning? I think the precious stones which the merchant possessed at first must stand for power, and wealth, and learning, and the Pearl of Great Price is the knowledge of salvation through Christ Jesus. Is this knowledge worth more than wealth, or learning, or power? Why, yes! Which is better—to know that one is sure of heaven, or to have money in the bank? Which is better—to have Jesus for your friend, or to live in a big house? Which is better—to have the forgiveness of sins, or to come out well in an examination? Which, Herbert?" Herbert rolled uneasily on the rug, but made no answer.

"And now another word for my little girl! I think it is a good thing to find out the meaning of our names, and then to try and act up to that meaning. Now, how can you, my little Margaret, be like your name? I will tell you. When the ancient Romans looked at a pearl, it made them think of three things—beauty, modesty, and nobility. Then you may be like the pearl if you are beautiful, modest, and noble. Do you think that you cannot make yourself beautiful, my darling? You cannot alter your features, but a mouth that is never sour with ill-temper, a forehead that is never wrinkled with frowns, and eyes that are always shining with love and kindness cannot help but be beautiful.

"Then the pearl is modest. It does not flash with light like the diamond, or gleam with fire like the ruby. It does not attract attention to itself, except by its gentle shining. You may be like the pearl in this. Do not try to attract attention to yourself or your good qualities—be good, but let other people find it out for themselves. Do your work well and quietly, then your light will shine, and people will see that you are one of God's pearls.

"The Romans would not allow anyone to wear pearls, unless he or she were of noble birth. But my Margaret may be noble without being a duchess. If she belongs to the Lord Jesus, she may be a daughter of the King of kings. And a girl who will not do a mean thing, who will not tell even a white lie, who will never try to deceive, is a noble girl.

"Will my little Pearl try to be like her name? And now we must ring for lights, or father will come home and find us in the dark!"

So the children's hour ended with a loving kiss, and the whispered prayer that both son and daughter might be found of the Lord in that day when He reckons up his jewels.

"WHO AND WHY" is the title of the report of last year's parochial work issued by Rev. E. A. B. Sanders, Rector of Whitechapel. It is a record of varied and unremitting endeavours, well directed and carried out with an encouraging measure of success. In an accompanying letter Mr. Sanders says:—"The claims have been unusually heavy, and the year has closed with an adverse balance of £600. The constant strain of raising the necessary funds to maintain the work is almost breaking down my health, but I rely upon the kindness of friends to enable us to continue our efforts to bring the Gospel of Christ to bear upon the hearts and homes of our 20,000 people."

Some London Missions.

THE FIELD LANE INSTITUTIONS.

Again and again, in visiting among the Missions, I have found how the God-given thought of many years ago obeyed in faith and devotion by obscure men, and in a humble way, has given rise to a great institution, a centre of blessing to the lost, and bringing glory to God. So at Field-lane. In 1841, a few earnest men, touched by the appalling condition of the district began in a small room in Caroline-court, Saffron-hill, a quiet work among children. This has developed into the extensive and far-reaching Field-lane Refuges and Ragged School Mission—a comprehensive title, which covers a wide circle of operations.

Mr. Peregrine Platt, to whose devoted energy and singleness of aim these institutions owe so much, said during an interview I had with him last week:

"Among the many changes introduced into the manner of working, we have never deviated from the original fundamental principle; that this is an Evangelical Mission, the grand aim of which is to save sinners. Everything going on here is of an essentially Christian character. We have thirty meetings a week of various kinds, but all with one end in view. In these, a very large body of workers, many of them are engaged; all, we believe, true Christians.

TRAINED IN OUR OWN SCHOOLS,

"Even now the work is growing; branch after branch is added as need arises; and the people, old and young, come in increasing numbers. Last Sunday night we had 570 children in the Bible School; and in the morning we had over 600 adults of the poorest class at the Ragged Church. In both these God has given marked and definite tokens of blessing, and conversions amongst old and young are frequent."

In connection there are all manner of weekday and important operations: Bible classes, prayer gatherings, sewing classes, and Band of Hope; and for the adults, mission services, mothers' meetings, parents' meetings, an admirable crèche, and numerous other useful agencies here unnamed.

Turning to special branches, there is the Girls' Training Home, fitting drifting girls for domestic service. The girls received into this Home come from London workshops, provincial factories, and country villages, and are, in a large proportion of cases, rough, untrained, impatient of control, and difficult to manage. There are, consequently, many disappointments; but notwithstanding the uphill character of the work, it is not without its encouragements, as is abundantly shown by interesting cases given in the Matron's Journal.

The Male and Female Refuges are also of a remarkable character, so much so that I fully hope later on to devote one of these little articles specially to these refuges. They are not mere shelters. Their object is not simply to give a night's lodging, and then send forth the inmate into the streets in the rags and misery in which he came. Their work is with those whose characters will bear investigation, and who are able to give references as to their antecedents. Such are allowed to remain about a fortnight, during which time they are assisted in their efforts to obtain employment. This has been happily successful in many cases. During the past year 853 men and women—in a deplorable condition—have found shelter in these refuges.

Two large and important Industrial Schools are also maintained at West Hampstead, the boys' accommodating 140, and the girls' eighty-four. For many years a valuable work has been done in these Homes for children rescued from grave danger. But with all this varied service are not overlooked, and extensive relief operations are going on. Indeed, in winter the resources of the institution are sorely tried. "When the snow is falling, and the keen wind cuts through the thin rags of poverty, the chilled wanderer eagerly seeks its warmth and shelter. When father is out of work the pinched and hungry children are largely kept alive by the free dinners (numbering 7603 during the past year), and by the daily distribution of broken food received from warehouses). When the family are shivering in the leaky garret, the grate empty and the cupboard bare, our Bible-woman is welcomed as she enters the cheerless abode with the much-needed help."

It is obvious that such operations cannot be carried on without funds. At present the institution needs £500 to close the year free of debt. The secretary, Mr. Peregrine Platt, Field Lane Institutions, Vine-street, Clerkenwell, E.C., believes that the Lord's people need only to know what is actually being done in order to lead them to send the necessary means for carrying on a work which God is greatly blessing among the poor and perishing.

DESTITUTE CHILDREN'S DINNER SOCIETY.

Whatever may be said by economists, looking at the matter from various points of view, as to the great question of the relief of the poor, there is a general consensus that the children cannot be left to starve. Hence different organisations are labouring in diverse ways to provide for the children found foodless and fainting in the schools. Amongst these the Destitute Children's Dinner Society is doing good service by making grants to clergymen, ministers, missions, and local committees, who open dining-rooms, where destitute children may have weekly a substantial dinner for a sum not exceeding one penny. This is the rule; but I may note, from personal observation, that many workers, finding children absolutely penniless, have a benevolent fund to provide the copper. Thus writes

THE BARONESS BURDETT-COUTTS.

"The resources of the Society, always slender, have been sorely taxed during the last few years. The children need now the succour of a generous sympathy to enable the Society to minister to the wants of their little, too often suffering, bodies. The Society has been obliged, at the opening of its work, to reduce its grants to the dining-rooms. These at the present moment number fifty-two, situated in different parts of London. The call we make for help is to enable us to give our usual grants in aid. The committee gave last season 224,484 dinners, which was 46,790 dinners less than in the previous year—a decrease solely due to want of funds. The Society gave £1052 in grants towards the children's dinners, and in addition to this the children themselves contributed £453. If friends could realise what a loss to the children this decrease of 46,790 dinners represents, I feel sure few would turn lightly from the thought of suffering children going away in helpless distress from the one place to which they looked for relief, disappointed of the meal which too often is the only cheering, comforting, warmth-giving experience of the long cold winter."

These pointed words will stir an echo in many hearts. That the children themselves appreciate the dinners is clear enough to any who, visiting one of the dining-rooms at the mid-day hour, mark the eagerness of the famished little ones. Particulars may be had of the secretary, Mr. H. Morton Carr, 13, Ilminster-gardens, Lavender Hill, S.W.

NATIVE CHRISTIANS IN BENGAL.

Dear Sir,—A number of the native Christians here support themselves by the weaving of native cloth in hand looms, and are thus raising themselves, by God's goodness, to a more prosperous temporal condition. This is a cause of exceeding thankfulness to us, as we are certain at the same time that they are getting spiritual blessing, and surely the two going hand in hand must have a real influence on the Hindoos and Mohammedans around. A living native Church is, without doubt, the hope for the future in India, for our God must want Bengalis—in this case—to be the means of the conversion of Bengalis. We are praying and working to this great end, and hence my plea.

This weaving industry has increased by great strides during the past few years, and now the capital in our hands is not sufficient for the working of so large a business. Will any of your readers be so kind as to help in this difficulty? At present, through various friends who know how necessary it is that these poor Christians should have an honest means of livelihood put in their hands, we have a capital fund of about 400 rupees, but it needs quite 800 rupees to work without borrowing. Our prayers for work for these poor people have been answered by large orders from a good English firm in Calcutta, so we cannot doubt that the same prayer-answering God will give us the needful capital fund to work with, apart from borrowed money.

Yours sincerely in our Master's service,

(Miss) S. M. Adams.

THE L.M.S. CENTENARY.

The centenary celebrations of the L.M.S. last week were attended by much enthusiasm. As is well known, the formation of the society was resolved upon by a body of ministers assembled at the "Castle and Falcon" Inn, Aldersgate-street; so with evident propriety the proceedings on Tuesday, January 15, began with a breakfast at the present "Castle and Falcon" Hotel, which is situated on the same site as the old inn occupied. Mr. Albert Spicer, M.P., presided over a goodly gathering of ministers and others.

A season of prayer, subsequently held, in Falcon-square Chapel, was followed by a meeting for ministers only. A deeply interesting account was given by Rev. R. Lovett of the historical meeting held on January 15, 1795, which was attended by fifteen ministers—two of them members of the Church of England, two belonging to the Countess of Huntingdon's Connexion, four Presbyterians, and, seven Congregationalists. The old minute-book states that some time was employed in prayer; and, added Mr. Lovett: The gathering for prayer was a characteristic of every early meeting held in connection with the Society. The Society was born in prayer, nursed in prayer, and it has been continued in prayer.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne read a paper on the spirit that animated, and the motives that inspired, the fathers and founders who inaugurated the undenominational missionary movement a hundred years ago, dealing especially with some of the difficulties they had to encounter, and the fortitude they displayed in their work.

Rev. J. Guinness Rogers, who presided, compared the conditions of 1795 and 1895. There was then, and there is to-day, commercial depression; but we do not now manifest the spirit of consecration and courage which enabled our fathers of the last century to embark upon their noble enterprise. He asked whether the century now being entered upon, was to be marked by the same faith and energy, the same absolute trust in God, which characterised the founders of the society.

Rev. Dr. Mackennal spoke of the difficulties and hindrances of work, mentioning the fact that the large membership of the churches to-day means a less intense, less earnest, and less devoted spiritual unity.

Rev. H. Arnold Thomas thought that the ministers, if they would, could lead the churches forward in mission interest and work. He maintained that they might best defend the citadel at home, and carry on aggressive work, by pushing on a brave and vigorous policy abroad.

A large public meeting was held in the evening in the City Temple, presided over by Mr. Hugh Matheson. Rev. Dr. Berry, in a stirring address, said: Judged by our own standard of purpose and intention—still more if judged by the loftiness, the breadth, the universality of the Gospel—we have indeed cause for frank and sorrowful confession, and for that contrition of heart which moves to new and larger consecration; but when we turn to the heroes and heroines who have represented us in all departments of our missionary enterprise—still more when we turn to the use which God has graciously made of these heroes, and of our own limited endeavours—it seems to me that it would be little short of infidelity and the basest ingratitude not to sing with the heart, and understanding also, a song of praise to Almighty God for his goodness to the fathers and to us.

Rev. Dr. Pentecost maintained that Christians had no option whatever in regard to foreign missions. They were all debtors to Christ, and the only way they could pay their debt was to bring to his feet, as far as lay in their power, those for whom Christ died, and to whom God gave his pledge.

Rev. James Chalmers, of New Guinea, said that what was wanted was that Christian men and women should link their souls with Christ and cry, "Forward, forward everywhere!" The work would and must be done, and if they did not do it God would do it; but He was giving them an opportunity to help Him do it, and why should they not take hold of the opportunity at once?

THE BELGRAVE HOSPITAL FOR CHILDREN, No. 77, Gloucester-street, S.W., have received a legacy of £500 from the late Mrs. Church Dixon, in reduction of their indebtedness of £800.

THE LATE CHRISTINA ROSSETTI.

BY MRS. RUNDLE CHARLES.

FEW things have been more remarkable and encouraging in these days than the chorus of enthusiastic homage which has followed the close of the quiet, womanly life which has just passed from among us. In the midst of this eager, noisy competitive world of London, where every unusual gift and every distinguished name is dragged into a glare of light, Christina Rossetti lived a life as hidden and as simple as if London had been a quiet country village, and the nineteenth century an era antedating the reign of journalism, one might almost say preceding the discovery of printing. And, now, not a daily paper but is full of the fame of her "deathless singing;" and in all the various literary dialects she is proclaimed "the greatest religious poetess" England has produced. There can scarcely be a more beautiful foreshadowing of the Day of the Great Unveiling, when the alms "done in secret" to the human brothers, and the prayers poured forth "in secret" to the Heavenly Father shall be "rewarded openly."

Not, indeed, that to Christina Rossetti the true "reward" could ever have been, then or now, hearing herself talked about, by men or angels. But her death simply reveals what was there before; how the lovely songs poured out from her full heart, and the life which made such true music to accompany them, have penetrated deep into the hearts and minds of her generation, and deepest into the hearts of those most fitted to influence the generation. Her gifts were indeed most rare, and she used them as a true artist, faithfully working out the "good and perfect gift descending from above, into the best form possible, below."

Her inheritance, as well as her inspiration, were very rare. By birth, as well as by intellectual training, she belonged to the two nations, Italian and English, from the union of which some of the best literary work of the world has come forth. She was born in 1830, and died December 29, 1894. Her grandfather, Gaetano Polidori, who married an Englishwoman, and lived in Charlotte-street, Portman-square, translated Milton into Italian. Her father was an Italian patriot, who escaped from the tyranny of the reigning dynasty in Naples in the disguise of an English soldier, and became Professor of Italian at King's College. He was a great student of Dante.

Her mother, Frances Polidori, was, it is said, a sweet, dignified woman, with much imaginative power and a great gift of story-telling, which brightened the childhood of her four gifted children; herself, at once Christina's earliest inspiration, and to the end her most valued critic. She was a member of the Church of England, in which her family were trained. The eldest daughter, Maria Francesca Rossetti wrote a book highly appreciated by students of Dante called "A Shadow of Dante." One of the brothers, Gabriel Rossetti, has a world-wide reputation as painter and poet. To him we owe the lovely painting, the "Girlhood of the Virgin," which immortalises his sister's face.

Christina began to write prose and verse at a very early age; but her first well-known volume of poems, "Goblin Market," was not published till her thirty-second or thirty-third year, 1862. Her early life in her home was naturally spent much among Italian refugees and students. In youth and middle life she was often thrown with her brothers' friends, and was called the "Queen of the Pre-Raphaelites." Her last twenty years were chiefly devoted to the care of her mother and her two aged aunts. The home of her last years was in Torrington-square. In her memorial sermon in the church which she habitually attended, Christ Church, Woburn-square, Rev. J. Glendinning Nash speaks of her weekly receiving the Holy Communion, and of her "never failing, to the day of her death, to take a personal interest in the varied work of church, and schools, and district." "She strove," he says, "by Divine Grace, throughout her pilgrimage to Paradise, tremblingly but trustfully to follow the blessed steps of the Saviour Christ in self-denial, self-sacrifice, and self-surrender. She strove to follow Him not afar off but near. And in the 'wintry rime' of December 29, 1894, as in silence her lips moved in prayer, her spirit passed peacefully away."

In the memorial service in this church, her own hymn was sung by choir and people.

The porter watches at the gate,
The servants watch within,
The watch is long, betimes and late;
The prize is slow to win.

"Watchman, what of the night?" But still
His answer sounds the same;
No daybreak tops the utmost hill,
Nor pale our lamps of flame.

One to another, hear them speak,
The patient virgins wise;
"Surely He is not far to seek!"
"All night we watch and rise!"

"The days are evil—looking back,
The coming days are dim;
Yet count we not his promise slack,
But watch and wait for Him!"

One with another, soul with soul,
They kindle fire from fire;
Friends watch us—who have touched the goal,
They urge us—"Come up higher!"

With them shall rest our waysore feet,
With them is built our home;
With Christ! They sweet, but He most sweet,
Sweeter than honeycomb.

There—no more parting, no more pain,
The distant ones—brought near;
The lost so long—are found again,
Long lost, but longer dear.

Eye hath not seen, ear hath not heard,
Nor heart conceived—that Rest!
With them—our good things—long deferred,
With Jesus Christ, our Best.

CHRISTINA G. ROSSETTI

CHRISTINA, the name of "Anointed"
Thy watchword has proved,
Performed is the labour appointed,
Earth's fetters removed.
Thou hast shared in the work of immortals,
To bear from the skies
Sweet echoes through heaven's own portals,
Pure teaching, and wise.

(From Photograph by Messrs. Elliott & Fry.)

The seed that developed in weakness
Has risen in might,
A bud from the shadow of meekness
Now blossoms in light.
Our sister, who learned from Christ's teaching
His praises to sing,
The goal of her longing is reaching,
The face of her King.

Though billows might toss themselves round her,
Her feet were secure,
The Saviour's protection had found her,
His love made her sure.
Serene in the heart of the water,
The calm of the blest
Encompassed her soul where Christ brought her,
To depths of his rest.

At times, through the whirl and the rushing
Of life here below,
Sweet music from heaven out-gushing
Around her would flow.
God gave to his loved one, in dreaming,
A glimpse of his throne;
And now, through the gates' pearly gleaming
Her spirit has flown.

Sweet sister, who sang of the beauty—
The radiance above—
Whose lessons transfigured each duty
With glory of love,
Thou wilt not return from the Heaven,
Where partings shall cease,
Thank God that thy spirit was given,
To speak to us—Peace.

VILLAGE MISSIONS.—A few humble believers at Windmill Hill, Hailsham, are endeavouring to maintain a Gospel testimony in this out-of-the-way village. They would be thankful if any Christian brother were led to come and hold special services in order to rouse the unsaved. This village would, in fact, afford a wide opening for any who, at their own cost, would be willing to come and labour in the Gospel. The present correspondent is Mr. G. Packham, Pope's-lane, Windmill Hill, Hailsham, Sussex

IN THE ARDÈCHE.

IN the McAll Mission Quarterly, Miss Jean Gregory describes Gospel work in the villages of the Ardèche, superintended by Pastor Narbel. She writes:—

"St. Fortunat is a very small and not very tidy village, principally Roman Catholic; Dunières is mostly Protestant, and decidedly cleaner and more attractive. The Roman Catholics are not at all friendly to the Protestants. The curé said one day in church, while reproving some naughty girls for stealing: 'You should leave that to the Protestants. It doesn't matter for them, as they have no souls.' Their children are taught by the frères and sœurs, instead of being sent to the Communal School, which is, of course, gratis.

"The factories (silk winding and silk spinning) begin work at 5.30 a.m., and go on till 6.30 p.m., with three intervals of two hours in all for food. On Saturday they stop at 5 p.m. By eight o'clock in the evening a dead silence usually reigns. The village is asleep. Nice old patriarchal customs prevail. When you pay a visit, it must be long. You must partake of something—café noir, milk heated and sugared, grapes, cherries steeped in brandy—and you will be escorted a long way back. Luxuries are rare, and it is wonderful how well one gets on without them. I never think now of a soft easy chair or a sofa.

"There are two mission schools besides the congregational Sabbath-school in the church after the morning service. One is held at Dunières on Wednesday, and the other at St. Fortunat, on Friday. The children behave very well, and listen well to M. Narbel's picturesque and touching addresses. There was a special meeting for the 'conscrits' the other Sunday, presided over by a colonel from Valence, son of a pastor. Both he and M. Narbel gave them words of warning and encouragement, and they sang two of our more warlike hymns. The hall was packed full. The decoration of flags and evergreens was very tasteful. The young soldiers' last visit when they go and their first when they return is to their pastor.

"The people gather early from the hills for church, and sit on the low wall or stand about quietly talking till it is time to enter. Sabots are for the most part discarded on Sundays, but not so the neat 'bonnets blancs,' which even young married women wear, reminding me of the fisher-girls in the North of Scotland, who used to go to church with just such nicely-frilled white caps. In manner the people are undemonstrative, staid, and grave, though not without a touch of humour. The singing in church is funereal. I thought I played the instrument very slowly; but an 'ancien' was heard whispering to his neighbour, 'Cela galope.' This sad way of praising God must be a relic of the times of persecution, as also the practice of interring the dead in their own ground. If the 'six-foot' can be spared it is fenced round, but usually it is sown over the first sowing time. When the Protestants of a hundred years ago were hunted like wild beasts to prison, the galleys, and death, they buried their dead where they could—in the garden, or the yard, or the cellar.

"The Dunières hall is well filled on Sabbath evening. M. Narbel is much beloved. His addresses are always Evangelical, earnest, and striking. The congregation on Sunday is much increased since he became pastor, and our people are growing more 'charitable,' said a venerable elder to me. But the amount of sous put into the bag is awfully small for an auditoire of four or five hundred people. If a franc is found in the collection, the wonder is—where it came from."

ALDERSHOT.—About sixty members of the Soldiers' Christian Association met at the Grosvenor-road Soldiers' Home on Friday evening for a social tea, to welcome the branch of the Seaforth Highlanders, which had just come to that station from Tipperary. A most enjoyable evening was spent. Almost every regiment in the camp was represented, and short addresses were given by several of the secretaries as to the value of the work. The Seaforths expressed their appreciation of this manifestation of the bond of union amongst Christian soldiers, and detailed how their branch had grown from three members, when it was stated at Fermoy eighteen months ago, till at one time it numbered thirty-five members. They also testified to the value it had been in the barrack-room, and in a station when they had not the advantage of a Soldiers' Home.

The Evangelist.

The Weary Dove's Return.*

By C. H. SPURGEON.

Whether the raven returned to the ark, but refused to come in; or whether it found a resting-place on the slimy boughs of trees, or on the tops of the mountains, which we are told began to be visible, I cannot tell. This I do know, that, wherever the raven rested, the dove could not do so; there was no clean place fit for the dove's clean nature. So it had to return to the ark; and when, weak and weary, it could hardly reach the ark, being heavy with the damp, perhaps mired with the filthy water into which it may have fallen in its weariness, while just able to get as far as the ark, it might have perished in the waters had not Noah perceived his little bird coming to the window. I suppose he was there already looking out for her, and he stretched forth his hand, and caught her, and pulled her in, and she was safe in the ark again.

I. That thus God receives his servants. Sometimes God's servants wander. Oh, how sadly have some good men wandered! We speak this to our shame, we make no excuse for ourselves, we have wandered like silly doves, we have left the place of peace and safety and joy, and we have gone abroad, flying we know not where. Perhaps I speak to some such at this time.

Now, if you are one of Christ's doves, you will never rest till you go back to Him. Time was when you could have found pleasure in the ways of sin; but you cannot do so now. You may try to find it, but you cannot. When you were a raven, you might have done so; but now that the Holy Spirit has made a dove of you, you are spoilt for the raven's ways. When a true child of God wanders into sin at any time, and goes back to the old haunts, he thinks to himself, "I used to enjoy myself in this place of amusement; I used to make merry with such and such company; the pipe and the bowl were once like heaven on earth to me; but now," he says, "I do not know how it is, but these things seem so vapid, so empty, there is not the life, there is not the vivacity about them that I knew in my younger days. It seems to be all a mere hollow sham now." Ah, my friend, it is not these things that have altered; it is you that the grace of God has changed! If God means you to live in heaven, you shall never find your heaven in this world. If He has chosen you to be his, and means you to be his, and has put his Spirit within you, you must be always restless till you come back and find rest in Him.

"May I come back?" says one. May you come back? Your Noah is at the window waiting for you. Speed towards Him with both your wings; rest not till He puts forth his hand to you, and grasps you, and draws you in to Himself. "But will He have me? Will He have me again?" O bird of the weary wing, He is not weary of you! O bird of the wet wing, that has been soiled in the filthy flood, He will not reject you! He washed you once; He will wash you yet again. He waiteth to be gracious. Jesus loves to receive backsliders. It is the joy of his heart not only to make a sheep out of a goat, but to find one of his sheep that has gone astray; not only to adopt a stranger into his family, but to restore the prodigal son. That is the meaning of that parable; it is the backslider's parable. Oh, that you would understand it, and know that the infinite mercy of God is as ready to receive a returning backslider as Noah was to receive his wandering dove!

As far as I can see, this dove was sent out in the morning, and she came back in the evening, and Noah pulled her in unto him. Let that be a picture of every day in your lives. When you wake in the morning, perhaps the factory bell is ringing; at any rate, it is time for you to be off to business. You must think about your business; perhaps yours is a work that is mental. You must give your mind to it: so all-day long you feel like the dove flying abroad. Well, take good heed that, when the sun goes down, you make your way back home to your Lord. Lock up your heart every morning before you go out, and give Christ the key to keep till you come home; and then, when He opens it at night, the sweet perfume that you had in the morning will be there in the evening. It is best if we can keep up our thoughts of Christ all day long; but peradventure we cannot, then let the dove, that flew away in the morning, be sure to fly back at night, It is where you go when the day's toil is done that tells what sort of a man you are. I think I have before now used the simile of the crows. You cannot tell where the crows live early in the morning; they are out on the land following the plough. Farther on in the day they are inspecting a field of turnips, perhaps just watching to see if they can find a fly or a worm. Where do they live? Wait until the evening, when they get together, and then you will see that they make a straight line for those tall trees where their nests are. Where do your thoughts go at night? Where do they go when your day's toil is done? When you have done with the business of the day, which is like the crows picking up the worms, which way do you go then? That shows where your soul lives; so take care that, in the evening, you make your way back to your Noah. Oh, how sweetly does Christ come to us in our evening prayer, and put out his hand, and pull us in unto Himself, and we rest once more—

> As in the embraces of our God,
> Or on our Saviour's breast.

II. This is what the Lord Jesus Christ does to sinners. I have spoken first of his servants; now I want to speak of sinners who are seeking his face.

Note, then, that the Lord Jesus Christ does not despise the condition of the sinner who comes to Him. I have imagined that this dove might have fouled its wings; certainly it was not the beauty that it was when Noah sent it out in the morning, but he did not therefore refuse to take it into the ark. It was very weary, and just ready to drop into the waters: yet Noah did not refuse it, but there he stood, at the open window, to meet it when it came. And you feel very foul, very unworthy, very unfit, and very unsafe; nevertheless, Jesus Christ will not refuse you. Whatever your condition may be, He casts out none who come to Him. Come as you are; come, even though you feel that you cannot come; come any way, for He will not reject you.

The first thing that Noah did with this dove was to display his power: "He put forth his hand." I have known the Lord display his power very remarkably when poor souls have been coming to Him, putting forth his hand, sometimes in providence, doing some extraordinary thing to bring them to decision. Sometimes He has used a sermon, or a stray word from some gracious soul, or He has put forth the power of his hand in the preaching of his Word. Sometimes He has used a religious book, or a little tract, as his agent; it has not mattered what the instrumentality has been, it is the power which God has put forth which has been the means of laying hold upon the coming sinner. Sometimes there has been no book and no sermon, but the Holy Spirit, without any apparent means, has made an impression upon the conscience and upon the heart. There has come over the sinner, when he has begun to seek the Lord, a singular melting power, a feeling of solemnity such as he never had before. He cannot understand it, he seems to be on the borders of a new world, he hears the chimes of bells which he never heard before, ringing out of invisible places, and summoning him to his God. I know what this experience means, and I pray that some of you may know it; that just now, at this very moment, our blessed Noah may put forth his hand to you poor fluttering doves. You cannot do anything, but Jesus can; you cannot save yourselves, but He can save you, even as Noah put forth his hand, and saved the dove from perishing.

Sometimes, it is ignorance that keeps sinners back from Christ; for God's doves are often very silly creatures. They do not know the way into the ark, they miss the window; but Jesus does with them as Noah did with the dove: "he pulled her in." I hope I am not talking beyond the experience of many of you; or, if I am, I pray my Master to make this to be your experience even now. May these poor simple words of mine induce some of you to come to Christ at once!

DR. BAEDEKER'S TRAVELS.

My visit to Berlin, where I spent two weeks with Miss von Blücher, gave me opportunities for sowing the seed of the Gospel, and also for an ingathering of many precious souls. During the watch-night even, with the first hour of the New Year, several souls entered into life, and many more followed, not daring to enter on the New Year without the safe Guide and Keeper. Miss von Blücher's work is in the far west of Berlin, yet her hall, which holds 300 people, is always well filled whenever a meeting is announced. The earnestness of the audience is very striking, and one cannot but see that the plain and simple Gospel has lost nothing of its Divine power to convince, convict, and convert sinners.

Miss von Blücher is an evidence of the fact that the band of men and women who out of weakness were made strong has not died out. Her devotedness, in love to the Lord and to the poor, amongst whom her work chiefly lies, and her clear, unmistakable testimony, leave a mark on those who come in touch with her. Her work is unsectarian, but she is not allowed the benefit of fellowship with other labourers in the Lutheran Church, but has had to bear suspicion and reproach, which might have discouraged her if it were not for her undaunted fearlessness. She is one of the lonely labourers in the field, and has a just claim on the sympathy and support of other workers who are more favourably situated. There is room in Berlin for many more unsectarian labourers, who might break up the fallow ground both in the city and suburbs of that million-people place.

I arrived in Prague yesterday, just in time to take part in the last day of the week of prayer. I have not attended any prayer-meeting where there was such a general interest shown, and where short and pointed prayers followed in succession without interval, all with fervour and definiteness. Most of the prayers were in the Czechish language, but they ranged over the wide field of the world; they were both international and pan-denominational. The work of the American Board of Missions in Prague, under D. A. W. Clark, is growing both in quantity and quality; it spreads gradually, and is becoming a network over the land, winning back by degrees, surely and steadily, the Roman Catholic people, whose forefathers suffered persecution for the Gospel's sake, and whose memory is still fragrant in connection with Huss, the noble martyr whom the Jesuits brought to the stake. I am holding some meetings for the Czechs, which are most encouraging, although I can only speak by an interpreter. The Roman Catholic priests try, by every means in their power, to hinder the proclamation of the Gospel and the distribution of the Word of God; they show plainly what more they would do if they could.

A work lately begun in the birth-place of Huss is subjected to the enmity of the priests, but the people are eager to gain instruction in Huss's Bible, and they flock together to hear whenever they may. I am only able to remain here a few days, and my time is fully filled up with Bible readings and Gospel work. My next stopping-place will be Pilsen (Bohemia), and then Frankfort-on-Main, where I am to be the guest to Mr. M. Bernus, 4, Taunus Anlage. Pray for the work on the Continent of Europe, especially for Germany and Austria. I may, perhaps, return to England by the end of January.

Prague, January 15. F. W. BAEDEKER.

DISCHARGED CONVALESCENTS. — The annual meeting of the After Care Association for Poor Persons Discharged Recovered from Asylums for the Insane, was held on Jan. 14, at 83, Lancaster Gate, W. The chair was taken by Canon Elwyn, and the meeting was addressed by various friends of the work. During the past year 118 cases were considered by the committee.

JEWISH BAND OF HOPE.—About 900 poor Jewish children, most of whom attend the Band of Hope and Bible Mission at the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel, were entertained on Thursday and Friday evenings with a well-laden Christmas tree, prepared for them by the missionary in charge, Mr. H. Ehrlich, and his devoted wife, and liberally contributed to by many friends of the mission. The large party were entertained in three companies, and after singing and Gospel addresses, each child received a bag of good things, including a comfortable garment and some sweetmeats. A large number of Scripture texts were also distributed, and gifts were sent to the homes of sick children.

WORK IN SOUTH AFRICA.

We should like to ask the readers of THE CHRISTIAN who have followed our work in South Africa with prayerful interest to unite with us in praise to God for all the encouragement He has given us among the Zulus. The mission-hall at Durban is filled on Sundays with about 300, nearly all heathen men. During the week it is used for the night school and the converts' Bible classes. The first magic-lantern exhibition caused something like a stampede; it was supposed to be witchcraft, but is now an unfailing attraction. In connection with these services there is regular visitation of the sleeping quarters of the native labourers.

The results attending this systematic work are very satisfactory. The converts, like the rest, do manual work at the harbour and elsewhere during the week, but on Sundays a number of them go out in two bands, under the leadership of Daniel, our Zulu evangelist, and Mr. Gale, one of the English missionaries. They preach in the streets, drawing numbers of their heathen friends to hear the Gospel. Their testimony is the more effective because they are known to labour for their bread, Zulu men, as a rule, being disinclined to work, because, for generations under their kings, they have had military training, living only to fight and hunt.

Some of the converts have been set apart to spread the Gospel as itinerants; two are in Zululand, helping our three European missionaries at St. Lucia Lake, where a permanent mission-station is being formed as a centre from which the workers can itinerate in Zululand and Amatongaland.

Many open doors are before us. With a few helping hands to strengthen ours, great things might be accomplished this year. Vast districts and countries like Amatongaland are wholly unevangelised. The people beg for missionaries, of whom there are eight or nine in our eastern division of the South Africa General Mission, who can address a Zulu audience without the aid of an interpreter, but they cannot itinerate in these far outlying districts without waggons, of which we do not possess one.

Mr. Howe has just made a journey on horseback to Esthowe, in Zululand, and back. He hopes to be in England in February. We should be very grateful for opportunities—at drawing-room or other meetings—to bring the work of the Mission to the notice of those whose sympathies and prayers might do so much towards spreading the knowledge of Christ where his Name is yet unknown, and thus hasten his coming.

Communications may be addressed to the care of the secretary, South Africa General Mission, 14A, Lingfield-road, Wimbledon.

(Mrs.) M. S. OSBORN-HOWE.

CITY WORKWOMEN.

There was a very happy gathering of friends on Wednesday last week, in Lecture Hall, Aldersgate-street, to praise God for blessing on the work among young City workwomen during the past year. We had much to record of the Lord's faithfulness, through many months of trial. These trials led us to form a quiet circle of prayer amongst our workers every Thursday morning, not only for our own special service, but for all kindred work. The outcome has been abundant blessing. The special services held last week and still going on, have brought many to decision for Christ.

One large City firm, where many women are employed, and where two ladies have been working for about five years with thirty lady friends in their own neighbourhood writing letters to the girls, have seen a splendid reaping time this last week. The girls themselves wish the services continued.

Most interesting testimonies were given by several of the ladies as to the great blessing received in many places of business. The two "Welcomes" were spoken of as the greatest boon for their temporal and spiritual need, and a contrast drawn between the privileges of twenty years back and the present. At that time there was no place for "Women only." The outcome of all the efforts put forth for the women is highly appreciated.

ELEANOR FISHER.

THE MEETINGS held by the Women's Total Abstinence Union in furtherance of the pledge-signing campaign have been attended with good results.

TO THE CZARINA.

"Open thy mouth for the dumb."

CHILD of Prince Albert's daughter—he
Who fostered light and liberty—
To you, as to some beckoning star,
One weary singer from afar,
Darts her long stretch of eager thought,
From heart with honest anguish fraught.

Help for my friends, my own dear friends;
Help for the Stundists, this I crave;
God keep the Czar from sending woe
On those whom Jesus died to save;
Why banish those whose prayers would bring
A blessing down on any king?

Surely your soul was dear to you;
You would not lie your faith away;
O ask your husband in his might,
To call the Stundists home to-day.
And what though priestly pontiffs frown,
God's peace is sweeter than a crown.

I sat me by the old farm fire,
And thought of Russia's outcast band;
Strange yearnings filled me for my dear
True brethren, in your icy land;
"Help me to serve them, Lord," I cried;
And then I thought of Russia's Bride!

I thought of Russia's Bride, the child
Our Princess Alice left behind;
And "Surely," to myself I said,
"Her children are of gentle mind.
I'll string my words in sweetest way,
And ask her for her help to-day."

Do as your mother would have done,
O Empress of your vast domain:
Plead for the Stundists; be their weal
The glory of your husband's reign.
Nor let Siberia's terrors roll
In torrents o'er his dying soul.

They served their Lord, the King of kings,
But Russia's Lord was reverenced, too,
Save when his orders clashed with God's,
And then was their allegiance due
First to his laws who gave them breath,
And gives his wages after death.

Your English brow would blush for shame
If I apology should name!
Humanity sits choking; I
Give vent to England's stifled cry—
"Child of Prince Albert's daughter, be Earth's guardian of God's family."

CHINESE CHRISTIANS AND STUNDISTS.

From the English pastor, Wei-san-ü (Rev. E. O. Williams), and the lady teachers, Kuh-mei-lan and K'ang-ai-sin (Chinese names of the two lady missionaries), together with the other missionaries and church members of Paoning, Pacheo, Kuang-üen and Sin-tien-tsi, to the minister of our Lord (Dr. Baedeker) and to the Russian Christians, we write this letter as follows:—

"Because your faith is strong, you have not shrunk from the hardships of travelling, nor feared the blast of the icy winds, in spreading the heavenly doctrine in the distant regions; pointing out the way of truth to the poor and simple; for the sake of the Lord Jesus enduring all kinds of hardships, and verily undiscouraged thereby. We have heard of you, esteemed brethren, on the one hand suffering bonds at the hand of your rulers, on the other enduring the shame of mockery and reproach from your fellow men. Not only so, your food and clothing are insufficient. We, on hearing this, were greatly pained, and our hearts could not rest; therefore the whole Church, including Christians and inquirers, consulted together and have collected a little money in order to assist you, esteemed brethren, in procuring fuel and rice.

"We earnestly hope that you often read the words of St. Paul in his epistles to the Romans and Corinthians, and that your hearts thereby obtain peace and comfort, and that your sufferings may only tend to purify your faith and love, and make you steadfast. The Lord Jesus will open for each one of you a pathway of peace, while waiting for his second advent, to receive us all to heaven, where we shall enjoy everlasting happiness. It is only to be expected that afflictions must first come, and then bliss. We hope our brethren will continue to stir each other up to earnest effort. How felicitous will be the results."

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

It is the season for stocktaking. Wise men of business, once a year at least, balance their books, in order to ascertain what progress or otherwise they have made since the previous balance. To the Church of Christ has been committed a great undertaking. Its field is the world, and into its furrows the Church has to cast the seed of the Kingdom. The harvest is not yet, but a stocktaking of the human agency which it is able to employ for its Divine mission is at once a desirable and profitable undertaking. To one department of this machinery we would now draw attention.

The current issue of Medical Missions contains a clear and tangible estimate of the degree in which the Church at large regards this grand work of Medical Missions. It is contained in a list of the Medical missionaries now in the foreign field who hold British degrees and diplomas.

An authority states that in the three kingdoms there are in all 26,000 medical men; this list of men and women at work all the wide world over amounts to 202, a proportion of one to every 130 at home, a proportion which no lover of his kind can regard with much satisfaction.

However, there is this to be said, that the number is seventeen in excess of last year, and it would have been greater still, but for the existing war between China and Japan, which has kept back some from their appointed stations.

There seems little doubt that the acknowledged importance of the medical missionary, and the readiness with which doors are opened wide to him that were bolted and barred against his clerical brother, will cause this important but recent addition to the armament of missions to be much more widely employed in the future. To the teeming millions of India, China, and Africa, where for the lack of human sympathy, and owing to climatic reasons, sickness and disease are much more common than with us, the medical missionary is finding abundant entrance. The message sent home by each devoted medical agent is, "Oh for more help! There is work for ten instead of one around our doors." And seeing that they carry with them medicine for the soul as well as for the body, it would be difficult to imagine a more fitting representative of Him who freely healed all those who claimed his healing power.

Let us see then to what extent the various Churches employ the healing art:—

Church Missionary Society	29
Free Church of Scotland	23
London Missionary Society	19
United Presbyterian Church of Scotland	14
Presbyterian Church of England	12
China Inland Mission	10
Church of Scotland	9
Society for the Propagation of the Gospel	9
Baptist Missionary Society	7
Zenana Bible and Medical Missionary Society	6
North Africa Mission	6
Wesleyan Missionary Society	5
Brethren's Mission	5
Universities' Mission to Central Africa	4
Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society	4
Friends' Foreign Mission	4
Irish Presbyterian Church	3
London Jews' Society	3
Welsh Presbyterian Church	3
Methodist Connexion	2
Church of England Zenana Society	2
Mildmay Missions	2
Thirteen churches and societies, one each	13
Unattached	3
	202

The fact that even the very smallest associations are here represented is significant, and it is indicative that the medical aspect of missionary enterprise is receiving attention in every quarter. At whatever corner of the wide field a group of missionaries is at work there is now a promise and a performance of the healing of the sick.

May not this list be entitled the newest gauge of Christian missionary enterprise, the measure in which medical skill is allying itself to the cause of the Cross? Doubtless it will be scanned by many eager hearts at home and abroad, to whom the growth of Christ's Kingdom on earth is the chief object of their being. Patient souls, let them thank God and take courage!

The Universities, also, from which these ambassadors have proceeded, form another object of interest, as well as being in some degree indicative of decided missionary bias. Edinburgh sends 45, Glasgow 27, London 12, Dublin 9, Aberdeen 7, Cambridge 6, Durham 2. Neither Oxford nor Victoria Universities supplies a medical graduate to the mission field.

Women take a high place in this roll of honour; there are twenty-seven included in the roll of this Royal service. Their admission to the ranks of the profession was in many instances grudgingly yielded, but they are giving the highest justification of their ambition by its consecration on behalf of the helpless and the dying in foreign lands.

To the medical profession generally this missionary department of work is worthy of attention. Two hundred and two of their number have accepted service in the army in the field on behalf of Christianity and humanity, while over 3000 men holding British degrees and diplomas have gone forth from our shores looking for a livelihood all over the world; and a further army of 2426 are to be found who serve the Queen in the Army, the Navy, and the Indian services. Under the blessing of God, a man may serve his day and generation acceptably wherever he may be, at home or abroad; but may not the Church look to the medical profession with hopefulness to supply increasing numbers of those who will press forward to this, the highest post open to their noble profession?

Thus far our stocktaking, which we commend to every Christian heart. The work goes on under the eye of the Lord of the Harvest. It must not be allowed to flag. There is every inducement to increase its power and extend its operations, for the Church of Christ, by this new department of missionary work, is coupling the deed with the word, more nearly approaching the testing condition of its Founder, sent by Him to his questioning follower, who was languishing in the black fortress of Machærus:—"The blind receive their sight, and the lame walk; the lepers are cleansed, and the deaf hear; the dead are raised up, and the poor have the Gospel preached to them." W. M.

THE WOMEN'S "AT HOME."

In The Christian Treasury for January Rev. F. B. Meyer gives a lively account of his Pleasant Monday Afternoons at Christ Church with poor women, which he has designated "The Women's At Home."

It is nearing 2.30 on Monday afternoon. Kind and willing hands are placing the last touches upon the hall; palms are being carried from the chancel steps; the canaries are being brought to perform their useful ministry of chirping and singing, and reminding perhaps of sunnier climes and happier days. Little tables with their vases are waiting in the centre of the seats; tables with cups and saucers are standing at each end of the room; and downstairs at the entrance door the infant schoolroom is prepared as a crêche, with mattresses for the children to roll upon, bassinettes for them to sleep in; dolls and other toys. Milk is there in cans and bottles, and some nine or ten devoted women are prepared to receive and nurse the forty or fifty babes and infants who are to be deposited by their mothers, much to their own relief, who thus obtain a respite from the constant handful which a babe entails.

My lady helpers arrive and take their seats—one at the piano, two or three at the tea tables, one at the door—whose business it is to shake hands with and give a smile to every woman as she enters. Now the first arrivals come in little groups of two and three, evidently intending to make the most of the one bright, brief time which they look forward to and count on during the week, and which gives a welcome change to the current of their thought, and the confinement of their narrow rooms. Frequently the women say that we can form no conception of how great the change is, from the narrow court or street and the tiny room, to the beautiful hall with its air and light and the little touches of nature and of human love; the sense that they who are always caring for others, are now to come in for a share of love for themselves; the sense of freedom from the pressure that rests so heavily upon the wife of many a working man.

At 2.45 when our company has largely assembled, I go in, and we spend the first half hour variously. Sometimes we teach them Salvation Army choruses, or other songs which they can sing over their washtub; when the children are querulous; when their husbands come home out of sorts. I always tell them that when they feel least like singing they should start singing; nothing cures the sad heart, or keeps the tempted heart so well, as notes of praise and song. There is nothing the devil hates so much as singing. "Let us sing a hymn," Luther was wont to say, "and shame the devil."

Sometimes I have a talk about what men like in the home, and urge each wife to make a pair of slippers, and have them warming before the fire; once get a man to take his boots off, he is less likely to want to go out. Then I descant upon the properties of a singing kettle, a table-cloth on the table, and every preparation, including a kiss to welcome him on his return from work. Sometimes our conversation turns on the value of wholemeal bread, and the shops in the neighbourhood are named where it can be obtained; or we wax eloquent on oatmeal porridge, and give recipes for its preparation. At other times a lady comes to speak—now on total abstinence; again on vegetarianism; as to preparing soup, &c., of simple materials. Or perhaps a friendly doctor will explain what to do in the case of burns and scalds, and other household catastrophies. At other times, one of my lady-helps reads some bright and interesting incident, and it is most gratifying to notice the fixed attention of the women, and their response in a ripple of laughter, or their hastily brushed-away tears. We are greatly indebted also to ladies who come to sing solos and duets. In any of these ways the first half hour passes brightly enough, and I never feel that I have done my share until, sometimes by my own brightness and good humour, I have succeeded in sending a ripple of laughter over the faces of my friends. To me it is an inexpressible joy to see those worn and tired features lit up by a smile, even though it so soon fades away into the fixed look of depression which long years of poverty and sorrow have fixed upon the face. I cannot but feel also that those moments do much to break down the barriers and to open the heart to receive the Gospel; they at least establish a friendly feeling between us all; for there is nothing that so soon breaks down prejudice and unites all hearts as the touch of nature, be it a hearty laugh, or a rain of tears, or a common interest.

At 3.30 the crockery is cleared away, and the audience which by this time will number about 270 women, will settle down to listen to Bible talk. We are great in singing, and before I speak we sing some favourite hymns, or learn new ones. Then the Word of God is opened and read, with a running commentary of application to the spiritual needs of those who have but little other opportunity of drinking of the water of the Fountain of Life. It is very wonderful how the old world narratives of the Bible come home to the working women of to-day, reflecting their experiences, and shedding a ray of heavenly light upon many a dark cloud that broods over them. Often tears stand in their eyes, or deepening silence betrays the intensity of the interest. We are conscious that a work of grace is proceeding quietly but irresistibly, and that many a heart is becoming aglow with fresh love and hope, and desire after God. Many of my working sisters are now finding their way to the galleries of Christ Church, bringing their husbands, and taking an intelligent interest in our work, and nothing is lovelier in my opinion than that the Church of God should become dear to working people who think of it, pray for it, and give time and thought to its development, which are proportionately greater than is often yielded by those better able to make sacrifice. Prayer and the Benediction close our meeting. Sometimes I say as we conclude—"Let us shake hands all round, and say 'welcome' or 'farewell sister.'" The effect is very strange, to see each woman turning first to the right and then to the left, with the words of greeting on her lips. So, at 4 precisely, they pour out, though a few always linger for further talk, and especially to tell my helpers some story which will quickly touch their sympathies.

The most remarkable thing about this gathering of women has been their attitude towards total abstinence. One of my lady workers is deeply interested in the British Women's Temperance Association, and one afternoon spoke about it. The result of that address, the interest it excited, and the movement to which it led, was that about 130 joined our branch; many of them, of course, have been abstainers before, but a very considerable proportion started for the first time. They are immensely proud of their badge of white ribbon, their pledge books, and their right to consider themselves workers in the great cause.

Let me say that I look upon that afternoon meeting as the happiest bit of sunshine in the week. It is a parenthesis of almost unsullied joy. The Spirit of God is near, and whether we laugh or cry, or sing, or talk, or listen, or have our tea, the Spirit of heaven is infused into all hearts, shines upon all faces, and begins to steal into sunless lives.

A PIOUS INTENTION.

Before the door of a picturesque cottage, in one of the prettiest villages in England, sat an old man, playing with a fair-haired child. A smart-looking rider was coming leisurely up through a short avenue of trees, and as he approached, the old villager put his hand over his eyes, peering, and asked, "Who's that on horseback, Nannie? Tell g'an'-father." The child stared at the horseman, grew shy, and ran indoors. "Ah, Rowlands, don't often see you up my way," said the rider, who, despite his lack of clerical attire, was the new vicar of B—. "You can't get so far, I suppose?" he said. "I'm as bad as I were forty year ago," said the old man, "that I be! Why, I can't take my eyes off ye, passon. Sit! Ye sit as well as a master of hounds. And they boots o' yours, if you'll 'scuse the interruption, is a powerful help to ye, passon!" The "passon" smiled; he was used to all sorts of evasions, but this was his second encounter with old Rowlands. "It is hardly fair, you know, Rowlands. You have not answered my question; now, have you?"

"Ah, your honour—your reverence, I mean—'tis because I can't a bring my mind to think as you're passon, that's for why. But, lor, I've had the pious intention these forty years o' looking in at your place up there."

"Rowlands," said the vicar, "I'm afraid you're a sad old heathen; but for all that we are going to turn that 'pious intention' of yours into a solid fact. I'm not going to preach at you, but next Sunday I shall call for you myself."

"What's a good o' going to church, your reverence, when a mind's not there? Forty years ago come Michaelmas, I told the Lord as I wouldn't set foot in his house till he'd a gi'en me a sign. And there an't no sign come yet."

"But you cannot make a bargain with the Lord, Rowlands. 'Draw nigh to God' yourself, 'and He will draw nigh to you.' What kind of a 'sign' are you looking for?"

"'Tis well enough for you to talk, passon, but I've had all the waiting. Well, well, to think as forty year have slipped by until I be that old and ancient I be'ant worth troubling about! There, passon, let the Lord send me back my Jack, him as is on the sea these five year, and I'll keep my pious intention."

"Don't forget, Rowlands," said the vicar, "that there must be two to a bargain. However, I shall come in for you on Sunday."

"Ah, a good sort, and not troubling himself about the cut of a coat, or the brim of a hat," mused the cottager, gazing after the retreating rider. "Them boots, too, is fine, but they'll take some polishing! Eh, deary me, but I've gi'en him a puzzler!"

"Whatever are you laughing at like that, father?" called a woman's soprano from the interior. "Wasn't that the new vicar's voice? He's a right good sort."

"That he is," assented the old man. "But he's getten a hard job this time. He's to take me to church a Sunday! Ha, ha!"

A middle-aged woman came out wiping her hands, and stared. "Father, you going to church at last! Well done, new vicar!"

"We'll see, we'll see, Emma. Don't 'ee be too cocksure."

. . . .

It was Saturday evening, and inside the cottage the old man was devouring every word and look of a stalwart seafaring man who seemed heartily to enjoy his father's glad confusion.

"You see, father, my captain is brother to your new vicar, and when he heard I belonged to the place he was right glad, I can tell you. We've been due home more than a month."

"Ah, but Jack, 'tis the Lord as sent ye—ay, as sarten sure as I sit here. 'Twere Monday when new vicar stops, and says he ha'n't a' seen me to church yet. 'Let Him send me my Jack home,' says I, 'and I'll come to church.' Seems as 'twere a merracle, Jack, with you a setten there, and to-morrow Sunday, too."

"Well, father, we'll go to church together, to-morrow, shall we? I owe that change to Miss Weston, father."

"Do ye now? Ay, but I be all upset like, inside. Seventy-six come Martinmas, and waited all that time to find as there's a God in heaven as notices us poor creeturs!"

"But, father, you've always had a soul. What of that?"

"Ah, my son, that's a marvel, too. Couldn't believe, couldn't take hold, as ye may say; and there you be, a setten there to tell me what a sinner, what a fool I be, and I must believe."

The vicar looked in later—the old man was very respectful.

"'Tis him, for sure," said he, "He's getten the best o' me this time, and I'm a poor, sinful old man. I ha' my sign, vicar, and I don't want no one to fetch me to church. I ha' had the pious intention for a long time, but seein' as He's sent me a sign, He can do as He likes wi' me—He's the Almighty."

The old man sat in a front seat in church on Sunday, and he fixed his eyes all the time on a picture of the Crucifixion in the chancel window. As he left the church he said—

"Jack, He must a-suffered awful—and He's gi'en me a sign; eh, I wish I'd a-known Him fifty years ago, that I do."

"He knew you, father," said Jack, "let that comfort you. And now you must just trust Him for all the rest. You may."

"Ay, I do. And perhaps He knows, Jack, of my pious intention."

. . . . .

The vicar was talking to his wife at home.

"I knew his weakness," said he, "he has missed his son sorely, and when Alfred wrote of his coming home, and that one of his best men belonged to the village, I felt here was my opportunity, and I used it. I grew half afraid the vessel would not be in to time—faithless, as usual. But it is all right now. And the old fellow is as bright and eager as a young Christian; that is odd, too, after forty years of 'pious intention.'"

"Not odd, dear," was the gentle reminder, "for it says of one of old that his flesh became as the flesh of a little child. Do not you think that a like change is possible in old Rowlands' heart?"

"With God," said the vicar, "all things are possible." M. B. Gerds.

MR. BEHESNILIAN IMPRISONED.

You have in previous numbers referred to Mr. Behesnilian, of the Tarsus Bible Mission, and it may interest your readers to know that though, through our Foreign Office, the Ambassador at the Porte has brought influence to bear with a view to his being released, Mr. Behesnilian was by latest letter—December 13—still practically a prisoner at Marash. The fact of Mr. Behesnilian being an Ottoman subject makes action on the part of the British authorities difficult, but those who are interested in him have reason to be grateful to the Foreign Office for the promptitude with which our appeal upon his behalf was met by telegraphic instructions being sent to Constantinople, and we trust that the result will be his release with permission to proceed to Tarsus, to which place he was travelling with his family and four pupils when made a prisoner more than three months ago.

You have kindly interested yourself, and received subscriptions towards the expenses entailed upon Mr. Behesnilian by his imprisonment. Such extra expense seems to have been unavoidable, as Mr. Behesnilian has had to maintain himself and the four pupils during their imprisonment, and has been separated from his family, who have of course to be maintained at Tarsus. The small committee of the Tarsus Bible Mission in England is not in a position to provide the additional sum now required, and will be grateful if any of your readers will assist by contributing. During the past two years, Mr. Behesnilian, who received his training at University College, London, and was ordained to the ministry before leaving this country, has done valuable Christian work amongst his fellow-countrymen, and from what we hear there is little doubt that the object of this persecution is to stamp out Christian work. That the result may be very different, and eventuate in the wider opening of the door to the Word of God, and liberty for Christian work, we earnestly pray; and would ask the prayers of the Lord's people that those who are now suffering may be supported in their trials and kept faithful.

I will be glad to supply interested correspondents with information about Mr. Behesnilian and his work. Wellesley Robinson, Colonel,
Acting Chairman Tarsus Bible Mission.

WELCOME MISSION, PORTSMOUTH.

Mr. T. Hogben, director of this work, has told the story of its recent difficulties in a pamphlet entitled, "Seven Years of Struggle and Victory." He writes:—"This Mission was born in prayer, and it has lived only by the power of God in answer to prayer. Attack after attack has been made to stop it, but foe after foe has been defeated. In October last the site for our new Mission premises was sold, and it was said by some the work must be closed or removed to another part of the town. Yet it seemed to us necessary that we should retain our present field in the centre of the town, especially having regard to the needs of our sailors for whose salvation the Mission was especially started.

"In our distress we cried unto the Lord, and He heard us. We were offered No. 1, Edinburgh-road, Portsmouth, consisting of a house, with garden and stables, at a rent of £65 per annum, with the option of purchasing the whole for £1800 at any time during a five years' term, with permission to erect a hall, and, in the event of not purchasing the site, to remove the same at the close of our tenancy. The whole thing was distinctly an answer to prayer; it was the Lord's providing, and we determined, with the help of sympathetic friends, to go forward.

"The situation is one of the best in the town for our purposes. It is in close proximity to the proposed new naval barracks, and offers accommoda- for reading and class rooms, which we have long wanted. The hall we intend to erect will seat about 750, and the mission will stand as a light in a dark place, proclaiming salvation through faith in the once crucified, but now risen and glorified Son of God. This mission having been started especially to help sailors, marines, and "time-expired men" of both the services, with the great increase—in all 14,000 men—now being made to the Navy, is more needed than at its commencement, whilst its past record in real work done, warrants us in appealing to friends of sailors for their prayerful sympathy and help."

As is well known, the work was commenced by Miss Sarah Robinson, of the Soldiers' Institute. Communications to Mr. Hogben should be addressed, Edinburgh-road, Portsmouth.

MR. MOODY'S CHURCH, CHICAGO.

A correspondent writes:—"The work of the Chicago Avenue Church during the past twelve months has gone beyond any other year in its history. The morning services are largely attended, and the evening services fill the entire church, up stairs and down, and sometimes people find it necessary to stand at the regular evening services. Three hundred and twenty-seven persons have been added to the membership, and the present year has begun even better than the past, as thirty-eight joined last Sunday, and there are many more who have been already examined, and will unite at a later day.

"Mr. Chas. Inglis spent the week from December 16 to 23 giving addresses at the Bible Institute and in the church. He has been there on two former occasions, but his work this year seems to have been accompanied with greater power than hitherto. The students were delighted with his lectures, and of the thousands of people that heard him in the church, several hundred earnestly inquired the way of salvation. Of course it is impossible to say, as yet, how many of them were born again; but we trust that many were."

SWEDEN.—Madame E. de Ramsay writes from Wilhelmsro: "We have now nearly thirty children in the two Homes—the Hope and the Refuge—all epileptics; these make work equal to the nursing of sixty ordinary patients. Those able to appreciate the Christmas festivities were greatly delighted, and all enjoyed the good fare. Unfortunately pleasant emotions have to be paid for by increased weakness afterwards. Some of the inmates enjoy spiritual blessings; as the other senses decline, spiritual strength shows itself in a clinging to God with a touching child-like trust. The Bible and Prayer Union and the Christmas Letter Mission branches at Wilhelmsro have both increased in influence. The secretary was one of the first who started such agencies in foreign lands, and still manages it personally; even in old age these missions can be carried on, and are a great joy."

TRAVANCORE AND COCHIN.

From the Travancore and Cochin Diocesan Record, for December, we learn that evangelistic work proceeds with much encouragement in the seven centres of the mission. We make a brief extract:—

"At Thalowady (Changanashery), where the Hindus regarded the presence of the evangelists with no favour, they now look upon their work as one of love. A learned Nair admits the truth of Christianity, but finds baptism an offence. The school children are much interested with Bible stories and picture leaflets distributed to them. In one place, when the evangelists read some portions of Scripture, a Roman Catholic woman exclaimed, 'We are left in darkness, please give me a book,' and when they gave her a Scripture portion, she received it with great joy. In a Sudra house, a woman offered to buy a Scripture portion, when she heard of the love of Jesus; but a Nair that stood by said it was a Christian book, and persuaded her to take back the money she had given for the book. On one occasion, when they began to speak to a man, he said he knew nothing, but there was a person who could argue with them; so saying he led them to a schoolmaster, and called all the men whom he met on the way. But they all heard the evangelists without cavilling, and at last a few of them bought Gospel portions. In another place, a boy who was listening to the evangelists, being desirous of buying a Gospel portion, ran home and sold a cocoanut, and bought a book with the money thus obtained.

"At Cochin, the Jews, both white and black, do not at all like to hear anything of Jesus, but their children in the schools are interested in picture leaflets. One of the black Jews heard the evangelist with some interest, and has asked for a Hebrew New Testament. The dislike of Mohammedans is very great, but one of them received English handbills. The papers for educated Hindus, issued by the Madras R.T.S., are read with much interest by some Brahmins. Nairs and Thiens have no objection to hear the Gospel preached. Two of the latter circulate the handbills among their friends. A Roman Catholic has joined our church."

SALVATION ARMY IN AMERICA.

Rev. Samuel Charlesworth has recently visited the United States of America, giving him the opportunity of becoming acquainted with the work carried on by his youngest daughter and her husband, Commander Ballington Booth, in connection with the Salvation Army. Illness obliged him, reluctantly, to return home to England, after a brief stay of three weeks in their simple cottage home at Montclair, New Jersey State. He writes to us:

"During my stay, I saw sufficient of the work to rejoice much in the noble enterprise of proclaiming the simple Gospel message to the degraded, poverty and vice-stricken outcasts of the slums of New York city. As in many other cities of the States, these people include Germans, Italians, French, Spanish, and Irish; all mix with the Americans, in the slums or lowest suburbs of the cities—lost, utterly abandoned, neglected, and out of the reach of ordinary Christian efforts.

"The slum workers, or sisters, as they are called, live among them, dress most plainly, penetrate the worst abodes and drinking saloons, undertake any work—nursing, washing, dressing, feeding. Making themselves all things to the lowest and vilest, by these self-denying, self-sacrificing toils, they have conquered ill-will, hatred, and opposition, and become a power for good throughout the land, gaining in a marvellous degree the confidence and respect of the roughest and most vicious; and by their tender sympathy and loving deeds winning the wanderers to know something of that divine fatherly love of which their own is the reflection. Even the wealthier inhabitants of the cities are moved with wonder at the success of such efforts, and begin not only to appreciate but to support the toilers.

"Willing labourers, it is their joy to acknowledge that they are but messengers of mercy under the direction of Him who gave the command, 'Go out quickly into the streets and lanes of the city, and into the highways and hedges, and compel them to come in, that my house may be filled,' and also gave that later last injunction, 'Go ye into all the world and preach the Gospel to every creature,' adding that comforting assurance on which those earnest, faithful workers so implicitly and confidently rely, 'Lo! I am with you alway even unto the end of the world.' It is this felt presence of Jesus which makes them so strong, so bright, so joyous, amidst people and scenes from which naturally they would recoil."

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIANS AND MONEY.

Dear Sir,—Commenting on the letter of your correspondent, Mr. Bazett, which appeared in your issue of 10th inst., I would make the following observations:—

First, there is a charge against Christians that they prefer "safe" to "beneficial" investments. And I say in reply, "Quite right too." If a man does not provide for his own, he is worse than an infidel; so that I take it the first question is safety. But safety is not the only thing, and I believe all true Christians avoid securities, however "safe," but which are immoral.

On the other hand, every Christian feels the responsibility in a greater or less degree, according to his means, to beneficence, but then the moment this principle comes into play investment pure and simple is no longer in question. It is well to distinguish between things that differ.

Again, Mr. Bazett says that "Interest or usury is simply a tax on the industry of the worker to enable those who do not work to eat." I would ask Mr. Bazett, who would be at the trouble to accumulate capital if no interest was to be got from it, and if capital were not accumulated, what would become of the workers—or, rather, how could they ever come into existence?

Without capital Britain could no more support her present population than—the moon. Does Mr. Bazett propose that we should go back to the time when a few painted savages roamed over these islands? His panegyric on Joseph as a philanthropist will not stand examination. What would we think of a relief administrator in India that sold relief corn, first for all the people's money, then for their cattle, and then for their lands? This is what Joseph did.

Mr. Bazett next goes on to say that whereas Joseph saved corn, we save money. This would lead one to suppose that we heap up immense treasures of money, as Joseph did corn. The thing is simply absurd; all the money in our country is a mere drop in the bucket. Our savings are invested in railways, lands, houses, ships, mines, etc., etc., in this and other countries. Money may be regarded as having much the same relation to property that oil has to machinery, and has a like insignificant bulk and value in comparison to property.

The statement that money is "simply an instrument wherewith we may compel our working people to make what we wish, and for us, at the rate of remuneration we think proper," is simply untrue. Let Mr. Bazett start any kind of manufacture, and try to get workers on such terms, and he will soon find out his mistake. Thousands of employers at present believe that wages are too high (many industries having been carried on for some years without any profit), but rather than reduce wages, with its attendant risks, they suffer what is neither more nor less than injustice.

After all, however, Mr. Bazett's great quarrel is with money. Might I ask what he would propose in its place? Many enterprises, such as sinking a coal pit, have to be carried on for a long period with a large outlay on work, etc., before there is any return. Without money, how could these things be done? Should vast quantities of corn, clothes, etc., be stored up to keep the workers going? Would this be an improvement on "money"? Mr. Bazett's letter is chimerical from first to last.

I am, yours truly, W. G.

Sir,—I am glad to see that this question is again engaging your attention. Some time ago it came to the surface under the heading of "Investments," but was soon dropped. I then ventured in a letter to assert that the 600 millions lying in the hands of the bankers was doing no good to Commerce. A banker replied that I knew nothing about what I was writing, but this reply appeared so injudicious if followed up that I allowed it to pass unanswered. The same objection then raised holds good as to the enormous amount now deposited with the Savings Bank, though, of course, it is considerably better there than being squandered in the drink shops. There is no doubt that legitimate trading is being crippled by the locking up of the spare cash above referred to, and if a portion only was released it would probably benefit the trading community and our manufacturers generally. I do not understand that serious objection is made to putting money out at interest or employing it for the benefit of the owner, but surely our Lord endorses the practice somewhat by the parable of the ten talents, etc. If our working population and others would spend a portion of their savings now lying at the savings banks upon necessary improvements to their dwellings, furniture, etc., it would secure greater comfort for their families, and would have a large and speedy influence upon the trade of the country and soon extend to other lands.—Yours very truly.

A Broker.

[We cannot prolong the economic argument of this correspondence. The position on either side has been sufficiently stated. It does not properly come within our scope. The vital question is, What did our Lord mean us to understand? and how is his teaching interpreted in the Epistles?—Ed.]

SUNDAY-SCHOOL WORK.

Dear Sir,—I should be very sorry if the opinion expressed by "A Young Sunday-school Teacher," and quoted in your leaderette of 17th without any qualification, should be taken by your readers as expressing your own view. Because a young teacher, who of necessity must have had a short experience, meets with a rebuff from a class of boys, is not sufficient basis for the inference that Sunday-schools, either in the South of England or elsewhere, are a failure. It may mean that on that particular occasion that teacher failed in her endeavours, but it does not follow that even she has always failed. And, in fact, her own sense of failure may not be a correct indication of facts.

Some time since, a young man, who was a stranger to me, accosted me, and asked if I remembered giving a lesson to a certain class of lads. I did remember very well, because my conviction at the time was that I had utterly failed. "That lesson led to my decision," said my friend; and I thanked God that my weakness had been used to his glory. I shall be glad if this instance, not by any means a singular one, should help the young teacher to persevere. She is now only sowing the seed, and if sowing in faith she will one day reap the fruit.

I have spent about forty years in Sunday-school work, and can, therefore, speak with some experience at my back when I say that Sunday-schools in the South of England are not a failure. I readily acknowledge that we do not see so much success as we could wish, but then I hear the same complaint from the Churches and Missions, home and foreign. Experience, however, teaches me that the fruit of Sunday-school teaching is much greater than appears to the workers. The infant-class teacher possibly sees no present result of her labours, but she is laying the foundation principles of many a noble life, and if another reap the fruit she may be sure that the sower will not be forgotten by the Great Husbandman. I hope our young friend will not despair in the morning of the day, but seek new grace and more wisdom to overcome obstacles, and when the evening comes she will hear the "Well done!" and feel abundantly satisfied.—Yours truly,

C. W.

NORTHAMPTON.—The seats of the largest hall in Northampton were not only occupied, but some six or seven hundred people were content to have standing room on Sunday night, when Mr. J. B. Wookey gave an address. The singing of "Calvary" by Mrs. Wookey was very effective. Mr. Wookey's subject was "The Message of the Gospel versus a Creed of Despair," and the address was listened to with much attention. It is hoped that not a few worldlings were pricked to the heart by the evangelist's earnest words.

THE BERLIN CHRISTIAN MISSION was begun five years ago. The director, Mr. Fritz Schaaff, says, in the report for last year:—"We have been enabled to extend the work, not by opening new halls, but by consolidating the agencies which we had. To our mission work has been added a Sunday School, and weekly gathering of factory girls under the charge of Fräulein Julia Schaaff. The Sunday School is a very hopeful adjunct; we began with five children, and it now has a regular attendance of from eighty to one hundred children. At the meeting of factory girls the Bible is read and explained, and time is spent in knitting and sowing. The girls are of a rough type, but some of them have already changed their habits of life and speech." The evangelistic work has proceeded with blessing; the outside co-operation, however, was so slender that the year closed with a deficit of £30. Communications to Mr. Schaaff should be addressed 32, Garten Strasse, Berlin, N.

HOME OF INDUSTRY WORKERS.

THE first Workers' Meeting of the year was largely attended; and the friends were delighted to find Miss Macpherson in the midst of her little protegés—a band of from sixty to seventy rescued children, gathered in from divers circumstances of poverty, loneliness, and danger, and now in training for the home beyond the sea.

Some little account was given of the New Year's Thanksgivings, with the treats to the children in the Hackney Home, the aged widows and mothers, the policemen and other special classes, the Sunday scholars, the night school, the lodging-house poor, and the factory girls; also the Girls' Christian Band, which has now 300 members, bearing in workshops and their homes testimony to Christ. A paper issued by Miss Macpherson, describing some of these gatherings, says as to the aged women:—"How they look forward to these real happy days! The Master's presence was in our midst. Our guests were two hundred, and half of these were widows, and several nearly blind, but best of all most of them were sisters in Christ Jesus, and had gathered with us every Sunday afternoon to search the Scriptures, and therein had seen that eternal life which had comforted them in trials, and many of them in deep poverty, leading them to become patterns to their teachers, of patient love."

Rev. F. B. MEYER, who gave the address at the Workers' Meeting, read Isa. xlix. 1-4, and spoke of the qualifications for Christian work, of the gift for service, and the co-operation of the Holy Spirit with us. As to the qualifications he showed, from verse 2, that we must be as "sharp swords," our words incisive, piercing to the hearts the King's enemies. Smooth platitudes are little likely to convict men of sin. Next comes separation or seclusion; we must be hidden "in the shadow of his hand...in his quiver." Only those who are thus hidden are likely to be used in service. Moreover, we must be polished—rust sadly interferes with execution and efficiency. This polish often requires the use of sand paper—i.e., friction, constant though trifling, trials—which God uses to polish us. Then comes the power behind the weapon. As the arrow without the force and will of the archer is but a useless and harmless piece of wood, so the worker without the impulse of the Spirit of God will achieve nothing. Lastly, there is the co-operation of the Holy Spirit; as there is in nature between the husbandman (sowing the seed), and God (giving the harvest), so in grace—we work, but it is God who worketh in us.

After a season of prayer, Mr. E. H. Glenny gave some details of the work of the North Africa Mission, and of his recent visit to Tunis, Tripoli, and Egypt. Notwithstanding the many obstacles encountered in these Moslem lands, there are tokens that God is blessing the setting forth of the simple Gospel.

IRISH CHURCH MISSIONS.

WEDNESDAY, January 16, was observed by the friends of this Mission as a day of thanksgiving and prayer for Ireland. Meetings were held in London and Dublin, and in several provincial centres.

A very earnest spirit of prayer was manifest at the central meeting held at the Christian Police Association Rooms, Adam-street, Strand. General Haig sketched the progress of the work during the past year, and drew attention to the wonderful increase in the sales of copies or portions of God's Word. Two hundred fairs and markets had been visited by the itinerant evangelists of the Society. A map of Ireland was shown, on which the places visited were marked, giving at a glance a vivid impression of the wide extent of the work. It was also mentioned that the funds, though much below what is required were in advance of that received at the same date last year.

A very appropriate address was given by Canon McCormick, of St. Augustine's, Highbury, who took as his subject the contrast between Saul of Tarsus and Paul the Apostle.

PASTOR CHINIQUY is recovering from a somewhat lengthened illness; he is now in his eighty-sixth year. He sends to us an urgent plea for help in distributing his writings in French among Canadian Roman Catholics. He is not able, at his advanced age, to visit many places, and he is desirous of helping his fellow-countrymen towards the light of the Gospel by his writings. His address is 65, Hutchison-street, Montreal.

The Book World.

THE EPISTLE TO THE EPHESIANS.

Principal Handley Moule made a valuable contribution to the interpretation and application of the Epistle to the Ephesians when he wrote his volume on that portion of the New Testament for the "Cambridge Bible for Schools and Colleges." Now he has provided a very thoughtful and suggestive work with the title GRACE AND GODLINESS: Studies in the Epistle to the Ephesians. (Seeley & Co.) The eight chapters present, in a carefully revised form, an expository course delivered last year to a gathering of clergymen in the Divinity School at Cambridge. The careful student of Holy Scripture will find the pages full of light and truth; and if he can appreciate the free reference to the original Greek and ancient and modern writers in theology and history, he will derive still greater profit. This unpretentious little volume impresses us with the heights and depths of St. Paul's "Celestial Epistle." Those who conscientiously employ it, will have cause to thank Mr. Moule for his pages, which are at once learned and lucid, and show spiritual insight as well as critical acumen.

Messrs. Cassell & Co. have published a shilling PEOPLE'S LIFE OF MR. W. E. GLADSTONE. It forms a vivid bird's-eye view of British politics during the past half century.

THE PULPIT: A magazine of sermons, is a new publication. The first issue, dated January, contains eleven discourses by English and American preachers. (1s. monthly. Digby, Long, & Co.)

OUR MISSIONS is a monthly magazine on the work of the Friends in Madagascar, India, Syria, China, Turkey, Bulgaria, Natal, and France. It is published in the middle of the month by West, Newman & Co., 54, Hatton Garden. 1d.

The LIFE OF FELLOWSHIP, by Rev. E. W. Moore (1s. Marshall Bros.) is a valuable addition to the "Keswick Series." Mr. Moore states the doctrinal aspects of the Christian life very clearly, and enforces them with a great wealth of telling illustration.

The yearly volume of OUR OWN MAGAZINE (Children's Special Service Mission) makes an admirable repertory of Gospel instruction, mainly presented in the garb of well-told narratives. We are glad to know that this interesting monthly has a circulation of well over a hundred thousand copies.

THE MISSIONS OF THE WORLD.—In the January issue of this monthly, Mr. R. Young continues his description of Lovedale, South Africa. Dr. Bruce writes on Bible work in Bible lands, and Rev. T. W. Drury begins a series of articles on "Missionary Work and Spheres." (3d. Charles Hornsby, 12, St. Bride-street, E.C.)

POPULAR NATURAL HISTORY FOR BOYS AND GIRLS. By W. J. Gordon. (Religious Tract Society.) We have here a marvellously comprehensive and lucid description in brief of the five leading divisions of the animal world—mammals, birds, reptiles, amphibians, and fishes. The work is thoroughly popular in style and simple in treatment, with a glossary of the scientific nomenclature. It is altogether a fascinating excursion into some of the marvels of creation.

CHRISTIAN BAPTISM; or, "How Readest Thou?" An Appeal to the Word of God. By Frank H. White. This is the second edition (tenth thousand) of a little work which is at once rich in scholastic opinion, earnest in statement, and charitable in tone. Pastor White gives no quarter to such as, in baptismal doctrine or practice, ignore Scripture teaching that they may follow ecclesiastical usage or tradition. Though essentially controversial, the pages are gracious throughout. (1s. Partridge.)

MRS. BOOTH'S LAST DAYS. (101, Queen Victoria-street, E.C.) Mr. Bramwell Booth, the compiler of this pamphlet, explains in a preface that it was prepared and printed soon after Mrs. Booth's death, but the publication was deferred till after the fuller biography by Mr. Tucker. Those who had the privilege of Mrs. Booth's acquaintance will be glad, through these stirring pages, to revisit her dying couch, and to catch some of the inspiration flowing from the record of her triumphant translation into the world unseen.

OOWIKAPUN, by Rev. E. R. Young. (2s. 6d. C. H. Kelly, 2, Castle-street.) Under this outlandish looking title the eloquent author tells the story of "how the Gospel reached the Nelson River Indians." The title freely translated means, "One who is longing for the light," and the great motif of the tale is that man has small chance merely from the study of nature and its phenomena of being led up to nature's God. Only the revelation of God in the person and work of Christ can pacify the sin-stricken spirit. Mr. Young gives many graphic glimpses into the free and daring life of the American Indian.

LIFE AND LETTERS OF LEWIS MORRISON-GRANT. Edited by Jessie Annie Anderson. (Alexander Gardner, Paisley.) These memoirs of a brief life, marked by great mental gifts and greater promise, may be somewhat over-elaborated, but they are worth handing on to posterity. The subject of them was a Banffshire youth, who died before he was twenty-one. The ardent soul outgrew the frail tenement. There were many hints in his writings, prose, and poetry that if life and strength had been given he might have been a second Carlyle, without the cynicism of that great master of the pen. This biography is very stimulating reading for earnest-minded young men.

CHRONICLES OF UGANDA. By Rev. R. P. Ashe. (6s. Hodder & Stoughton.) This work is a necessary complement to the larger and more elaborate work recently published by Capt. Lugard. The standpoint of Mr. Ashe is, of course, very different from that of the quasi-military administrator, but the two views make the picture complete. Mr. Ashe strives, and successfully, we think, to be scrupulously fair in his estimate of others; he certainly gives us a fascinatingly-framed photograph of Uganda in the most critical period of its modern history—one in which he himself played no unworthy part. All students of the African awakening ought to give this admirable work an honoured place in their library.

REST AND REAPING: A monthly Record of Christian Work and Workers in the Home and Foreign Mission Fields, with notes on Prophetic and other Scriptures. Also articles on domestic, social, and national subjects. Edited by Charlotte Mason, of the Home of Rest for Christian Workers and the Aged Workers' Home. Volume for 1894. (2s. Morgan & Scott.) The title-page of this volume tersely and correctly describes its varied contents. The serial contributions are specially valuable, including "Old and New Japan" (Part II.): "The Sword of the Spirit," by M. J. Oxlad; and "The Charter of Blessing," by E. M. Hawkes. The editor expounds the Book of Revelation, and Mr. W. Luff presents poetical "Leaves from the Rose of Sharon."

A penny booklet, by Rev. C. E. Stuart Cox, of Margate, bears the striking title THE WOMAN WHO PRAYED FOR A SHEET. (Lomax, Lichfield).

C. H. Kelly has issued a bright and instructive booklet, by Rev. W. T. A. Barber, entitled THE LAND OF THE MORNING CALM: A Talk with English Boys and Girls about Corea.

A BULWARK OF TRUTH is a booklet by the author of "How do I know that the Bible is true?" It presents the Gospel in its fulness and purity, because in the very words of Scripture. (2d. Nisbet & Co.)

Emily Headland has added to her "Brief Sketches of C.M.S. Workers" an account of Rev. Charles Benjamin Leupolt, who laboured in connection with the Society from 1832 to 1874. A good portrait is prefixed. (2d. Nisbet & Co.)

THE PRESENT SIGNS OF THE TIMES is the title of a special sermon, by Rev. Robert Middleton, vicar of St. Martin-at-Oak, Norwich. It has reached its twenty-first thousand, and is likely to have many more readers. (1d. Jarrold & Sons.)

Four more of the "Penny Stories for the People" series (Religious Tract Society) are: THE WRECKER'S SECRET and THE FORTY ACRES, both by MRS. PROSSER; STEPHEN GRATTAN'S FAITH, a Canadian story, by the author of "Christie Redfern's Troubles"; and JACK WESTON'S HOMECOMING; or Uplifting the Banner, by Emma S. Pratt.

The useful character of the latest "Present Day Tract" may be judged from its title: BIBLE REVELATION: The Unity, Continuity, and Systematic Completeness of the Scriptures, a proof of their Divine Origin. When it is stated that this essay is from the pen of Professor Redford, enough has been said to satisfy reverent students as to the soundness and thoroughness of the work. (4d. Religious Tract Society.)

DISTRESS IN MONMOUTHSHIRE.

THE state of trade in the Monmouthshire valleys is still very bad, and, indeed, some believe it is getting worse and worse. The iron and tin works at Pontymoile, Pontypool, Osborne, and Pontnewydd are still idle, while the Glyn Collieries are entirely closed, and several others are partly suspended. Consequently, the people are simply starving. In this deplorable state of things, Mr. Wintle, of the Pontymoile Christian Mission, feels compelled to use every effort. He writes:—"We are doing all we can by giving daily meals to the children at Pontymoile, Pontypool, and Cwmffrwdoer, but not as much amongst these as we might if we had funds. I am longing to be able to increase the number of children meals to 1000 per day. Also to be able to give at least occasional meals to the mothers and fathers. I am almost ashamed to plead the cause of these starving children again, the readers of THE CHRISTIAN have responded so magnificently in times past; but the urgency of the case compels me to ask the Lord's people to come up to our help against this mighty wave of depression, so that we might in a small measure lessen this awful bitter cry in these valleys."

THOS. M. WINTLE.

THE Y.M.C.A.

CENTRAL ASSOCIATION.

The Exeter Hall branch has begun a work amongst the Corps of Commissionaires in London. A reception was given on Thursday last by Mr. John White, and a Bible class for the men is in process of formation. The last two Saturday-night meetings have been very interesting. On the 12th inst. Mr. William Noble gave personal recollections of John B. Gough, and on the 19th a crowd of men gathered to witness a gymnastic display in the large hall. Mr. Eugene Stock, of the C.M.S., took the Sunday-night meeting for men on the 13th; last Sunday the meeting was taken by the secretary, Mr. J. H. Putterill. At Aldersgate-street on Thursday evening Mr. Alfred T. Williams, representing Sir George, welcomed over 600 young men at a New Year's social reception. The occasion was remarkably successful, and a stirring address was delivered by Rev. W. R. Mowll, M.A. A male choir has been formed at Exeter Hall for the practice of sacred music, and its performance at the various public and other meetings connected with the Association. The co-operation of Christian young men with some knowledge of music is much desired.

The annual prize distribution in connection with the educational classes and athletic clubs of the City centre was held on Monday evening, at Aldersgate-street. Sheriff Hand presided, in the absence of the Lord Mayor, and the prizes were given away by the Lady Mayoress. Mr. R. Burn, in giving an account of the position of the Association, which is the oldest of its kind, pointed out that notwithstanding the competition in the matter of education classes in London last year, there was an entry of 3000 to the Aldersgate classes. These were kept up to date, and included modern languages, commercial law, shorthand, science, and typewriting. At the Exeter Hall branch they had been very successful with the Civil Service classes, having passed altogether over one thousand students into the Service. There was a social side and a physical side to the scheme of education carried on at Aldersgate-street, which were highly appreciated by the young men who availed themselves of the genial hospitality offered them. The Sheriff addressed the young men in plain language, which went straight to the point of his subject, and was much applauded by his hearers.

"RADLEY'S" MEETING.

The annual "Radley" meeting, which takes its name from the old hotel in Blackfriars where many of the original gatherings of the Association were held, took place at Exeter Hall on Wednesday week. In the absence of the president, Mr. Howard Williams took the chair. Everybody was rejoiced to hear that Sir George's health is being satisfactorily restored by his sojourn in the South of France. The proceedings took the form of an open discussion upon London work, and many practical and important suggestions were made for its improvement at the commencement of the new cycle of fifty years upon which the Association has just entered. A paper was read by Mr. F. W. Lawrence, who recognised the great work that had already been done by the Metropolitan Associations, but brought forward many points in regard to which he thought development might be made, in the direction of getting into closer touch with the vast numbers of young men in London at present unreached by any religious agency. "One thing above all others," he urged, "never, under any circumstances of inducement to extend your area of work or your numbers, never be beguiled into lowering your spiritual standard; never lower the banner of Christ. A quickened and energetic organisation must spring from quickened spiritual life; you cannot galvanise it into action. Retain, if you will, every kind of usefulness; meet every aspect of the life of young men when you can really help and benefit them thereby. But the Y.M.C.A. must stand or fall by its spiritual work." Professor Gladstone, Mr. John Balfour (St. John's Wood), Mr. M. H. Hodder, Mr. John Hayward, Mr. W. H. Mills, and many others took part.

BRIEF NOTES.

The report of the Watford Association shows steady useful work during the past year.

Mr. W. M. Oatts, of Glasgow, visited Leeds, and spoke on Sunday and Monday in Shaftesbury Hall.

The Tunbridge Wells Association has started a bright little magazine of its own. The general work is well reported upon.

The Faversham Association, in which the work has been at a low ebb, has taken a good step forward, with the most promising results.

The Gawler Y.M.C.A. (N.S.W.) held its anniversary meeting at the end of October, and the proceedings were marked by much enthusiasm.

At the quarterly meeting of the Sunderland Association it was reported that the attendances at the Sunday afternoon Bible class had totalled 1193, giving an average of ninety-two.

The Leeds Association reports most encouraging progress. Recently the anniversary of the Sunday afternoon Bible class was held, the average attendance being reported as 133.

The work of the Rochester Association has been much revived. During the past week a series of special meetings has taken place, in which the clergy and ministers of the town have heartily co-operated.

The annual meeting of the Hertford Association was held on Monday evening, 14th inst., the Mayor occupying the chair. An excellent report was presented by the honorary secretary, Mr. J. D. Hardie.

Miss M. Jennie Street gave a course of three lectures on "Palestine," illustrated, in the Town Hall, Trowbridge, last week, under the auspices of the Y.M.C.A., and taking the very unfavourable weather into consideration, the meetings were a success.

A family gathering of members and their friends was held in connection with the Bury Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday evening, January 15. There was a good attendance. During the evening prizes were given to those who had attended regularly the Sunday afternoon Bible class. Mr. A. Kindall presided.

The quarterly conference of the Associations in the Liverpool and North Wales District Union took place at St. Helen's on Thursday, 17th inst., and passed off very successfully. A practical and useful discussion followed an address, "Lessons from the Past Fifty Years," by Mr. W. H. Mills, secretary of the National Council. A public meeting was held in the evening, under the presidency of Col. W. W. Pilkington, the speakers including Rev. T. J. Madden, Mr. Mills, and Rev. W. Holroyd.

At the annual meeting of members and associates of the Croydon Y.M.C.A. a large number assembled to tea. Later there followed a reception of new members by the chairman, twenty-five new members and ten associates having joined since the last quarterly meeting. After the presentation of the report by the general secretary (Mr. W. N. Morris), the Chairman gave a short address, stating, in conclusion, that the next meeting of that character would be held in the new building.

THE Y.W.C.A.

Considerable prosperity has attended the Fulham branch meeting at 25, Barclay-road. Miss Dutton has been appointed assistant to Mrs. A. Dell.

The Quarterly Missionary Reunion, held last week at the Y.W.C.A. Institute, Donegal-square, Belfast, was a pleasant gathering, and the record of last year's work was most encouraging.

The Crouch End Branch is making considerable progress. A number of new members have been enrolled, and larger premises are about to be opened to accommodate the growing work.

The third annual International Y.W.C.A. Conference, held at Neuchatel, was attended by 300 representatives from eleven different countries. Work at railway stations, homes in foreign countries, employment bureaux, work in prisons and asylums were among the subjects discussed.

The annual report of the institute at 10, Merton-road, Wandsworth, tells of much good work carried on during the past year under Miss Rainsford and Miss Seaman. Thirty to forty girls gather at the Sunday Bible-class. A working party has knitted articles of warm clothing for the deep sea fishermen, and help has been given to the London Missionary Society. A junior Bible-class is well attended.

In the Evangel for December, issued in Chicago, Rev. Wayland Hoyt, D.D., remarks :—"It is impossible to commend too highly the work of the Young Women's Christian Associations. If young men need the help, brighter surroundings, pleasant places to gather in, ennobling friendships, gymnasia for healthful recreation, opportunities for mental and spiritual culture, which their associations furnish for them; fathomlessly more, I think, young and friendless and toiling women need these things in the greater cities."

A circular issued by Miss Orlebar, in connection with the Y.W.C.A. Home, 31, Free School-street, Calcutta, states :—"Our evenings are to be full of various improvement classes, Bible study, singing, shorthand, book-keeping, dressmaking, musical drill, etc.; and from time to time there are to be bright Gospel and missionary meetings. We have a good tennis ground, and a very pleasant sitting-room where those who wish to rest and to meet with their friends can do so." A book-stall and registry office are in contemplation, also a "Travellers' Aid," so that "any girl coming to Calcutta can be met and cared for until such time as she continues her journey."

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

The Endeavourers at Romney-street, Westminster, have held their annual gathering, when cheering progress was reported.

The C.E. Society of New-street Church, Burton-on-Trent, is making rapid progress and doing good work. At a recent meeting most interesting reports were rendered.

A Christian Endeavour demonstration was held in Doncaster last week. The afternoon meeting was held in the Baptist Chapel, the evening meeting in the Spring Gardens Primitive Methodist chapel. Amongst the speakers were Rev. T. Storr, whose address was based on the motto, "For Christ and the Church," and Mr. E. B. Storr, of Castleford.

At Bond-street Congregational Church, N uneaton, on Sunday week, the pastor, Rev. J. S. Grant, supplied himself with a packet of coloured slips of writing paper, writing a Scripture reference on each slip. The slips were then taken home by the Christian Endeavourers, who found the verse, wrote it out on the slip, committed it to memory, and brought the slip to the next meeting. Each Endeavourer stood up and recited or read the verse on the slip, which was handed to a person who proceeded to form the slips into a chain, which was afterwards sent to a London hospital to gladden the eyes of patients.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Free Church Assembly Hall in Edinburgh has been placed at the disposal of the members of the Primitive Methodist Connection, who will next summer meet for the first time in the Modern Athens.

In Gilcomston Park Baptist Church, Aberdeen last week a mission was carried on by Mr. Macfarlane, evangelist, who has been most successful in the coast towns lately. There have been large audiences.

Lord Overtoun entertained sixty young people engaged in the theatres to tea in the Christian Institute on Friday, and gave a winning and earnest address to them on "Jesus Christ, the Guide." Miss Anderson sang several solos, and short addresses and conversation filled up the two hours of intercourse.

The many friends of the Livingstonia Mission will have read with deep interest and solicitude of the attack by lions on Dr. Laws' camp during a recent tour of investigation in company with Dr. Elmslie. One lion sprang on the tent in which the two missionaries were asleep, but was driven off by the attendants.

Widespread sympathy has been felt for the widow and children of Mr. Gibson, stationmaster of the Central Station, Glasgow, who met his death while in the discharge of his duty during the dense fog of the 9th inst. He seems to have slipped and fallen before a carriage in motion, as he was trying to direct shunting operations.

A large and representative gathering was recently held in Dundee to consider the question of licensing reform, with special reference to the Bishop of Chester's scheme. A motion was adopted affirming the necessity of further legislative measures for the promotion of sobriety, and the desirableness of the Legislature granting to communities fuller powers than they at present possess for dealing with the liquor traffic.

Much distress has been occasioned by the recent severe gales, and the loss of life on our coasts has darkened many homes. The ladies' auxiliary of the Seamen's Friend Society in Glasgow visits and assists sailors' widows and orphans, and has been the succourer of many in times of bereavement. The widows visited by the ladies were gathered together in the Seamen's Chapel on Monday, 14th inst., to a substantial tea, and in the course of the evening gifts of packets of tea, etc., were distributed from a "Christian steamship," which occupied the rear of the platform.

Prof. J. G. McKendrick presided over the annual meeting of the Glasgow Young Women's Christian Association on Jan. 17. The City Hall was filled with an audience of 1800 young women from all parts of the city. The chairman emphasised the Christian basis of the Association, and commended the principles of the Word of God as the only solution of social perplexities and evils. The secretary's report showed a membership of 2830, an increase of 270 from last year. There are two Institutes; both are free of debt. Miss Reynolds, international secretary, delivered an interesting address, pointing out the progress of organised work for young women throughout the world. She starts immediately upon a journey to Continental countries, thence proceeding to Cape Town and the Australian colonies. Dr. Elder Cumming, Rev. T. Morcom Taylor, and Mr. Alex. Sloan also took part in the meeting, which was throughout interesting and helpful.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Rev. R. Balgarnie commences an eight days' mission at Sutton, Surrey, on the 26th inst.

Mr. William Nobbs is having grand meetings at the Great Assembly Hall, Mile-end, E. On Sunday evening about 5000 people were present, and the Word was with much power—many professing faith in Christ.

Mrs. Sydney Watson has conducted an eight days' mission at the Congregational Chapel, Overton. A correspondent writes: "We have much to praise the Lord for; souls have been quickened and sinners converted."

Lancaster.—Mr. S. A. M'Cracken has conducted a mission here, which was a time of blessing to Christians and unsaved. The evangelist is invited to return at an early date for a mission on an extensive scale.

Mr. Richard Weaver is once more in the South, holding services at Mr. John Wilson's Chapel, Woolwich, which on Sunday was densely crowded. Mr. Weaver and his two sons are expected to speak to-day and to-morrow (Thursday and Friday) at the noon prayer-meeting, 186, Aldersgate-street.

Mr. Walter Notman, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fortnight's mission in connection with St. Philip's Church, Cambridge (Rev. T. W. Thomas, vicar). The work was one of growth both as regards numbers and interest, and evidence of the Holy Spirit's power was not lacking.

Ireland.—Gospel services have been held in Ballymote Methodist Church, by Rev. Hugh McKeag, of Sligo. Similar services have been held in Garvagh Presbyterian Church by Mr. John Anderson, and by an arrangement of the Presbytery in most of the Presbyterian churches of Belfast this week.

Aspley Guise.—A fortnight's mission was closed here on Sunday, January 20, conducted by Mr. J. G. Stanger, of the Evangelisation Society. The interest of the mission increased from its commencement to its close. At the last Sunday evening's service every available space in the mission room was packed.

Evangelistic Mission.—The services conducted by Mr. J. J. Sims at Kilburn are deepening in interest. Last Sunday evening Mr. Sims spoke on "Heaven" to a large audience. The larger part of the audience remained to the after-meeting and a number confessed Christ. Many Christians also testified to definite blessing received. C. R. H.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has recently conducted children's meetings at Portland, Maine. Deep impressions were made by the earnest appeals of the evangelist, and many young lives were influenced for good. On the first Sabbath of the year Mr. Hammond began a course of Gospel services at Chatham, Ont. There was every prospect of a stirring time.

St. Albans.—Services in connection with the Children's Special Service Mission, conducted by Rev. Martin Hall and others, have been held in the Town Hall. Many children professed decision for Christ, and Christians were quickened. Evangelistic services for the people were held each evening, and on two Sunday nights for men only, with blessing.

Stephen-the-Yeoman Mission, Bermondsey.—Mr. John Evans, of the Evangelisation Society, concluded here a most encouraging fifteen days' mission on Jan. 13. The number who came to hear him proclaim the Gospel increased each evening, and closed with the hall well filled. Good work was done, and the workers look forward very hopefully to the year's work lying before them.

Faversham.—Prayer for a blessing on the mission by Messrs. P. R. Hurditch and F. Hutchins has been answered, and God has blessed his own Word to the salvation of many. A striking feature of the mission was the number of backsliders who were restored. The closing service of the mission was a time of real soul-searching. Many were convicted of sin, and confessed Christ for the first time. T. B.

Debenham, Suffolk.—An eight days' mission has been closed in this place. The vicar kindly placed the National School at the service of the missioner, Mr. John Johnson, of the Evangelisation Society, and, in spite of many adverse circumstances, very successful meetings were held. Some have confessed Christ, and Christians have been quickened to newness of life. Debenham has a population of 1200 people, with eleven public-houses. A band of helpers from the Mission Hall at Pettaugh, about three miles distant, gave valuable help to the missioner.

Hereford.—A fortnight's special Gospel meetings have been held here by Walter Cox, of Clapton, assisted by a few members of the adult school and Y.P.S.C.E. The meetings have been well attended, many testimonies have been given of help received and prayers answered, and at the last meeting, on First-day, the 13th, precious souls were brought to a knowledge of the Saviour, and backsliders turned their steps again in the way of life. In a praise-meeting afterwards, most of these publicly declared their faith in the Lord Jesus. Several pledges were taken, and altogether it has been a real time of refreshing.

PERSONALIA.

Pastor Karl Mascher, of Dresden, was married on Thursday last, in Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, to Pastor Fuller Gooch's second daughter, Rachel.

Dr. Bergin, whose arrival in China, to undertake medical mission work, we reported last week, is accompanied by his sister (not Mrs. Bergin, as was erroneously stated).

Rev. Timothy and Mrs. Richard, the devoted Baptist missionaries, whose names are well known throughout China in connection with an effort to supply the mandarin class with Christian literature, are now on their way home for a much-needed furlough.

Rev. Joseph Angus, D.D., who so long and closely was associated with Regent's Park College, the principalship of which he resigned but recently, entered on Wednesday week on his ninetieth year. All who value his devoted service will pray that his later years may be rich in blessing.

Pastor Archibald G. Brown writes to us:—"Please contradict the statement that appeared in your paper that I am leaving England for the Antipodes with my wife and family. There is no foundation for it, and it is causing me considerable trouble. My wife is so ill that she could not be moved from where she is staying on the South Coast, far less take a long voyage."

Rev. John Tuckwell, who some time ago was prostrated by a severe attack of influenza and bronchial pneumonia, has felt the need, after fourteen years' labour at Wesbourne-grove, of a prolonged rest. Hence he has offered his resignation, but the church has declined to accept it, and agreed to grant him six months' leave of absence. Mr. Tuckwell is preparing for a voyage to Australia, and purposes sailing in the course of a few weeks.

"THE HERALD OF MERCY."

FOR thirty-eight years this Gospel messenger (½d. Morgan & Scott), originated and long conducted by the late Duncan Matheson, has been found by Christian workers to supply a felt need in their work—the Gospel presented in a simple, forcible, and yet attractive manner.

The Sabbath-school teacher who wishes to convey the glad tidings of salvation to the homes of his scholars; the district visitor who desires to follow up counsels given verbally; the mission worker seeking to help those under conviction of sin—all find in The Herald of Mercy such reading as they can safely place in the hands of those whose spiritual welfare they have at heart.

The various articles and narratives of which this periodical consists are specially calculated to awaken the indifferent to the claims of the Gospel. The matter is so arranged that, if desired, every number can be cut up into two 4 pp. leaflets, each with two engravings; or into four 2 pp. leaflets, each with an illustration. Thus for the trifling sum of sixpence monthly the Gospel may be introduced in an attractive manner into no less than forty-eight different homes. It is well adapted for localising as a parish and district magazine.

MARYLEBONE PRESBYTERIAN CHURCH.

DURING the week of prayer, Dr. Pentecost held meetings every evening with the exception of Saturday, and gave an address on each occasion. The lecture hall was well filled. Referring on the last occasion to the testimonies that had been offered during the week, Dr. Pentecost said one of the strongest proofs of the truth of Christianity is the similarity of Christian experience all over the world.

On Sunday mornings the Doctor is giving a course of sermons on the Book of Job. Under his energetic pastorate, the church has become a great centre of activity. Including the Sunday services there are nearly twenty meetings of various kinds held weekly. One of the efforts recently started is a branch of the order of "The King's Daughters." Some of the classes have quite outgrown the accommodation of the rooms underneath the church; the pastor is anxious to enlarge the premises, and still further extend the work he is accomplishing.

MR. WILLIAM G. CARR has been holding meetings at Hoylake during the past week with much interest. The subject has been "The Tabernacle and its Teaching," illustrated by a large chart; the expositions have been greatly blessed in the quickening of believers and salvation of sinners. Mr. Carr goes to Rotherham and Bradford to assist in the Prophetic Conferences, followed by the prayers of many to whom he has been a blessing.—H. D. BRANDRETH.

OBITUARY.

MRS. NEALE.

WE regret to announce the death of Mrs. Neale, wife of the respected pastor of the New Town Mission Church, Norwood. She had been ill for some months, having had treatment at Guy's Hospital. After detention there for some time, her complaint was pronounced incurable, and a month ago she was brought to her residence at Chapel-road, West Norwood, where she died. She bore her very painful illness with Christian fortitude and patience, and much sympathy has been expressed on behalf of her husband. Although Mr. Neale has only been pastor at New Town scarcely a year, the deceased had endeared herself to all who knew her.

REV. HENRY PLATTEN, BIRMINGHAM.

This earnest minister of Christ, who at Maze Pond, London, Derby-road, Nottingham, Graham-street and Hagley-road, Birmingham, did good work for many years, has passed away to be with the Lord. We have more than once made reference to his failing health, which for some time had clouded a prospect which had seemed bright with the promise of usefulness. In 1875 he succeeded Rev. Charles Vince at Graham-street, Birmingham, and on the sale of the chapel there migrated to the beautiful building in Hagley-road, where he ministered for fourteen years, until ill-health compelled his resignation some eighteen months ago. Mr. Platten leaves a widow and a large family.

MR. ARCHIBALD DUFF MACPHERSON.

Many will be grieved to hear of the sudden and unexpected death of this brother, which took place at Hopeman, N.B., on Monday, January 14, after four days' illness. Mr. Macpherson was a well-known fisherman. Converted to God over thirty years ago, he has been a faithful and earnest worker among his fellow toilers of the sea. At Aberdeen, Fraserburgh, Stornoway, and other ports he has often addressed large gatherings of fishermen, preaching with a power and unction which won him the love and respect of very many. The funeral was a most impressive scene. Over a thousand fishermen and others walked in procession to the burial place at Duffus, two miles distant. On the way the young fishermen (many of them recent converts) sang impressive and appropriate hymns.

REV. R. H. LUNDIE, D.D.

This devoted servant of Christ, who fell asleep on Sunday at his residence in Liverpool, was one of the best-known ministers in the Presbyterian Church of England. His illness extended over several months, and he had just returned from a rest, hoping to resume work, when he had a sudden relapse. Dr. Lundie was a son of the manse, both his father and grandfather having been minister of the parish of Kelso, where he was born in 1824. After graduating at Edinburgh University, he was in 1850 ordained minister of St. Andrew's Presbyterian Church, Birkenhead. Here he laboured for sixteen years, when he was transferred to a new charge at Fairfield, Liverpool, where he has since remained. He was twice moderator of the Presbyterian Synod. Having travelled considerably in the United States, Canada, Palestine, and European countries, he was a man of wide knowledge and culture. In 1890 he received the degree of Doctor of Divinity from the Edinburgh University. He was a strong advocate of temperance principles, and was leader of what is known in Liverpool as the purity crusade for the suppression of drink and vice. He was known and loved far and near as a faithful pastor and an eloquent preacher, who set forth the Gospel in its simplicity and power, attracting round him a large and warmly-attached congregation.

The Bishop of Peterborough and Mrs. Creighton have entertained about seventy Great Northern, Great Eastern, London and North-Western, and Midland Railway servants at the Palace.

It is announced that Rev. J. C. Browne, D.D., rector of Thurning, Northamptonshire, has resigned his living owing to the agricultural depression, the income being insufficient to meet the charges on the land from which it is derived.

The senior evangelist of the Church Army, Captain Prior, has just completed a tour of some of the villages in Cornwall, where considerable interest has been aroused by his lantern lectures. He has now been appointed as an assistant in the deputation department in London.

A successful and unique social meeting was held in Holloway Hall last week in connection with the Sunday afternoon service for men at St. Peter's, Upper Holloway. No less than 1200 working-men, with their wives and families, were present. Afterwards addresses were given by the Archdeacon and Mr. Bartley. The vicar and Mr. Ditchfield also briefly spoke.

Rev. Isaac W. Tapper, of St. Andrew's, Battersea, gives in his little magazine a summary of the work of the past year, showing genuine results, notwithstanding the sin and indifference prevailing in the parish. Speaking of the inroads made by popery, Mr. Tapper maintains that it is the duty of every Christian, whether Churchman or Nonconformist, to form a united and holy league against Rome and a pseudo-priesthood.

The annual church meeting at Eccleston-square, S.W., was held last week, when there was a large gathering, and very satisfactory reports were rendered. Revs. Dr. J. Hiles Hitchens and E. Theodore Hitchens as co-pastors during the past year, gave addresses, and nine other gentlemen reported upon the various societies. During 1894, 58 new members joined the church, the Sunday-school had an increase of 53 scholars, and six new societies had been added, viz., mothers' meeting, district visiting society, mission band, boys' choir for week-night services, Railway Porters' Slate Club (with 100 men from Victoria Station), etc. The older existing organisations showed increased activity, and the congregations had increased in size. A farewell meeting was held on Monday night, January 14, at the Baptist Church, Harrogate, in connection with the departure of the pastor (Rev. John G. Raws), for Australia. Rev. T. Vincent Tymms, President of Rawdon College, presided, and spoke of the great loss which Mr. Raws' removal would be to the denomination, as well as to his church, but trusted that the change of climate would result in the complete re-establishment of his health.

At Uxbridge-road Tabernacle, Miss Isa. W. Ramsay, of the China Inland Mission, gave on Sunday addresses on her experiences in Chung Kung. The children and young people of the Sunday-school were greatly delighted by her simple but graphic delineations of the daily life of the children of China; while, in the evening, the chapel was crowded by interested listeners. RELIGIOUS BOOKS FOR BULGARIA.

Dear Sir,—Twelve months ago a long-prayed-for door of opportunity was opened by God for the publication of religious books in Bulgaria. The missionary translators have already sent forth three invaluable volumes for the edification of the young Evangelical churches of that land, viz., "Imago Christi," a "New Hymn and Tune Book," and the first volume of a Commentary on the entire New Testament; copies of these books have arrived at this office. Substantial aid to this work was sent by the Bible Lands Missions Aid Society. The door of opportunity is still held open, and the workers are most anxious to complete the two remaining volumes as soon as possible. The outlay is very considerable, and the venerable Dr. Elias Riggs has sent asking financial help for the rapid completion of this most important undertaking.—Yours faithfully,

W. A. Essery, Hon. Sec.

LONDON CITY MISSION DISABLED MISSIONARIES' WIDOWS & ORPHANS FUND.

This fund was formed to give support to aged and infirm Missionaries who, after a life-long service—enriching the poorest of the poor with the unsearchable riches of Christ—are compelled to cease from their labours. Fifty-six widows whose husbands died in the work—several from disease taken when visiting, and in some instances leaving families—receive grants of from £10 to £20 yearly. In pioneering work in lands little known, in translating the Bible (some forty versions of which in whole or in part have profited by their labours), in the preparation of Christian literature and educational manuals, the Society's representatives have always occupied an honourable place, while their contributions to science have been generously acknowledged by scientific men.

Its Chief FIELDS OF LABOUR are:—China, from twelve chief centres; North India, the Madras Presidency, and Travancore; Madagascar; South Africa; Central Africa; West Indies; Polynesia; and New Guinea.

It has on ITS PRESENT STAFF 258 missionaries, 17 of whom are qualified medical missionaries; 1476 native ordained pastors and evangelists; over 12,000 other native helpers; 94,192 church members; 404,795 native adherents; 1891 schools; 125,984 scholars; 10 hospitals, in which 98,992 patients were treated during 1893.

Never did the Society possess a stronger, abler, or more devoted band of agents than to-day; never had it such openings for work or such promise of success as now. Money is the great need. "The possibilities of going forward are simply limited by the means of going forward."

A Centenary Fund of £100,000 has been opened, £3,000 of which has already been promised. Donations are earnestly solicited, and may be made payable to the Rev. A. N. JOHNSON, M.A., 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

In Witney the inaugural meetings of a newly-formed temperance society have been held.

Mr. George Blaiklock paid a sixth visit to Burnham-on-Crouch last week, and delivered three lectures in the public hall.

Mr. Thomas E. Murphy commenced an aggressive temperance campaign on Sunday, January 13, at the Madison Avenue Presbyterian Church, New York.

The Friends have held a great meeting in connection with the Pledge Signing Crusade, at Devonshire House. Amongst the speakers were Mr. William White, Archdeacon Farrar, Mrs. W. S. Caine, Sir B. W. Richardson, and Mr. R. Rae.

The Commissioners of Police in London have found it necessary to issue an order warning constables against going into public-houses for drink while on duty, and also warning publicans against supplying drink to constables who are on duty.

Mr. James Bolton, of Halifax, who died on Monday week, in his eightieth year, became a teetotaler in 1842, and in 1892 his "jubilee" was celebrated. He was a zealous advocate of temperance in connection with the Halifax and other societies.

In Cardiff the annual festival of the district C.E.T.S. was held in Park Hall, on Monday week, when the chair was taken by Canon Thompson, D.D., and addresses were given by the Dean of Hereford, Archdeacon Howell, and Rev. D. R. Buckley.

The Aston Clinton Temperance Society, in connection with the Chiltern Hills Temperance Federation, has been visited by Mr. George Garlick, Temperance Missioner, who conducted a six days' mission at Aston Clinton and neighbouring villages.

Sir Wm. Harcourt, in acknowledging a resolution from the Welsh Temperance Association, urging upon the Government the necessity of proceeding without delay with the Direct Veto Bill, says:—"You may rely upon my utmost exertions being employed to forward the cause which we both have at heart."

A vigorous effort, in connection with the pledge-signing campaign, is being made in the north. The agents of the Northern League are visiting a large number of the colliery and other villages, and during the past ten days fully one hundred of these meetings have been held. Most successful gatherings have been held, and many pledges are reported.

Archdeacon Farrar, speaking at Devonshire House, said, "We sacrifice in England every year to the drink-demon more children than were offered to Moloch in ages gone by. In London alone at least 1000 babes are suffocated by drunken mothers every year, and as a coroner pointed out the other day, 27 per cent. of this slaughter is on Saturday nights."

The London Young Friends' Temperance Union held, on the 8th inst., a special meeting for the children of the quarterly meeting, at Devonshire House. There was a fair attendance of those home from school and younger ones, to whom John Burgess of the Band of Hope Union, gave an address illustrated by chemical experiments to show the nature and effects of alcohol.

The annual meetings of the Irish Temperance League, held in Belfast last week, were a great success. Mr. Alex. McVicker, Londonderry, was elected president for the ensuing year, and a lengthened discussion took place on the Gothenburg system, conferences were held on the opium question, temperance teaching in day schools, and women's work. Altogether the anniversary was one of the most practical, earnest and successful which the League has ever had.

The Hull Police Temperance Society celebrated their twenty-fourth anniversary on Thursday week, when more than a thousand persons partook of tea, and later on the number was increased. The Mayor presided, and Sergeant Booth read the annual report, which stated that the Society was made up of three superintendents. one inspector, eleven sergeants, and seventy constables—a total of eighty-five. Sergeant Booth also read the tenth report of the society's Temperance Home, in which it was stated they had been able to assist during the year seventy-nine persons, viz., forty-three females and thirty-six males, The Mayor said that if it was not for intemperance there would be little work for the magistrates to do.

The French National Temperance League have a most doleful report to make on the spread of inebriety in France; and, as usual, this unfortunate country of ours is charged with being the mainspring of the increase of French tipsiness. It is stated that Paris is now over-run by English bars, in which, contrary to the usual practice in French cabarets, comfortable seats and tables are provided for customers. At these reprehensible bars absinthe is sold for two sous, or a penny a glass, and a cup of coffee with a glass of brandy may be obtained for three-halfpence. The French Temperance Society say that the consumption of quack medicines of the chloral type is doing quite as much harm as alcohol has done. It is especially among the women that these nauseous nostrums are working evil.—Leeds Mercury.

National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children.

Patron - The Queen.

THE sole object of the Society is to secure to every child in the land that its life shall be at least endurable.

The following is the record of the numbers of the children on whose behalf it has enforced its object:—

31,374 Sufferers from violence—from boots crockery, pans, shovels, straps, rope-thongs, pokers, fire, boiling water, any weapon which came to the reckless and vengeful hands which owned them.

82,973 Sufferers from neglect and starvation—miserable with living irritations and filth, shivering, ragged, nigh-naked, pale, limp, feeble, faint, dizzy, puny sinking, famine-stricken, dying—many carried in the arms of nurses of infirmary and hospital.

877 Where ill-treatment ended fatally. The Society obtained its information too late to make their wicked parents cease from troubling, and its sole and miserable success was in punishment.

15,241 Little things exposed to suffering to draw the lazy and cruel charity of the street to those who were responsible for their pallor, emaciation, and cough, mostly, too, in arms—but of idle drunkards and vagrants.

4,864 Pitiable girl-child victims of monsters, devoted to horrible sensuality.

4,661 Little slaves of improper and hurtful employment and dangerous performances, and child monstrosities in travelling shows, acrobats at fairs, trapeze and tight-rope performers in circuses, toilers with burdens too heavy, and sufferers by various other wrongs.

The Society is comparatively little known. It consequently has not yet received the support which its vast and beautiful work deserves. It is greatly embarrassed, and the work it can do is much limited through lack of funds.

Six Thousand Pounds wanted to clear off a deficit for the year 1894.

The applications are so distressing and urgent that every shilling has been spent.

Special efforts are made on behalf of mothers with their first infants, who are really the most hopeful class of the fallen, and are generally greatly to be pitied.

A Home has been opened for the reception of such young women before they become mothers as are unfitted from their previous good character and position, to mix with others.

The Committee need £300 to close the year free from debt. Contributions received by the Secretary, or may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE LATE WRECKS AND LIFE LOSSES.

Sir,—The serious losses of vessels and of lives through the late disastrous weather at sea, have brought woful desolation to many a home at the very time of anticipated social cheer and happiness. Almost as long as the list of first-known casualties is that of the further wrecks and missing ships, including several fishing-craft with their entire crews, one by one notified or finally given up as lost, amid all the superadded sadness of the protracted period of suspense.

At this juncture, it will allay much sympathetic questioning if we are permitted to inform the public generally of the steps taken, in alleviation of the urgent necessities of the numerous sufferers, by the Shipwrecked Mariners' Society as the accredited National medium for the relief of maritime distress. Besides the caring-for on the spot and forwarding to their homes of the rescued survivors, every ascertainable case of need amongst the widows and orphans or other dependents of the drowned has been, and is still being, promptly aided by the Society.

Supplementing these "Immediate Relief" functions, the Society has made substantial grants to the various local funds inaugurated for the more permanent assistance of the recently bereaved families; while, in addition an exceptionally large amount of help, in the aggregate, has been given from the Society's own Provident Fund, both of membership awards on death and towards the replacement of the lost kits and boats of distressed mariners and fishermen.

The limit to this widespread and truly national work is that, alone, of the means wherewith to carry it forward; were the funds but adequate, the extent of the Society's benevolent and business-like operations might well be doubled. We would earnestly plead with your readers for the needed increase of public support.—Your obedient servants,

LEWIS DISASTER FUND.

Dear Sir,—I have to thank you for the place you gave in your columns to my appeal on behalf of the families of the men drowned in Broad Bay, Lewis. Friends have responded heartily and handsomely, but we need a goodly sum to make adequate provision for those families from which all the bread winners have been swept away with no prospect of others to take their place in time to come.—Yours very truly, Donald J. Martin.

ALDERMAN W. D. STEPHENS, during the debate on the "drunken question," at last week's meeting of Newcastle Town Council, averred that the men of the north drank whisky, whereas the men of the south drank beer.—Newcastle Chronicle.

GATHERED GOLD.

God never leaves any till they first leave Him.—M. Henry.

NO DOUBTS.

A man can never move the world that lets the world move him. If he is not certain about something, let him step forth; we cannot have "if's" and "and's" where the soul is concerned, and heaven or hell at issue.—Luther.

TEMPORAL ADVANTAGE.

Let us not so much solicit God for any temporal advantage, as for a heart that may fit us for it, and that He would be the chooser as well as the giver of our portion in this world; for He is alone able to suit and sanctify our condition to us, and us to our condition.—South.

THE LOVE OF CHRIST.

Every day we may see something new in Christ, for his love hath neither brim nor bottom. What would I refuse to suffer if I could get a draught of it at my heart's desire! yet I desire grace and patience, that I may wait on and lie on the brink till the waters fill and overflow.—Rutherford.

GOD'S PROVIDENCE.

The saints seem to have the worst of it; but it is not so. Providence is not rolled upon unequal, crooked wheels; for "all things work together for the good of those who love God, and are the called according to his purpose." Ere it be long, we shall see the white side of God's providence.—Rutherford.

A BALM FOR EVERY SORROW.

I find that one of the most essential elements of a truly happy life is an unlimited resignation of all one's concernments to the holy, perfect will of God. It is a sovereign balm for every sorrow. No matter how severe the bodily pain may be, or how heavy may be the burden of one's sorrow, all the bitterness is taken out of it when once we resign ourselves into our Heavenly Father's trusted hands, and ask Him to do with us and for us only what He will.—John Dickie.

FEATURES OF A HOLY LIFE.

A holy life is made up of a number of small things. Little words, not eloquent speeches or sermons; little deeds, not miracles or battles; not one great heroic act or mighty martyrdom, make up the true Christian life. The little constant sunbeams, not the lightning—the waters of Siloah, that go softly in their meek mission of refreshment, and not the waters of the rivers, great and many, rushing down in torrent noise and force—are the true symbols of a holy life.—Horatius Bonar.

FAITH AND FELLOWSHIP.

Faith, in our Saviour's teaching, is not a mere passive principle; it involves love and obedience. Real trust in God implies living fellowship with Him. Thus faith sets man in his true relation to God, because it both opens his life to the Divine grace, and also calls forth his own best aspiration and effort, after likeness to God. Christ's teaching, therefore, replaces self-righteousness by humility, and substitutes confidence for despair. Its whole idea is that of a vital loving relation with God.—Professor G. B. Stevens.

WORLDLY WISDOM.

How often does worldly wisdom prove the height of human folly, when its dictates are substituted for God's Word and will? And in general, however important a knowledge of the world, prudence and circumspection in our engagements, deliberation in forming, and vigour in executing our schemes, may be, if they be not directed by the fear of God, that love to our fellow men, and that due estimate of temporal things, which true religion alone can impart, our schemes will all begin, and centre, and terminate in self. This wisdom, moreover, engenders a spirit of self-dependence, and an exclusive reliance on our own resources. It counteracts all hose providential arrangements which are intended "to hide pride from man," and as in the instances of Sennacherib, Achitophel, and others, where the deep-laid schemes of unsanctified policy have broken down just at the completion, it incurs the denunciation, "Thy wisdom and thy knowledge, it hath perverted thee; therefore shall evil come upon thee, and desolation shall come upon thee suddenly."—Rev. J. A. Baxter.

DUBLIN VISITING MEDICAL MISSION.—From 300 to 400 persons receive medical advice each week. We ask for prayer on behalf of the Mission, that the Gospel seed so constantly sown may bring forth much fruit. A Sunday evening Gospel meeting has been commenced in addition to the other weekly meetings. The work grows faster and deeper than ever we could have anticipated.

CONSUMPTION, AND ALL CHEST DISEASES.

INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

EIGHTY-SECOND INTERVIEW,

With Mr. D. MORGAN, 6, Vittoria-street, Llanelly.
CASE OF ADVANCED CONSUMPTION.
Which appeared in the Appendix to Mr. Congreve's work on "Consumption," p. 48.

This is one of the many cases I have seen in the course of my travels which prove Mr. Congreve's treatment to be permanent in its results.

In this case the patient, having hereditary predisposition to chest disease, in 1884 showed every symptom of advanced Consumption. Ten years afterwards (in July, 1894) I found him strong, healthy, and well.

Mr. Morgan has always been ready to bear testimony to the good he experienced. He is never tired of recommending others to apply for the remedy, or of assisting them to make their application in proper form.

The story Mr. Morgan tells with reference to his own case is as follows:

"Two of my brothers and one sister died of Consumption, and I was attacked with the disease about 1883. I have already described the symptoms—the violent cough, expectoration, spitting of blood, pains in the chest and shoulders, shortness of breath, night perspirations, and palpitation. In addition to taking the medicine of the local doctor, I tried various so-called remedies recommended by one and another, but instead of getting better I got worse. I kept losing flesh all the time; I had to give up my occupation, and at last was confined to bed."

"Then, I suppose, you applied to Mr. Congrève?"

"Yes, and received benefit immediately. I was soon able to return to work, and before very long was able to sing at a concert—a form of recreation of which I am very fond. I recovered very rapidly indeed, and I am thankful to say I have never suffered with my chest from that day to this. As I wrote to Mr. Congreve six years ago, I feel certain he was the means of saving me from an untimely grave."

Mr. Morgan's occupation is certainly not the healthiest, for he is employed in some large tin-works in Llanelly.

"I believe you have recommended other sufferers to apply to Mr. Congreve?" I asked.

"I have sent a large number to him, and I know many cases of people who have been restored to health. I have recommended his treatment to students of Bala College. As I said before, Mr. Congreve's name is a household word in Llanelly."

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

EXTRAORDINARY SUCCESS IN TH TREATMENT OF OBESITY.

"Our corpulent readers will be glad to learn how positively lose two stone in about a month with t greatest possible benefit in health, strength, a muscle, by a comparatively new system. It is singular paradox that the patient, returning quickly a healthy state, with increased activity of bra digestive, and other organs, naturally requires mo food than hitherto; yet, notwithstanding this, absolutely loses in weight 1 to 2 lb. daily, as t weighing machine will prove. Thus there is no su gestion of starvation. It is an absolute success, a the author, who has devoted years of study to t subject, absolutely guarantees a noticeable reducti within twenty-four hours of commencing the tre ment. This is different with other diseases, for t patient, in some cases, may go for weeks without bei able to test whether the physician has rightly treat him, and may have derived no real or appare improvement in health. Here, we repeat, the auth guarantees it in 24 hours, the scale to be the une ing judge. The treatment aims at the actual root the disease, so that the superfluous fat does n return when discontinuing the treatment. It perfectly harmless. We advise our readers to c the attention of stout friends to this, because, si cerely, we think they ought to know. In The Association News, the question has, not unwisely, been raised whether our Y.M.C.A.'s shall provide smoking-rooms. We say, not unwisely, because we are in days when everything is being inquired into, and when all things are being and going to be shaken, that that which cannot be shaken may remain.

The subject is a very important one, because it raises the question on what principle Christian work is to be carried on. Confining ourselves, however, to the issue before us, we understand that the experiment has been made at the Polytechnic with discouraging results. A smoking and billiard room was set up at the People's Palace, and ultimately closed, in consequence of which the Trustees of the City Parochial Foundation, in making grants, exclude institutions which have smoking-rooms.

Not the least important consideration is that the work of the Y.M.C.A. begins with lads in their teens, and it is very desirable that there should be one place where they will not be tempted to begin the habit.

The visit of Mr. John Burns to Chicago seems to have somewhat disillusioned him as to the practical workings of government for the people by the people. As The Spectator truthfully points out :—

> If the State makes all men pecuniarily comfortable, the State in five years must be pecuniarily ruined. The dreamers are, however, like other men in one respect—they cannot help learning, as Mr. Burns is learning, from actual experience; and for them information from America is experience. If the English over there, with all the Utopian conditions granted—perfect equality, perfect freedom, limitless land, splendid means of education, high wages, and no squires—can only produce Chicago, then perhaps the axioms of Socialists are not axioms, and something different is required as a waybill to Utopia.

The fact is, man left to himself apart from God is much the same everywhere. Schemes devised and plans elaborated which leave God out of account, can meet with no more success now than in the Babel days.

Some one has spoken of despotic power as "that which always corrupts and degrades the human heart." The abuse of power has led, in the providence of God and in the nature of things, to its decline from autocracy to democracy, during the times of the Gentiles. The love and the abuse of power is the source of evil in the Church as well as in the world; in evangelistic and missionary societies as well as in commercial companies; in Protestantism as well as Romanism; in Churches which are called "Free" as well as in those which are "Established."

Where this love of power is in the ascendant, boards composed of men who may be Liberal, Radical, or Republican in politics, become as sensitive and as conservative as the House of Lords, when changes, however useful, which seem to touch their supremacy, are in the air. Directors claim an authority which never came down to them from God, nor upward from the people. Deacons envy pastors, and pastors vex deacons; and, like the Philistines before, and the Syrians behind, they devour Israel with open mouth. In the Church as well as in the world,

> Man, proud man,
> Drest in a little brief authority, . . .
> Plays such fantastic tricks before high Heaven,
> As make the angels weep.

And not the least of the evil is that when prophets prophesy falsely, and priests bear rule by their means, the people love to have it so. Poor, pitiful, fallen human nature! The lust of power and position is in us all. But that is no excuse. So also is the possibility of every other sin forbidden in the Decalogue, and He who died and rose again for us, and who ever liveth to make intercession for us, is able to save to the uttermost all them that come unto God by Him.

Paul's conception of the way in which ministers of the Gospel were to commend themselves to others is very remarkable and suggestive; it is unfolded in 2 Cor. vi. 3-10. Take one or two ministerial graces—"in patience, in afflictions." Good sermons are good, but patience in trouble and in well-doing is better. Many a fine sermon and many a splendid career is spoiled for the want of patience in enduring trials which beset every minister's life. "In afflictions"—without them any ministry becomes dry, hard, useless; we are often at our best spiritually when we are at our worst outwardly. Afflictions soften and sweeten the heart—i.e., the grace of God working through them—and in the endurance of affliction for the Gospel's sake the minister and the ministry are alike commended.

But what is "the ministry"? It is often said by Evangelical men that there is no priesthood on earth but that of all believers. It is equally true that there is no ministry but that of all believers. The New Testament knows nothing of "the ministry" as an order of men separate from other Christians. Apostles, prophets, evangelists, pastors, teachers, are gifts from the risen Christ, "for the perfecting of the saints unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ" (Ephes. iv. 17, R.V.). Every faithful Christian is a minister of the gift which is in him. Evangelical Protestantism will only overcome Popery as it purges itself of the sacerdotalism, sacramentarianism, and ecclesiasticism, from which it was only half cleansed at the Reformation. One of the chief causes of the deadness of the Christian Church is the derogation to and the arrogation by "ministers" of the functions of the whole body of believers. Neither the derogators nor the arrogators are exclusively to blame; but as the human body could not thrive if one member undertook the functions of the others, so neither can the body of Christ.

Dr. Reuen Thomas, of Boston, U.S.A., has been enjoying a three months' vacation, and now gives to The British Weekly his experiences as a hearer. Not as a critic or a fault-finder, but as a learner and worshipper, he has entered churches of all kinds. As he now tries to recall sermons, he finds that those which have stayed with him have all been sermons which had been carefully prepared beforehand; not one was extemporaneous. He says that with one exception he did not hear a single extemporaneous sermon that was scholarly, with much of intellectual flavour about it, logical, suggestive, or strikingly devout. "On the other hand, every sermon that was given from or with the manuscript had these qualities." This is a serious piece of testimony; can it be taken as giving the experience of the average hearer? Dr. Thomas speaks as one who does a good deal of extemporaneous work himself; and his observations have made him hesitant and nervous as to the permanent usefulness of it, at least among educated persons.

We are not quite clear what Dr. Thomas would call extemporaneous work; the MS. may be a hasty and ill-considered production, and the spoken sermon may be carefully thought out and prayerfully pondered, an effort of the understanding and heart. Dr. Maclaren, e.g., uses no MS., and yet his sermons can be printed as they are spoken. Robert Hall never used a manuscript. True, these are exceptional men. We believe there is no rule as to the method of preparing and preaching, and if the Holy Ghost honours any and every way in which the Saviour is truly and lovingly set forth, we may do the same; it is cruel and useless to bind every man to the same method. But reading a sermon is not preaching.

In these times of straitness may not all our societies and benevolent works be improved by undergoing, if possible, a more thorough overhauling in their expenditure and management? It is strange, how, in prosperous times, little laxities are allowed, and small abuses and extravagances creep in. Our missionary societies, perhaps, have to learn to develop native agency for the spread of the Gospel, and to allow more responsibility to be cast upon converts. We may be the means of calling churches into existence, and then nurse them into decrepitude and death. The Divine life is both a tender and a sturdy plant. Out of the present distress may come greater efficiency, and that will be more than a compensation for a diminished subscription list. Power for service is our best gift.

In his interesting book "The Story of the London Missionary Society," Rev. C. Silvester Horne treats the subject of the "Opium War" in a way which we cannot think is justified by the facts. "Few people, now-a-days (he says), are prepared to defend altogether the action of England in this matter." A mild way that of expressing the horror and shame of the Christian conscience of the whole world. Mr. Horne somewhat covers his halting references by this closing sentence:—

At the same time Christian men and women will never cease to deplore that the Gospel and opium went in side by side, and that the way for them was opened by the sword.

We are the more sorry to point out this defect in a good book, because the L.M.S. has been so opposed to the opium traffic; Mr. Horne himself tells of Mr. Medhurst's "steady refusal to travel by any ship engaged in the opium traffic," and of the consequent delay in finding out new openings for the Gospel. Further, the book is most plain and faithful in condemning the traffic in strong drink. Why so firm against one sin, and so feeble against the other? Let us hope that in future editions there may be emendations.

An appeal is being made in Brighton to those who patronise theatrical amusements to consider whether such amusements are not dangerous to private and public morals in several respects. The assumption by women of characters which belong to men, and by men of characters belonging to women; the style of dress, or undress, adopted by women in some of the dances; the pictorial advertisements often used for the streets and hoardings; the employment of children in exciting scenes and at late hours—these are the points pressed upon the attention of theatre-goers. The appeal is well founded, and can only do good.

Principal Simon, of Yorkshire United College, writes in The Independent with great weight on the problem of "original sin," or the bias towards wrong inherited by all men. He reminds us that it continues to face the serious inquirer into the philosophy of human history. This "dark inheritance can neither be sneered nor laughed out of existence; and whoever succeeds, for himself, in getting rid of it has, at the same time, done logically what he may not have dreamed of doing, namely, got rid of Christ and Christianity." Quite so; they who are whole have no need of the physician; they who are not lost need no Saviour. The chain of logic in Scripture is unbreakable because it is the chain of truth.

How difficult it is for our tainted and limited nature to take in every aspect of truth, or truths, that appear to be contradictory. Faith and works, free grace and holiness of life, the deity and humanity of our Lord, and so forth. With the reformation Luther gave the two great truths—"that the Christian is a free man," and "that the Christian is the servant of all." The former has been embraced, but when shall we see the latter in full possession of the Christian conscience? Yet it is the crying need of our times. Were Christians ruled by the idea that they are here to serve, just as was their Lord and Saviour, what activity would be seen where now sloth reigns, what sacrifices would be offered where now we have selfishness!

Great satisfaction will be felt throughout the country by the friends of temperance at the Chancellor of the Exchequer's assurance that the Local Veto Bill, when next it is introduced, will propose to empower localities to reduce the public-houses as well as totally to prohibit them. This modification will rally many fresh allies. We hope that the Government will have the support of all parties in the State in this serious endeavour to cope with the frightful evils of the public-house.

The Week of Prayer in America for some years past, has been happily associated with revived movements of evangelisation. This year we are glad to note in our contemporaries over the sea, that the same result is following the season of united waiting on God.

PROVIDE THINGS HONEST.

Romans xii. 17.

Faith and prayer are such mighty powers which God blesses to his servants that there seems to be some little danger of Christians presuming upon them. Not that the Lord's arm is shortened, or that He cannot work wonders for the furtherance of his work; but that we are liable to forget some of his direct teaching, given through the words of his disciples, and hasten on to force open doors which God may have some wise purpose in closing.

Missions are one distinct branch of enterprise which appear so manifestly supplied with daily nourishment for daily needs that one hesitates to suggest even a pause in their operations, but yet St. Paul says, "Owe no man anything," and God sometimes sees fit to allow a time of trial to develop patience and submission to his will. "My ways are not your ways, saith the Lord."

When our Lord was on earth He first sent forth his messengers without "purse, or scrip, or shoes" (Matt. x. 10), but when the kingdom was further advanced the directions were different. He that had no sword was to "sell his garment and buy one," and general provision for their needs was to be made (Luke xxii. 25-39). Is there not a guide here for those who enter on "Faith Missions"? Can we be so certain that we are working on God's appointed lines, as to know He will provide the purse which we have not taken, although the above command was given just before Christ left the disciples to pursue their ministry without his visible guidance? If God does not furnish necessaries to some "a missioner" who perhaps is walking unadvisedly, will not the unconverted have a terrible opportunity to mock at the destitution of his professed servant? Paul always took care to be independent of those among whom he ministered, and "laboured, working with his hands, that he might not be chargeable to any." Are we more justified in insisting on God's acknowledging our right to claim maintenance from Him? But it is in other matters that this subject appeals more powerfully to our sense of right and just dealing. It is becoming a regular custom now for large debts to be incurred for building churches or mission halls, which often remain unpaid for years. Nay, further, great sums are expended on mere "improvements;" new organs, when old ones would suffice; new pews, often far less beautiful than those removed; new tiled floors, instead of homely, comfortable wood. We would desire that God's House should be furnished with the best of everything; but we cannot think that He is honoured by ornaments which have not been paid for.

The next step is generally to endeavour to wipe off the debt by a bazaar or fête of some kind, and, alas! the desire to make money often conquers the sense of fitness, and methods are tried which bring terrible reproach on the Christian cause. Raffles, wheels of fortune, even the racehorse game have been recently employed at bazaars held for church purposes, and young men said openly that "they never saw finer places for gambling."

A Christian friend characterised these doings as "unfruitful works of darkness," and another observed, "The unconverted must think our God poor indeed if such means are necessarily resorted to in order to provide funds for his work." We must not multiply examples, but we do pray the Lord's people to throw all their influence into the scale against this form of dishonouring the Master of All. He will and does bless earnest, prayerful effort, only let Christians be wise as well as unworldly, and make use of that "sanctified common-sense" and deep regard to God's glory which are such powerful directing and controlling influences in all efforts made in his name.

THE MASSES OF GLASGOW.

Not much do we care for reports of work that cannot be reported; not often can we plead guilty of giving them, but we feel it only duty to give now a little account of our application of a gift of £25 from "Freely" through The Christian. We are applying it to renting a neighbouring theatre for the preaching of the Gospel in a meeting supplementary to our gatherings in the City Hall.

BRITANNIA THEATRE SERVICES.

On Lord's Day evenings a bright glow from an electric-lit globe on the Trongate attracts the attention of the passers-by, that to a late hour throng this central thoroughfare of our big city, and prompts the question, "What's this?" Several young men, workers in the City Temple, keep circulating among the crowd with a printed invitation, backed up by a personal word of welcome to the Gospel meeting. The benches fill with a motley crowd of the very class of non-church-goers we wish, sprinkled all over with City Temple folk, who assist to keep order and who keep dipping the meeting in prayer and intercession. There is a large contingent of the "bell-mouth brigade," those peculiar-trousered and collarless young men that loaf about the close-mouths and corners of the streets.

As we enter, our Gospel brass band are stirringly conducting the praise, and the music keeps in their seats many whom the sermon would at first scare like a stone dropped in the water as the fishes are about to bite. Then there is a pointed, earnest appeal to repentance towards God and faith towards our Lord Jesus Christ. Some loudly and carelessly clatter their way out to the street, but others are subdued, and at the end their heads, bowed with the rest, tell of impressions gone home and resolutions formed, and—shall we not hope?—also decisions for Christ. Several cases of conversion have come to our ken, like the breath of spring to the winter-bound earth.

It is sad yet glad work. As the young lads and lasses troop noisily out amid the tender accents of the yearning preacher our heart sinks as we think of what these Gospel-rejecting youths will be when they are men and women, and full Glasgow citizens. Away from God, what does the future contain for them? But necessity is laid upon us to preach the Gospel to the outcast masses of the people. Coming directly after, or immediately before, our colossal gathering in the City Hall, personally we can hope but seldom to be able to preach in the theatre, but there are loving and able and soul-burdened preachers ready to help us in proclaiming the good news of salvation.

For several Lord's Days running we have had the Word spoken by that well-known evangelist, Mr. W. D. Dunn, and men like Mr. J. T. Conn, City Missionary, and Mr. Archibald Bell, elder in City Temple, who shunts his Bible class by this meeting on to the evangelistic line. Right at the heart of Glasgow evangelistic need is the greatest, and evangelistic work tells the most—not maybe in man's method of reckoning, but we are sure in God's. It would be easier to rest after our not-small labour on the blessed day of the Lord, but that moving Trongate, a black mass of young people to be on the streets yet for hours, haunted us on the way home. The collection we receive in the theatre meets only a little more than one-half of our outlay for rent, but are we to stop for want of money while wealth overflows in the hands of the Lord's stewards? Surely not. Shall we not rather be permitted to extend the work in the theatres and music halls of the city? We are doing our utmost personally, and the expenditure for the City Temple itself is very great. Who more will have fellowship with us in this theatre work? Any gifts will be strictly applied to this part of our work alone, preaching the Gospel in the Britannia and the theatres and music halls of Glasgow. Many thanks to "Freely" for his (or her) gift of £25 that really began this work.

MR. E. R. L. GOULD'S able review of the Gothenburg plan has been reissued by Cassell and Co. (1s.), under the title "Popular Control of the Liquor Traffic." As a fair and impartial examination of the control system, the pamphlet will be carefully studied; though temperance workers, who desire that the drink traffic should be "ended and not mended," will differ from its conclusions.

Two Secrets.*

BY PRINCIPAL MOULE, CAMBRIDGE.

IT is not too much to say that the whole Epistle [to the Ephesians], as it falls obviously into the two main sections of Spiritual Truth (i.-iii.) and Spiritual Living (iv.-vi.), may be summed up in the two corresponding mottoes, Christ our Salvation, Christ our Law. "In all things" indeed "He hath the pre-eminence" here.

It is thus that St. Paul, apprised of the theosophic ceremonialism which had infected Asian Colossæ, prepares Ephesus and Asia in advance to throw it off. He pours into their spiritual system, into all their thought and all their life, the glory of Christ. To the unwholesome and unlawful intrusions into the unseen which were the temptation of numberless minds then, as they are now, and more and more acutely so now as a second paganism makes its way in our nominal Christendom, he opposes beforehand this absolutely unique Object of knowledge and of faith, of reason and of adoration. He uplifts Jesus Christ our Lord, historical—for He died and rose; eternal—for we were chosen in Him before the world was founded; the purpose of all ages was laid in Him; his wealth cannot be tracked out; his love transcends far all our knowing. St. Paul presents Him to the Asians in his relation to our sins, in their guilt; that point which not only theosophy by its nature tends to ignore, but which unilluminated human thought in general likes to avoid. He speaks of our "death in trespasses and sins," and of Divine wrath, and of a forgiveness, an acceptance, vitally connected with the Blood, the Cross, the Lord's giving of Himself for us.

Here were antidotes alike to the slumbers of reverie and to the deep exhaustion incident to all efforts after moral purity which are unrelated to atoning grace. He meets the requests of the soul for insight into eternal secrets by unfolding something better than visions of angelic mediation with its countless arches of an impossible bridge between the finite and the infinite; he shows them Jesus Christ, spanning at once that gulf in his real oneness with both its sides. He shows them this Lord Jesus Christ, the Father's Beloved, the divine King of Angels, the Head and Life of believing man, as not only the central Fact of an immovable creed, but the mysterious while genuine Experience of the believing soul. Here was an esoteric life indeed; only it was entered by an open door, on which was sprinkled the atoning blood; and it was flooded from within by the daylight of truth and of pure love.

Then he brings the whole directly home into the realities of human life. The system which he had in view, and against which he would guard the Asian saints, never really gravitated towards the realities of life, nor could do so. Alike its mysticism and its ceremonialism tended away from the simple but inestimable charities and sanctities of common things. They tended to lodge saintship in an ambitious speculative insight, or in a distorted and misdirected physical asceticism, or in both. The Jesus Christ of history, and of heaven, bore at once and always upon the smallest and most common things of the day, as well as upon the past or the future of an eternal plan. In Him the same disciple who found that inmost secret, "Christ dwelling in the heart by faith," would find, once rightly directed, that other secret, how to live quite through the next common human day delivered from self-will, humble and modest, pure and true, punctual and faithful in relationship and intercourse; "doing the will of God" in these things "from the soul" (vi. 6). Yet the two secrets, that of the blissful experience and that of the serving life, were one secret at the root. They resided not in an idea, but in a Person. It was all the Lord Jesus Christ.

* FROM GRACE AND GODLINESS: Studies in the Epistle to the Ephesians. By H. C. G. Moule, B.D. (Seeley & Co.)

THE UNVEILING.—5.

REV. i. 10—19.—OUR GREAT HIGH PRIEST.—II.

EVERY note of music is in the sound of many waters. Ezekiel, the priest, described the noise of many waters as like the voice of the Almighty, the voice of speech, the noise of an host.

> Sweeter sounds than music knows
> Charm us in Immanuel's name;

whether, like the Lion of the Tribe of Judah, He roars against his and our enemies; or, like the Lamb as it had been slain, who taketh away the sin of the world, He says, "Come unto Me, and I will give you rest."

"And holding fast in his right hand seven stars," "as their Guardian, their Provider, their Nourisher, and their Possessor" (Alford). All this was shadowed forth in Job, in his priestly intercession for his children, in the days when the patriarch was the priest of his own family. And all in its highest sense is fulfilled in our High Priest towards the children whom God hath given Him. While He was in the world He kept them in the Father's name, as John had recorded in the intercessory prayer (John xvii. 6, 12), and now as their High Priest above He holds in his right hand the stars who are the angels, the messengers, the representatives, the guides and rulers, of his Churches.

The stars who sang together in the morning of creation were angels. The Law was given by the disposition of angels; ordained by angels in the hand of a mediator, Moses. Therefore, in accordance with the symbolism of the prophecy, the bishops, the presiding elders, of the seven churches, are angels, and the angels are seven stars. And the Mediator of the New Covenant, greater than Moses, higher than Aaron, far above angels, holds in his right hand the angels of the churches. When there went forth from Jehovah's right hand "a fire of law" for the people whom He loved, He came with ten thousands of holy ones. God was hidden in the clouds of Sinai, and the people encamped afar off, and the mount was fenced with barriers lest the people should draw near to gaze, and perish. It was fitting that that dispensation should be inaugurated by angels. But when God was manifested in flesh it was equally fitting that those who served the churches by presiding over them should be not angels, but men; that the words of the Gospel should not be spoken by angels, but by the Lord, and by the men that heard Him, and be confirmed by the Holy Ghost (Heb. ii.).

As the New Testament is instinct with the typology of the Old, it was in perfect accord with this Book of the Unveiling that the presiding elders, bishops, overseers of the flock of God should be called angels and stars (see Deut. xxxiii. 2, Dan. vii. 10, Gal. iii. 19, Heb. ii. 2-4), just as Christ is called our Passover, Jesus the Lamb of God, and the Church the Israel of God.

Out of his mouth goeth the sharp two-edged sword of the Word of God, piercing to the dividing asunder of soul and spirit, and of the joints and marrow, and discerning the thoughts and intents of the heart. Yet He is not a High Priest who cannot be touched with the feeling of our infirmities, but has been in all points, in body, soul, and spirit, tested like as we are, without sin. Therefore while the two-edged sword pierces, discerns, detects, exposes, the iniquity even of our holy things, we have a merciful and faithful High Priest, at the right hand of Him that sitteth upon the throne, an Advocate with the Father, Jesus Christ the Righteous.

The consummating feature of his glorious person is that his countenance was like the sun shining in its strength. For our High Priest is the brightness of God's glory, the express image of his person. And as, when He said I AM to those who came to take Him they fell backward to the ground, so now at the sight of his risen glory John fell at his feet as dead.

But the compassionate and sympathising High Priest at once placed his hand upon him, saying, "Fear not. I AM the First and the Last and the Living One—the Eternal I AM—and I became dead, and behold I am alive for evermore. And I have the keys of death and of Hades."

One would think it might have increased the fear of John to be told that he was face to face with the Eternal God. But though the suddenness and the glory of the appearance had overwhelmed the servant, yet being still in the Spirit, worshipping in spirit and in truth, he speedily recovered strength—more speedily than Daniel had done in the older and dimmer dispensation.

The visions are not for thyself alone, but for thy fellow-servants and brethren and companions in tribulation and in the Kingdom and patience of Jesus. "Write, therefore, the things which thou sawest, and the things which are, and the things which are about to come to pass hereafter; the mystery of the seven stars which thou sawest in my right hand, and the seven golden candlesticks. The seven stars are the angels of the seven churches: and the seven candlesticks are the seven churches."

In whatever way these words may be interpreted, it is, to say the least, legitimate to regard them as constituting the mystery of the seven stars and the seven golden candlesticks. The most natural construction of the sentence contained in verse 19, and the first clause of 20, is that "the mystery" is in apposition with "the things." Supposing that "that which thou sawest" refers to the vision of ch. i., "the things which are," to the seven churches of chs. ii. iii., and "the things which shall be after these" to the subsequent visions, they are all contained in the mystery of the seven stars and the seven golden candlesticks, which are explained to be the seven angels of the churches, and the seven churches themselves. In the face of these indicative words of the Apostle, to insist upon carrying forward the whole of the Unveiling, beyond the first three chapters, to a period in the future when the Church has ceased to be on earth is, we submit, unduly to limit the scope of the explanatory words which accompanied the revealing Spirit's command to write.

There is abundant scope for fulfilment in the future; why should we deprive ourselves of the counsel, instruction, and warning applicable to the present? Every interpretation, however, must be judged on its merits. If we do not find in the visions themselves instruction of the most vital importance to the Church during her earthly sojourn, the endeavour to prove it from the construction of the last two verses of ch. i. is vain. The proof must be found in the result. M.

FIFTY YEARS OF RESCUE WORK.

If proof were needed that the well-known society, called the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children, deserves its title, such proof is abundantly given by the record of its fifty-one years of rescue work. The marvellous growth of the society, from a hayloft over a cow-shed in St. Giles' in 1843, to its present eight Homes and two training ships, Arethusa and Chichester, testifies to the usefulness of its operations and its appreciation by the community. A leading feature of the society is the entire absence of the voting system, destitute and deserving cases being promptly received after careful investigation. Upwards of 13,000 boys and girls have been maintained, educated, and technically trained in the various branches of the institution; and it is particularly worthy of note that these children were not merely passed through the Homes, but in every instance received a long and careful training before being launched out in the world. At the present moment nearly 900 boys and girls are being maintained by the society in its various branches, which are situate as follows:—Boys' Home, 164, Shaftesbury-avenue; Working Boys' Home, 164A, Shaftesbury-avenue; Boys' Home, Twickenham; Farm School and Shaftesbury School, Bisley; training ships Arethusa and Chichester, off Greenhithe, Kent; Training Ships' Depôt, 100, East India Dock-road, E.; Girls' Home, Sudbury, near Harrow; and Girls' Home, Ealing, W.

Exceedingly pathetic are very many of the cases investigated by the committee, and from a long list of those admitted at the commencement of this month we are enabled to quote the following: Alice H——, aged eleven, one of nine children, whose father, a painter by trade, was accidentally killed last April. He was working on the line near Finsbury Park when he was struck down by one train as he was escaping from another, and shockingly mutilated. He was taken to the Royal Free Hospital in an unconscious state and died soon after his arrival. He bore an excellent character for steadiness and sobriety, and for some time had been a member of the men's Bible class, conducted by the missionary of the parish church, and he also attended services at the parochial hall. On the Sunday—only a few hours before his death—he had attended both, and in the evening had sung at home the hymns he had heard, so that we may indeed hope that he was prepared for his sudden removal into the eternal world. The vicar speaks highly also of the poor widow, who was struggling hard to maintain herself and large family. The committee of the National Refuges were delighted to accede to the application made to them, and little Alice is now a happy inmate at their excellent Home at Sudbury.

Philip ——, aged nine, one of seven children, whose father, a shoemaker, died three years ago of inflammation of the brain. The mother, a mantle maker, did her utmost to keep the little home together, but being taken ill with pleurisy, which lasted about two months, was compelled to sell her sewing machine for rent. In the deep distress of her weakness and poverty, she appealed to the committee of the National Refuges, with the result that in a very short space of time her son Philip was placed in their Home at Twickenham.

Thanks to a kind-hearted lady, the case of little Annie — was brought to the knowledge of Mr. H. Bristow Wallen, the secretary. The mother is a very respectable hard-working but delicate woman, whose husband is in a dying condition with consumption. The wife had three children at home, and could manage to support the other two if little Annie could be taken off her hands. Being very delicate, the poor woman can scarcely get through her work at charing, and neither of the children is old enough to earn anything. The husband, who is a very superior man, had been for fourteen years in the employ of one firm, but as he can never work again, the wife is really worse off than if she were a widow. These facts being carefully ascertained, the child Annie was promptly received into the society's Home at Sudbury, to the great joy of the mother, and the comfort of the dying father.

Volumes could be written detailing the scenes of misery and woe from which the children in the National Refuges have been happily rescued. But it is far more congenial to turn from such scenes and contemplate the brightness which now surrounds these children. Linked with soundness of Christian training is the equally invaluable technical education which is intended so to prepare the boys and girls for life's battle that they may not again slide back into the distressing circumstances of former days. To attend the periodical gatherings of "old boys and girls" who have passed through the Homes, is more than sufficient to assure the most sceptical that the work of the National Refuges is indeed thorough and complete. Very few are sent to Canada, situations at home being easily found for boys and girls so well trained. In conclusion, when we contemplate the fact that the training ships Arethusa and Chichester have sent no less than 5696 sturdy young sailors into the merchant service and Royal Navy, one cannot but wish a hearty godspeed to so noble an institution as the National Refuges for Homeless and Destitute Children. Well worth a visit is the London Home and headquarters of the society at 164, Shaftesbury-avenue, where any further information may be readily obtained.

AN OLD RUSSIAN SERMON.

By LUKE, BISHOP OF NOVGOROD (1036).

First of all, brethren, it is our duty, and that of all Christians, to keep this commandment, viz., to believe in one God, in the Holy Trinity, in the Father, Son, and Holy Ghost, as was taught by the apostles and holy fathers, and to believe in the resurrection, in the life everlasting, and in eternal punishment for sinners. When you are in church stand in the fear of God and worship Him; do not talk, nor think about anything else, but pray to Him with all your heart, that He may forgive your sins.

Have love towards every man, and especially to the brethren, and do not have one thing in your heart and another in your mouth. Do not lay a trap for a brother, lest God throw you into a worse one. Bear an injury, and do not return evil for evil. Praise one another, and God will praise you. Do not quarrel with one another, lest you be styled the sons of the devil, but be reconciled, and thus you will be sons of God. Do not condemn a brother even in thought, remembering your own sins, and God will not condemn you. Think of the strangers, and have compassion upon them, and the poor, and those shut up in prison, and be merciful to your own slaves.

It is not becoming for you to take part in plays, or to speak obscene words, or to lose your temper every day. Do not despise each other. Do not ridicule anyone. Be patient in misfortune, having your trust in God. Be not high-minded or proud, remember that perhaps sickness and disease may come upon you to-morrow. Be humble and gentle, for the devil is with the proud in heart, and God's Word has no influence upon them. Honour an old man, and your parents. Do not take God's name in vain. Judge according to the truth. Do not lend money for interest. Fear God, honour the king. Slaves, first of all obey God, then your master. Neither kill nor steal, nor lie, nor be a lying witness, nor bear ill-will, nor envy, nor slander. Be neither angry nor insolent. Rejoice with those who rejoice, and sympathise with those who are sad, and may the peace of God be upon you all.

THE GIRLS' HOMESTEAD was opened in June, 1893, to help and train girls who have taken a first step down-hill. The usual time of training is six months, but when needful this period is extended. During the stay of each girl every endeavour is made to win her for Christ, and by thorough training in needle and domestic work to fit her to earn a livelihood.—Address, Miss Gertrude Dutton, 93, St. Augustine-road, Camden-square, N.W.

A MEDICAL MISSION HOSPITAL.—Under the auspices of the Settlement of Women Workers in Canning Town, two houses were opened on Thursday afternoon, in furtherance of the work of the Medical Mission, by Mr. Passmore Edwards. The Mayor of West Ham presided, and amongst friends of the movement participating in the proceedings, which were well attended, were Dr. Maxwell, Mrs. Schwarlieb, M.D., Miss Luckes, Mr. F. B. Jewett, Mr. W. Hazell, M.P., Mr. P. Alden, Miss Margaret Pearce, M.D., Miss Cheetham, and the hon. secretaries, Miss Tillyard and Mrs. T. Coote. The Financial Secretary reported that since the last report had been presented in the autumn £450 had been given towards the hospital, and £300 more was still required for carrying on their work. It was explained that the two houses now opened had been leased to the committee, but it was hoped that a fund would at once be started for the erection of a permanent building, and several donations were announced before the meeting terminated.

DEAF AND DUMB IN HEATHENDOM.

Those who can look back forty or fifty years, and recall the state of the deaf and dumb then in our Christian country, can scarcely wonder to hear of their deplorable condition among the heathen. Missionaries have from time to time taken an interest in isolated cases, and have been able to prove to their friends that they are neither imbecile, nor possessed of evil spirits as they are generally thought to be. From China one missionary writes:—"I cannot tell you how the deaf and dumb are driven into every kind of sin." In India there are nearly 200,000 such, and some native Christians are being stirred up to try and ameliorate the condition of their doubly afflicted brethren. We hope they may carry out their intention of sending a native Christian youth to be trained as a teacher, who could on his return train other native teachers.

In China there is one trained teacher. She did not go out in the interests of the deaf and dumb, but as the wife of Dr. Mills, a missionary of the American Church. Feeling a warm interest in the deaf and dumb they met, she set to work, and has now a small school for boys, with a native teacher, whom she has trained. The little school is situated at Tung Chow, near to Chefoo, and is supported by the deaf of America. There have also been gifts from the native church in Tung Chow, and from others interested in the work.

The deaf of Belfast have long wished for an opportunity to help their brethren in foreign lands. For two years and more they have formed themselves into a small Deaf and Dumb Missionary Society, with missionary boxes and collections, and while waiting for a way to be opened they have used the funds thus raised in sending a missionary on tours, to visit isolated deaf and dumb in our own country districts. Their help would, of course, be small, but if there were a trained teacher in connection with any British Mission, such as America has in Mrs. Mills, all the deaf of the United Kingdom would come to the front, and help to hold up her hands by prayer and practical sympathy.

A number of schools and friends interested in deaf and dumb education have in the past contributed generously, and it is to be hoped that a wider interest may be awakened, and an increasing support, necessary for the extension of this promising work, be given in future. Further information can be had from the Secretary, Deaf and Dumb Missionary Society, 11, Fisherwick-place, Belfast.

THE BIBLE.

So far and so long as England is true to the simple, unadulterated Word of God, which has been purchased for us by the misery of exiles, and the blood of martyrs; so far and so long as she stands fast in the freedom wherewith God has made her free, and is not again entangled in the yoke of bondage; so far and so long as she shall not be driven either by discussion into indifference or sophisticated into delusion by falsity—so far and so long will she maintain the honours of this great and ancient people. All else, call itself by what sounding name it will, will prove to be but booming brass and tinkling cymbal.

Let Englishmen, if they be men, cling to their open Bible. Let them learn from it the sacred truths of primitive Christianity, and be faithful to them alone. Let them teach it to their children, and their children to their children, and their children to generations yet unborn; and then no wind that blows, no storm that beats, will shake her invincible foundations, for she will be founded upon a rock. But let her apostatise from its pure lessons into Romish falsities, whether open or disguised, and I would not give fifty years' purchase either for her greatness or for the stability of her Church. The world has no other calumet of peace save Holy Scripture for souls at war, no other weapon to slay terrible passions, no other teaching to quench the hearts of raging fires; this Book alone makes mortals immortals. This Book alone, which is plainest taught and easiest learnt, is what makes a nation happy, and keeps it so; what ruins kingdoms, and lays cities flat. The Bible will not only be a lamp to our own individual feet, and a light to our own individual paths; but has often saved nations in their extremity, and churches in their corruption:—

> Stars are poor books, and oftentimes do miss,
> This Book of Stars lights to eternal bliss!

MOVEMENT IN ROUEN.

THOUGH the closing meeting of the Rouen series was the forty-third which my dear wife had held in the city, the interest, far from diminishing, has gone on steadily increasing and the influence widening and deepening. The Casino was up to the end crowded, and the work is now continuing in our own hall under the leadership of Ensigns Automarchi and Chaponand. A Roman Catholic lady of high position said she had never known such a general religious movement as had been produced in the city. "It is astonishing, I could never have believed it possible." One of the signs is the great increase in the help given to all charitable institutions.

So many Roman Catholics have been converted, and so many have begun to read the Scriptures and our publications, that the priest of one seminary thought it necessary to preach against us. But another, a very influential abbé, spoke as follows in the hearing of a lawyer, a friend of ours. His words are a striking testimony: "I cannot, of course, agree with the Salvationists, but I am absolutely convinced of their sincerity, and I am certain they are far nearer making their salvation [faire leur salut] than the majority of Catholics."

One evening from 100 to 150 people rose all over the hall to testify to blessings received. It was an extraordinary sight in this Roman Catholic city. They sang with wonderful feeling and fervour:—

Sur mon pas l'etoile du matin luit,
L'aurore a remplacé ma sombre nuit.
(On my path the star of morning sheds its light,
The daydawn has replaced my darksome night.)

We know of three instances at least in which gentlemen converted in the meetings have taken journeys to other cities for purposes of reconciliation or restitution. Among the many testimonies given publicly during the closing meetings were those of two well-educated men, who had been delivered from revengeful purposes of a murderous character, and one would-be suicide. A cripple lady was so grateful for the extraordinary change in her husband that she longed to get to "just one meeting." The officers having volunteered to carry her up into one of the galleries before the meeting, she gladly accepted, and passed a few hours of "heaven upon earth."

A gentleman who, through the rationalistic talk common in his Protestant circle, had become an infidel twenty years ago, came under deep conviction, and during an agonising mental controversy upon his knees at home, one night after the meetings, was the subject of such a remarkable manifestation of the Holy Spirit that his belief in God was at once restored. He is now transformed, and has become a most liberal subscriber to our work. The Maréchale received almost daily letters of thanksgiving. One lady wrote: "Two of your meetings sufficed to destroy infidel convictions of twenty years' standing." A wealthy manufacturer handed her one evening, with great emotion, a bank-note for 500 francs as a thank-offering for his conversion.

Here is a Roman Catholic governess, who up to the age of eleven believed in God and in Christ, but having heard at a girls' lyceum the current infidel talk, all religious belief was destroyed. God spoke to her. She is now reading the Bible with assiduity. She is deeply convicted, and says: "I know I cannot stop there. I must give myself to God fully."

Seventy people have been enrolled as members of our Auxiliary League. A lady of the old Huguenot nobility, who received the Maréchale most hospitably, is the secretary of the League for Normandy. About two thousand of our papers have been sold weekly. The lowest cafés have been "worked." It is not an easy task, for Rouen is one of the cities chosen as places of internement (forced residence) of ticket-of-leave men and other criminals. There are about 4000 of them. Licentiousness is notoriously great among all classes, and houses of ill-fame are very numerous. The Maréchale's suppers for lost women were indescribably touching scenes. Perfect order and respect prevailed, to the great astonishment of the Press, to whom such a work among this class was a thing unheard of, and a marvel indeed. The chief paper of Normandy, in a leading article of its supplement consecrated to this effort, and headed "The Outstretched Hand," describes how the poor lost creatures, accustomed to accost passers-by, now find themselves accosted by godly women, who seek to lead them to change their lives. "We cannot help contrasting," it says, "the energetic efforts of the Salvationists with the absolute indifference with which society treats the glaring immorality which flaunts itself in our streets."

The terribly plain speaking in the casino conférences upon the lax morals of society, both in creed and custom, and the flippant and matter of course way it treats the "gallant" ruin of women, body and soul, by its gilded youth, has, we know, caused many to tremble. We have now leased this hall for the rest of the year. It is very central, and stands at one corner of the Place, where the British burned Joan of Arc. The theatre where the Maréchale held her first meeting is also on the same square. An officer, who is a converted infidel, is now to carry on the work. The expense will be heavy. We believe there are many who would be glad to help forward this deeply spiritual movement, which is certainly one of the most remarkable we have ever witnessed in this land of spiritual darkness.

THE NEEDS OF BOMBAY.

MRS. FREEMAN, wife of Colonel Freeman, a volunteer worker among the Parsees of Bombay, writes to us:—

"I feel sure you will bring before the readers of THE CHRISTIAN the great need of prayer at this present time for the most populous city of the world for its size, Bombay, that the Lord will send more labourers here where all Christian work is so undermanned. To give a few facts. First, there are the Parsees, 70,000 in number, rich and influential, nearly all of them speaking more or less English. They receive a good education at all the schools and colleges, and yet with few exceptions there is no one to work among them.

"They are most willing for English ladies to visit them, and would gladly welcome them, as a Parsee gentleman told a friend of mine on the Orient the other day. In all India there are only eleven converts, splendid men, who have given up all for Christ as Sorabji did, who have been brought in on the outside of other work. Surely this is not God's will in the nineteenth century, when the uttermost parts of the earth are being reached, and we are expecting the Lord's return! Surely there are many in England who would come. Bombay is a very healthy climate compared to other parts of India.

"Secondly, the Y.W.C.A. has many branches, and outsiders do all they can to help. The money is nearly collected for an Institute, but the great need is for one or two ladies of independent means to come and give themselves to work among the English and Eurasian girls, of which there are a great number. There is no settled secretary, and this work is being done by those who have more than enough on their hands already. Is there no mother and daughter who would come out and take this needed post?

"Thirdly, I hear there are two prosperous schools belonging to the C.M.S. which will have to be closed unless the means are forthcoming to provide more teachers, as the scholars are too many for the present staff; and yet the Society seem unable to pay for more. The sum of £20 a year will be sufficient to carry on each school, whose very prosperity seems an appeal in their behalf.

"Surely these three facts of different work in Bombay ought to call forth more prayer and sympathy among your readers who cannot come over and help us themselves. The Hon. Mrs. Waller, 316, Regent-street, London, W., correspondent for the Y.W.C.A. in India, will be glad to hear from any ladies volunteering for Y.W.C.A. or Zenana work, or the Hon. E. and G. Kinnaird would also see any lady who might be in London and wish an interview on the subject."

FOREIGNERS IN LONDON.—Mr. R. Tschertkoff (a Russian exile) is now at the close of his second year of service as a city missionary amongst Jews and foreign Gentiles in the district of Norton Folgate, including the old Artillery Ground, the famous Petticoat-lane, Spitalfields, and the Ghetto Markets. He has a large number of families under constant Christian instruction. At the present time he is much distressed at the poverty prevailing in some parts of his district. The mission room is in Elder-street, Norton Folgate, E., and the treasurer of the Mission is Mr. A. M. Watson, 4, Netley-road, Walthamstow.

LETTER FROM M. COILLARD.

DEAR SIR,—Would you think a little correction, though late, worth the insertion in a corner of your paper? I would deem it a favour. Dr. Johnston, in his book, "Romance versus Reality in African Missions," has found many kind and weighty words in commending our mission to the interest of the English-speaking public, and, although undeserving, we feel thankful and indebted to him. Let it not be thought unkind on my part if I correct one of his statements.

Speaking (page 173) of Litia's marriage, which he illustrates by one of his admirable photographs, he says: "In the afternoon the natives were treated to a liberal feast, consisting of four fat oxen, mealies, and manioc, at Mons. Coillard's expense." This is altogether inexact. The king himself provided the "four fat oxen," and the people, as a homage to him, brought in quantity "mealies and manioc."

Perhaps my friend did not see the King's and the Queen's servants, coming in long lines, bringing the dishes and the baskets of foods; and as the feast took place before the mission house, and Dr. Johnston does not understand the language and the ways of the people, it was easy for him to make that little mistake. I would say nothing about it were it not that it casts a false light on our principles and our mission polity, and may have caused some wrong impression on friends or foes. Dr. Johnston and all our English friends will be pleased to know that that same Litia, lately promoted to the chieftainship of the vast district of Lesheke and Kazungula, has come back to his God, and with the full approval of his father he has sent away his second wife.

There is on all our stations a movement which may prove the first drops of the expected showers, although at present, remembering our bad experiences and knowing the frivolity of our poor Zambesians, I dare not speak of it with too much confidence. Many friends in England and Scotland have watered with earnest and persevering prayers the seed which we have sowed. We cannot, therefore, hide from them the first green blades which we notice on our barren field, although they may prove afterwards mixed up with tares.

This first awakening of consciences began at Kazungula, where we had in July the general meeting of our mission, a season of great blessing. The movement simultaneously spread on all our stations, and many, mostly among the young, profess to have found the Saviour. King Lewanika himself, on behalf of whom so much prayer has been offered, is, I believe, in that crisis when the sinner "kicks against the goads."

Earnestly requesting the prayers of God's people,
Yours in the Lord, F. COILLARD.

ZENANA BIBLE AND MEDICAL MISSION.

WE wish to call attention to the spiritual destitution existing in the fertile and populous district of Behar. The population of this Indian province in 1881 was 23,000,000. At present the Christian churches have only twenty European and Eurasian workers there; they are labouring in Patna, Bankipur, Dinapur, Gya, Muzufferpur, Durbungah, Mokameh, and Jabulpur, besides reaching some of the villages around. Great blessing has been granted to this very partial and insufficient attempt at evangelising a province half the size of Great Britain; but what should we expect at home if we left 1,150,000 souls to the care of one Christian worker, whose parish would be 2800 square miles in extent, or, in other words, fifty-seven towns of 20,000 each to every worker?

The Zenana Bible and Medical Mission have been labouring in Patna since 1885. About four years ago a medical branch was started, and thousands of women have been treated in the two dispensaries and in their homes. Soon a hospital will be ready for the many cases that cannot be treated in private. For extension in Behar we need workers and a large number of special gifts for this work. Houses must be built, and horses and "garis" purchased, as well as a tent or tents for distant villages. We earnestly ask consecrated ladies who are willing to enter on this service to communicate with Miss Hamilton, 2, Adelphi-terrace, Strand, London, W.C. E. A.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 3.—ACTS II.

The Day (1-13).—It was the fiftieth day after the Passover, and the priests in the Temple were offering loaves of the new corn as first-fruits. It was fitting that the Holy Spirit should come as the earnest and forecast of the characteristic gift of this age. He is also the first-fruits of our inheritance. Every succeeding day might have been equally full of power, if the Church had only been faithful. Let us ask to be filled; all-filled; and filled so as to speak. (5) Thus, Babel was reversed, and Heaven anticipated, and the sign was given of the method by which the Gospel of Christ was to be promulgated, and his glory secured.

The Sermon (14-36).—Notice how full this sermon is of Scripture. So Holy-Ghost-filled men speak. What a wonderful light our Lord must have cast on Scripture during the forty days! (17) Previously the Spirit had been confined to a select few; now all flesh were eligible for his gracious influences—sons, daughters, servants. (22) Jesus is always the theme of the Holy Ghost. (23) How great a difference between these bold utterances and the thrice denial! What the Spirit did for Peter He will do for the most timid. That we fulfil God's counsel does not make the sin less heinous. (25) Christ may have sung this hymn of resurrection on the Easter morning. We, too, may apply it to every deliverance from darkness and the shadow of death. (33) As head, representative of his Church, the Lord received the Holy Spirit for each member of his mystical body. Have you claimed your share? See to it that you make Him both Lord and Christ, as the condition of obtaining a Pentecost.

The Result on the Audience (37-47).—This paragraph contains a priceless promise in v. 39. Let us plead it. (42) Continuance in the faith and brotherly love are the tests of true conversion. (46) At the first, Christianity was closely associated with the Temple and its worship. Only gradually men laid aside type and shadow, as they realised how completely all had been fulfilled in the risen Lord.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 4.—ACTS III.

Better than Silver and Gold (1-10).—How closely these two were drawn together by that scene in the Hall of Caiaphas! The temple had new meanings and interest for them now! Their Master had been, and was still there. How many lie just outside the temple of life, looking through its beautiful gates! Like their Master, the disciples aroused faith before they wrought deliverances. (6) Simultaneously with these words, Peter imparted vigour to the man's faith, but he was not aware of it until he obeyed the summons to "walk." The poorest that the world has ever seen, have enriched it with treasures which millionaires could never give. (8) Thus the lame man leaped as an hart! (10) It is the ecstatic joy of the newly saved which arrests and fascinates people.

Peter's Sermon (11-26).—How humble—"not by our power!" How daring—that God had glorified Him whom they slew! What a perception of the qualities of Christ's nature—Holy, and Righteous, and Prince of Life! What triumphant faith in his all-victorious Name! What pity for the ignorance of the Jewish people! (19) The times of refreshing for the world depend upon the repentance and forgiveness of Israel. (24) We turn to Samuel and the prophets with new interest in the light of these words. (26) The Jew has the first offer of the Gospel, as the child of the covenant, but its wide provisions lie open to us all, and Christ begins his work of blessing the soul by turning it away from iniquity.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 5.—ACTS IV.

Arrested (1-4).—The resurrection of Christ has always been the crucial point. This gives Satan sore trouble.

On their Trial (5-22).—How vividly Peter must have remembered the last time he was in that hall! (8) This was a sudden filling for special work. (10) The name of Jesus Christ, standing as it does for his personality, was their battle cry, their sesame, and assurance of victory. What a wonderful power these men suddenly found themselves possessed of. Let us learn so to speak that sacred name that we, too, may get and impart healing virtue. No other name will suffice. How perpetually the Apostles charge home the murder of Jesus on their judges! How indifferent they were to human opinion! (13) Iron placed against a magnet partakes of its quality. (16) The results of Christianity are its incontestable proofs.

Their own Company (23-37).—Like draws to like. Judas to his own place; the Apostles to the upper room. The best answer to threats is prayer. Their one petition was for boldness. They were indifferent to their own safety, so long as their Master was glorified. (29) The word translated "servant" is "bond-slave," and differs from the "servant" of vv. 27 and 30. (31) The answer came in another outpouring of the Spirit. Repeated fillings are our privilege. They asked for boldness and obtained it, and in addition, as the remainder of this chapter shows, there was the spirit of love, of generosity, and of great grace. (34) The answer to the demand for increased contributions to missionary work will come, not so much in response to eloquent appeals as though the infusion by the Holy Ghost of our Master's enthusiasm for the souls of men.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 6.—ACTS V.

Satan in Paradise (1-11).—Note the contrast between Ananias and Barnabas. The same words are used of each. The sin of Ananias was, not in keeping back a part, but in pretending to have brought all. He wanted to be accounted a saint, and yet to hold something of the world. A very little piece of the world hidden in the heart may ruin our noblest efforts! The Apostle had no doubt as to the personality of the Holy Spirit. He was a Person that could be lied unto and tempted. The interchange of the words "Holy Ghost" and "God" in vv. 4-9, are in keeping with his Deity.

Sunlight and Shadow (12-16).—The disciples were in perfect accord with each other, and in living union with Christ. All true conversions are added to Him. Jesus through his people continues his work of healing and still walks on the earth.

The High Priest (14-28).—Prison doors cannot bar out help from above. The life must be manifested. Men may easier imprison the dawn than the love of God. The High Priest forbears to speak of Jesus, save as "this man," and betrays a lurking dread that somehow they would be reckoned with for the death on Calvary.

The Apostles (29-32).—There is a great contrast between the "we" of the Pharisees, straitly charging, and the "we" of the Apostle obeying God only; between "Ye slew," and "God raised up." Con the titles of Christ: Prince, Saviour, the Giver not only of forgiveness, but of repentance. (32) Through the ages the witness of the Church has been accompanied by that of the Holy Ghost, who has energised through the lives of the saints and revivals of religion. Testimony for the Holy Gospel is secured for ever through the Holy Ghost.

Gamaliel (33-42).—There need have been no "if" in Gamaliel's mind as to whether that movement was of God. The character and influence of Christ put that beyond a doubt. It is not for us to leave God in the great battlefield of earth, but to take his side. Let us be quick to determine his Presence in the beginnings of great movements, and identify ourselves with them. But how signally has Christianity satisfied this test; it is filling the world, and has survived the utmost efforts of men to extinguish it.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 7.—ACTS VI.

The Choice of Deacons (1-6).—These were Hellenist Jews, born in Alexandria and elsewhere. It is always better to deal with the cause of which murmuring is symptomatic, than by soft speeches to palliate it on a single occasion. The Apostles were divinely directed to take this opportunity of instituting a new order to deal with questions of finance. So lofty a duty as Christian philanthropy should be attended to, but it should not lead us to forsake the Word of God. (3) Even the financiers of the Church should be men of conspicuous spiritual power. Good report is a prime necessity for those that conduct public interests, and superintend public money. Repeated stress in these early chapters is laid on the fulness of life and wisdom and power imparted by the Holy Spirit.

The Increase in Word (7).—These priests were probably first arrested by the rending of the veil at the Crucifixion. They were devout men, and were learning to see the spiritual fulfilment in Christ of prophecy and Levitical institutions.

Stephen (8-15).—Probably Saul of Tarsus is included in "them of Cilicia." See how the gifts of Stephen grew as he yielded himself to the Spirit. Full of faith at the outset, he became full of grace and power, and then of wisdom and irresistible speech. The old order was slowly changing. It was not to be surprised at that its votaries massed themselves in strong efforts to retain it. But in spite of their opposition, Jesus of Nazareth has changed and is changing all. The angel-face is the reflection of the light of God in the heart. Within are born the light and shade that chase each other over the face of man. Seek to have Christ by his Spirit in thy heart; so shall his transfiguring light be on thy face.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 8.—ACTS VII.

Stephen's Address (1-53).—This speech, spoken without doubt in the presence of Saul of Tarsus, reappears in different forms in his addresses. It seems to us little more than a recital of Hebrew history, but it shows how perpetually God's purpose was fulfilled through agents and in directions that lay apart from the main line of human expectation. Abraham, called from Charran; Joseph envied, and sold, yet the deliverer; Moses, cast out to die, and refused by his own people, yet chosen to lead Israel out of bondage. The inference was that it would be only in keeping with the past if Jesus of Nazareth should indeed be the God-sent Messiah. No men have suffered as the prophets have. Whenever God speaks in man, his voice arouses the most virulent hatred.

Stephen's Vision and Death (54-60).—Stephen was a polished shaft. There was no rust in him to prevent the blade of the Word cutting to the heart. Holy-Ghost-filled men see with the inward eye. What a contrast between his tranquillity and those raging fanatics! "Son of Man" lays stress on the human aspect of Christ's nature, "standing" on his mediation and intercession. If Christ's manifested presence made Stephen's death a falling asleep, what will it not do for our death when it comes! Do not dread that supreme event. He will be near to receive your spirit. Stephen did not fear for himself, but for his persecutors. When we are at leisure from personal fear, we can pour forth our hearts in intercession. That sight was the seed of a new life to the young man Saul. It haunted him.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 9.—ACTS VIII.

Devout Men (1-3).—God cares for the bodies of his saints. Stephen's death was the signal for persecution that scattered the coals of the fire far and wide. The thought of that sweet young martyr must have led the host of the Church in many a dark day. He must have been to the early Christians what McCheyne has been to some of us.

Samaria (4-25).—It seemed impossible to keep the deacons wholly to their new duties. See how the love of Christ forces men to proclaim Him! The despised Samaria gives a welcome to the Gospel which Jerusalem withheld. Simon attracted people to himself, he was some great one. The Gospel fixes our heart on Jesus Christ. (13) His faith was spurious. He believed about, rather than in Christ. (15) There is a ministry of the Holy Spirit which does not depend on the touch, but on the prayer of a good man. (18) How evidently Simon's religion was a false system, since he looked on Peter's work as a system of magic like his own had been, and supposed the Spirit of God could be communicated apart from character. A right heart means right conceptions.

Philip (26-40).—How strange are the commissions of the Holy Ghost? Philip must have grudged to leave the Samaritan revival, and to take a long journey into the heart of the desert! But his journey was so timed as to give the opportunity of winning for Christ a man who was eagerly seeking the light, and who would powerfully influence his country. The Bible is good for a travelling companion. Take it on your journeys. Jesus is the key to its mysteries. Live up to the light you have, and God will contrive that more should break on you. The new convert should seal his faith by confession.

BERMONDSEY.—The seventeenth anniversary gatherings of the Bermondsey Ragged School Mission took place in the Gedling-street Mission-hall on Thursday, Jan. 17. Mr. M. H. Newton presided, and spoke a few encouraging words to the workers who, with happy results, had been engaging in spiritual lifeboat service during the past year. Mr. John Davis, in the course of an earnest and characteristic address, stated that since their last annual gathering no fewer than 117 persons had been dealt with there individually with regard to salvation. Messrs. R. Smith and William Carley afterwards added a few practical words.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

FEBRUARY 10.

CHRIST AND THE CHILDREN.—Matt. xviii. 1-14.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Verse 14.

THE question (verse 1) needs to be read in connection with Mark ix. 33 and Luke ix. 46. There was nothing to be commended in it. The disciples were not concerned to know the elements of character which constitute true greatness, but were ambitious for position and power. The meekness and lowliness of Christ had been a continual reproof to the spirit of ambition; and just at that time, when his own passion was before his mind, the question must have been especially unwelcome to Him. How little sympathy they had with Him!

Our Lord's answer is contained in this lesson. We may be thankful for a foolish question which led to such teaching as this concerning Christ and the children.

Verses 2-3.—Conversion, or to "turn" (R.V.) from this ambitious spirit, and to become childlike is needful; not only for greatness in the Kingdom, but even for entrance into it. The lesson was enforced by the appearance of the child, first set in the midst, then taken by Jesus into his arms (Mark ix. 36). Tradition says that this child was the far-famed Ignatius, who became Bishop of Antioch, and suffered martyrdom in Rome in A.D. 107. The tradition rests upon no fact of history. The lesson is important—that children have not to become men before they can be saved, but men have to become like children.

Verses 4-5.—As the spirit of humility is needful for entering the Kingdom, so the highest greatness in the Kingdom is attained by him who is most humble. Self-abnegation, not self-exaltation, is the way to greatness.

Verses 6-9.—There had been a solemn warning in verse 3. The spirit the disciples were cherishing was one which would exclude them, because it would unfit them for the Kingdom of Heaven. There are more solemn warnings still. The words teach us (1) that we may expect children to be converted. Jesus speaks, not of men who are childlike, but of "little ones that believe in Me" (6). Their very simplicity, humility, trustfulness, make them more ready to believe in Jesus. It is one of the greatest evils any church or parent can commit to suggest to the children that they are too young to be saved. Every year added to their life makes their ultimate conversion less likely. (2) That those little ones may be offended, or made to stumble. Perhaps by refusing to receive them, as the disciples did (comp. v. with xix. 13). By imposing on their simplicity and guilessness to lead them astray. By seeking to corrupt the minds of children, or to lead them into sinful habits that ruin the life for time and eternity. Or, by inconsistency of life before them. They are imitators, and any professing Christian whose example is not safe for young people to follow is unconsciously guilty of this sin. (3) That we may offend them by that which is an offence to us. Our hand may do wrong; our foot may tread in evil or doubtful paths; our eye may be anything but single. Habits that are as dear to us as these members of the body are a cause of stumbling to ourselves as well as to others. Remember Cranmer's right hand which had written his recantation, and which the martyr described as "This unworthy hand." For others' sakes and for our own it is needful to part with the dearest thing that it is an occasion of stumbling. (4) That very solemn results follow from this sin. What a picture our Lord gives us! A man with a heavy millstone securely fastened about his neck, and immediately sinking into the depth of the sea. Even that doom is better than the judgment awaiting those who ensnare the little ones.

Verses 10-14. Another warning is here, against despising—or treating with contempt—even one of the little ones. This is enforced by three considerations. (1) Angels have special charge of them. The idea that "angels" means their own spirits after death is without any Scripture authority. But there is abundant Scripture for believing that literal angels—though unseen—are in attendance upon the little ones, and tendering to them such ministries as may be possible. (see Heb. i. 14; Psa. xxxiv. 7; xci. 11-12). "Behold the face" means—have free access to the Father. To despise those for whom God makes such provision is to prove ourselves out of harmony with Him. (2) Jesus has come to seek them. To Him they are like the lost sheep, exposed to fearful peril, for whose sake He is willing to risk his life, and in whose salvation He finds greatest joy. It is no small privilege to have fellowship with Him in a work that ministers so greatly to his delight. (3) The Father Himself values them (14). So far from willing that they should perish He wills the very opposite. Should not this verse encourage us to seek the conversion of children with great confidence?

For the Young.

HE SAID HE WOULD.

IN a little town about twenty miles from Glasgow lived Widow Ross and her two boys. She was wont to say, "Eh, they're good boys enough, but I'm feared for them. I canna keep them in the house; they're aye efter playin' aboot in yon stream, or awa' in the fields."

It was quite true. Jimmie and Alec Ross were to be seen always together, when out of school, taking their home-made fishing tackle to the bridge over the stream, where they would sit for hours watching and waiting, as only true anglers can, for the fish that never rose to their bait; or flying kites in the pastures near.

One day Alec fell into the stream, and he was afraid to go home until his clothes were dry; so, divesting himself of half of them, he laid them out in the sun. When they were no longer wet, he took off the remaining sticky garments, putting on the partially dry ones, and so, by instalments, managed to get the water out of his clothes.

"Oh, Jimmie," he said the next morning to his brother, "ma heid is a' wrang—it's too heavy for ma body. Ye'll ha'e to gang to school by yersel'; I'm fairly sick."

And so he was. He never went to school again; but in a fortnight's time was lying under the sods of a new-made grave in the little churchyard, while Jimmie was the most disconsolate boy on earth. He had lost his loved playmate, his only brother, and felt himself partly to blame for the fever brought on by Alec's fall into the stream, and sitting partially clad in wet clothes.

"What will ye do when I'm awa'?" Alec had asked two days before he died. He was quite conscious, quite happy; but he thought of Jimmie's unhappiness.

"What will you do, Alec, when I'm no' by?" was Jimmie's way of answering his brother's question.

"I'll be with Jesus Himsel' all the time," was Alec's happy and satisfied answer. He had no doubts; he thought only of poor Jimmie, left alone.

"Then I'll ha'e Him too! Ay, I promise ye I will."

Jimmie's decision completed Alec's happiness. It was the one thing about which they had not agreed. Jimmie could never be made to see himself a sinner. "Let me be," he would say to Alec. "Gin I find it oot, ye'll soon know. But I mun find it oot mysel'."

A year after Alec's death, he appeared among the candidates for church-membership. Many regarded him as too young—one of the elders suggested this to Jimmie's pastor. "Such a young boy may not know his own mind; it is over early for him to be received."

"Let him speak for himself; I can trust him," said his pastor.

When the examination was about half through, Jimmie was asked, "What did you do when you felt you were a sinner?"

"I went to Jesus, and told Him how sorry I was, and asked to be forgiven."

"And do you think He heard you, and forgave you your sins?"

"No, sir," said Jimmie; "I don't think, I know He did."

A frown shadowed the face of the examiners at such boldness. "Be careful what you say, my son. How do you know that the Lord Jesus has pardoned you?"

It really looked as if they were putting stumbling-blocks in the way of Jimmie's acknowledgment as a Christian.

"He said He would," said the boy, with a look of surprise.

"He said He would—what do you mean?" they asked.

"He said that if I confessed my sins, He was faithful and just, and would forgive them; and I confessed them, and He forgave them, sir; I know He did, because He said He would."

They believed him this time; but he was nearly crying now.

"Never mind, sonnie," said his pastor; "they wanted to be quite sure that you knew. I know you as a Christian; they did not."

"Eh, but yon laddie has got the right of it," said one of the elders. "Flesh and blood have not revealed it to him, but God."

James Ross is a man now, but he is not one whit shaken in his faith. "He—God—said so" is still his charter. M. B. GERDS.

A MISSION TO YOUNG PEOPLE was held in St. Peter's parish, Colchester, from Jan. 12 to 20, by Mr. Hutchinson. This was his second visit, and though he was well received on the former occasion, his presence was regarded with increased interest on this latter visit. The attendances were large, and the addresses were listened to with the closest attention. There is every reason to believe that great good was done, not only amongst the children, but amongst the workers. J. M. LAYCOCK, Vicar of St. Peter's, Colchester.

THE BATON.

A THOUSAND voices had poured forth a glorious chorus, and the conductor of the choir laid down his baton with relief and satisfaction.

"I'm sure I did that well," said the baton to the music-stand on which it laid.

"Did what well?"

"Conducted that chorus."

"Foolish thing," said the stand; "you had about as much to do with it as I had."

"You!" shouted the baton indignantly, "Did you not see that my movements regulated the speed at which the singers went, called in the bass, or tenor, or alto, or signalled to the treble to cease; bade them increase their voices or diminish them?"

"I saw that the master used you to signify his commands, but you were little more than nothing in the business."

"You are simply jealous of me, that's all," retorted the baton. "Without me this music would be all confusion."

The master rose, and without lifting the baton gave the signal for his singers to be ready, he had, absent-minded man that he was, forgotten where he had laid it, so seized a roll of music and used that with which to conduct. When the piece ended, the stand shook with laughter.

"What did you do that time?" it asked of the discomfited baton; but there was no reply, the baton was bitterly disappointed and humbled.

MISSION WORK IN UGANDA.

WE have received some further extracts from the private correspondence of Mr. R. H. Leakey, of the C.M.S. Mission in Uganda. Writing from Kiti, Buganda, on October 3, he says:—

We are anxiously looking out for the Bishop. We hope and pray that he will bring a large reinforcement, as we are sadly short-handed, and have to leave many open doors unentered. I am at present on a tour of itineration near the capital. I spent the greater part of this morning with a crowd of natives round me asking a number of questions about various passages in the New Testament that they wanted explained. I am hoping to have five days of special services—a sort of mission, in fact—and then I shall continue the ordinary classes again. Here, as at home, the people read the Bible and go to church, but do not see that the gift of God, eternal life, is for them, and is to be received by faith, not by works. Many say, when asked whether they have eternal life, that they have not read enough yet, but they will find it when they have read the required amount.

THE PLEDGE-SIGNING CRUSADE is being taken up all over the country, and good meetings have been held in Leicester, Loughborough, Hitchin, Dorking, Watford, and Woodford.

Some London Missions.

THE SHOREDITCH TABERNACLE MISSIONS.

The unevangelised masses of our populations call for many forms of Christian effort, and one thanks God that so many faithful witnesses have been led to plant undenominational missions here and there in the dark corners of this great city. But while fully valuing these, as indeed this series of sketches has shown, one feels that every Christian Church ought to be the focus of a group of missions, radiating from and finding workers and support in the parent congregation. Many churches are now awake to the necessities of the case, and one could name quite a number of different denominations which are centres of associated missions.

A good example of this congregational activity is presented by Shoreditch Tabernacle, which has now eight missions in full operation, carried on by over three hundred voluntary workers, members of the Tabernacle, and doing solid work in very dark places. On Sunday week I visited some of these, and found them scattered over a wide area.

IN GIBRALTAR-WALK,

a very old-fashioned corner of Bethnal Green, I found the chapel, crowded by plain working people. Here, under the care of Mr. Ed. Smith, a many-sided and vigorous work is going on, with a good ragged-school, Bible-classes, mothers' meeting, cripples' aid branch (R.S.U.), house-to-house visitation, and temperance effort. It is, as one of the members said, a work carried on by the poor for the poor, and God is blessing it greatly. The pressing need at present is more room—the place is crowded out.

Leaving Gibraltar-walk, I passed along the Bethnal-green, Shoreditch, Hackney, and Kingsland-roads, grieved and saddened by the heedless hosts of young people promenading, in loose and frivolous fashion, the pavements. A mile and a-half away I found in a back street the next mission I sought.

SHAP-STREET MISSION

is much smaller than Gibraltar-walk; but I was delighted to find the Gospel being clearly preached to very poor people. The ragged school, held in an adjoining Board School, numbers 300 scholars, while various mission agencies are well sustained.

Coming down the Kingsland-road, I looked in at a mission, under the railway arch hard by Shoreditch Station. This also is a Tabernacle branch, and a centre of earnest and fruitful work.

Reaching the Tabernacle itself, I found Mr. Cuff's evening service over, and his great congregation just breaking up, for while 300 were out working, the huge building was full. My object, however, was not to see the regular service, but to visit a mission-hall, behind the Tabernacle, where a later is held by an earnest working man. I was glad to find some of the Tabernacle choir dropping in to brighten the singing. It had need of brightening; for rarely have I seen—save, perhaps, at a free tea—such poor and miserable men and women at a Gospel service. They have learned to come just as they are—"dirt, clothes, babies and all." Many had brought husband as well, but most had come without him. About 200, who seemed sorely to need the comfort of the Gospel, listened quietly as the old, old story was told forth. Surely these workers, in inducing such to come to a mission service, are solving the problem of reaching and helping the poor; and they are doing it, as they say, "by the Gospel, the Gospel only."

SERVICE FOR THE LOWEST CLASSES

Such are a few of the associated Missions carried on by Pastor Cuff and his helpers—for the Mission work itself in all its varied and far-reaching branches, no appeal is made: they are supported by the Tabernacle. But a moment's consideration will convince the reader that work of this kind must bring Mr. Cuff into contact with an overwhelming amount of poverty. For the past twenty-two years he and his helpers have fed, clothed, and aided hundreds of the poor, sick, and aged, whose appeals for sympathy and help are piteous and urgent. "We are in the midst of a vast mass of the very poor, and our methods of quietly and regularly visiting from room to room bring us into close contact with them. Most distressing and deserving cases are on our hands. We never hold a service here without facing poverty, sickness, want, and trouble. It often makes my heart ache, and I know not what to do. I could give hundreds of cases, helped up from the depths and dregs of humanity, many of whom are now members of other Churches and doing well."

Relief work in various forms is actively carried on so far as the funds permit. Mrs. Cuff oversees the clothing department, stopped now for want of funds. The poor are personally known to the workers, and the utmost care is taken to secure that only the deserving are helped. Every penny sent for relief goes direct and without deduction to the poor: all the labour of every kind being given freely. The need is at present very great. Communications should be made to Rev. W. Cuff, Shoreditch Tabernacle, Hackney-road, E.

THE SOHO MISSION.

From Shoreditch it is a far cry to Soho, beloved of French refugees, where, again, the need for Christian work is overwhelming. The Soho Mission was started forty-six years ago by the famous Dr. Brock, of Bloomsbury, and to it the late Rev. G. W. McCree gave a quarter of a century's devoted labour. For the past twenty-one years, however, it has been under the care of Mr. William Harrison, whose labours have been much blessed of God.

The mission hall, formerly a Baptist Chapel, over a hundred years old, is in a narrow by-street, inhabited mostly by Russian Jews. All around are thousands of French, German, Italian, and Jewish poor, as well as masses of our own kinsfolk. Amongst these an earnest work is going on. Thirty voluntary visitors go from room to room, for the majority occupy single rooms, and rarely do they meet with a rebuff. Many are Roman Catholics, Greeks, sceptics, or even anarchists, but the Christian visitor is generally welcomed. The Gospel services Sunday and week-day are well attended, while the Sunday-schools are crowded. The Band of Hope is said to be "one of the largest in London." The Bible classes, prayer meetings, mothers' meetings (500 members), and sewing classes are well sustained. So far as I have been able to ascertain, the whole Mission is full of life and go.

The workers attach great importance to open-air preaching, and Sunday and week-day services are held at busy centres. The is remarkable. It is held near the Prince of Wales' Theatre, just at the point where London's West End sin finds its centre. Numbers of flashly-dressed fashionable women and fast men listen, Sunday after Sunday, to the preaching of the Gospel. It is noted that it is the speaking rather than the singing which attracts them. Mr. Harrison himself conducts this service.

Arduous but resultful work is also carried on in the common lodging houses. In the Municipal Lodging House, Parker-street, services are held on Lord's Day evenings, as well as in many other kitchens. Many have been saved from these refuges of despair, and one of the best helpers in the Mission was rescued, some years ago, from a house of the lowest type.

Apart from all this, the wail of poverty rings all round, and a well organised system of relief is in operation, limited only by lack of funds. The distress endured by many who seem outwardly respectable is very pitiful. During the winter also a weekly dinner (Irish stew) is given to 400 starving children.

Moreover, work of a special kind is carried on among the sandwich-men, of whom there are about 3000 in the district, while, at an average, only some 500 to 600 get boards each day, the rest having to exist as they can. As far as possible, a meeting for boardmen is arranged every fortnight; free meals are given occasionally, and the Gospel is set forth, not without blessed results. Many of these men are old soldiers, and Mr. Harrison is much exercised at present as to discharged soldiers who are being sent out in such large numbers from the army, full often to swell, eventually, the ranks of the unemployed. He believes that here lies a serious problem which must be grappled with unless these men are to be left to become a peril to the community.

Amongst these, as well as among the English and foreign poor of the district, the Soho and St. Giles's Mission is doing a valuable work in which it well deserves sympathy and aid. Mr. Harrison's address is 20, Merrick-square, Newington, S.E.

MISSION BOX FOR THE NEW HEBRIDES.—Friends having expressed a desire to send mission goods to Rev. Oscar Michelsen, of Tongoa, New Hebrides, Mr. Chas. B. Jackson, of 63, Threadneedle-street, E.C., has kindly undertaken to receive, pack, and forward any gifts that may be sent to him. Mr. Jackson will be pleased to give full particulars regarding the kind of goods that are suitable.

MISSION AT CHRIST CHURCH.

Mr. W. R. Lane has concluded a very successful mission in this church, which has caused much joy in the neighbourhood. Previous to his coming, there had been a great movement against drink, a large number of persons having taken the pledge in the various meetings during the last four weeks. There was also a spirit of prayer and anticipation. But the results have far exceeded anticipation, and have brought to light a large amount of seed, sown through previous months, but apparently lost.

Churches hardly realise the immense value of an evangelist's visit in this direction. Some ministers are specially adapted for sowing, but they need a strong bright loving soul to come to help them to gather in the sheaves. Mr. Lane has unusual qualifications for this work. His soldier-like presence, powerful voice, and bright smile; his grip of the Gospel and fondness for old authors with their quaint similitudes; his tremendous earnestness; his wonderful tact in dealing with an after-meeting, are all notable elements in his success. Above all, he does his work in living dependence on the Holy Spirit.

We have about 250 names and addresses of those who have come into the inquiry room, and in many cases husbands and wives have stepped into the Kingdom together.

On one occasion, Mr. Lane exhibited the magnificent series of Pilgrim's Progress slides painted for the use of Pastor Frank White, who, alas! is now unable to use them, but kindly lent them. Mr. Lane made admirable use of them. They drew an immense audience, and so helped the Mission, and impressed the people with helpful truths in a vivid and striking fashion. I very much want to raise money enough to purchase these slides and lantern for Mr. Lane's use throughout the country. It seems a pity for them to be lying idle, when he could make such excellent use of them. They would cost in all about £60. Would friends everywhere, who value and have been benefited by Mr. Lane's work, send me gifts towards the purchase?

MRS. BAEYERTZ AT GLASGOW.

A remarkable mission, conducted by Mrs. Baeyertz in Langside Free Church, Glasgow, has been brought to a close. A work of grace has been going on steadily in this congregation for months, and much prayer was offered for this Mission, so that the ground was well prepared for this special effort. The meetings were from the first largely attended, but during the second week the church was crowded. On Sabbath morning hundreds were turned away who sought admission. The interest culminated in the farewell meeting, when the Established Church had to be secured to accommodate the numbers who made application for tickets of admission. After the church was crowded to excess, an overflow meeting of several hundreds was held in the Free Church.

Mrs. Baeyertz held two meetings daily—an afternoon Bible reading for Christians, and an evangelistic service in the evening. During the fortnight the mission lasted, over 400 persons were dealt with in the inquiry-room. Most of these professed to have decided for Christ. For a suburban district this is an encouraging result of a fortnight's mission. More important even than the numbers who professed conversion has been the deep impression produced on Christians by the Bible readings. The subjects were of a most practical kind. Many Christians who hitherto were content to live on a low level of spiritual life have had opened up to them unsuspected possibilities of attainment, and have entered on the blessed life of full consecration to God.

Mrs. Baeyertz begins her next mission in Kilmarnock, and great expectations are awakened.

YOUNG MEN IN LONDON.—On Wednesday last week, Rev. and Mrs. W. Darlow Sarjeant, held a reception at 1, Wyndham-place, Bryanston-square, W., the house which is to form the nucleus of proposed Christian Homes for Young Men in various parts of London. About 250 visitors were present. Mr. F. W. Broadbent, of St. Bartholomew's Hospital, has undertaken the position of warden of the settlement.

BISHOP J. M. THOBURN, D.D. LL.D.

We have pleasure to-day in giving a sketch, by a well-informed writer, of one of the most active workers in the great Indian field.

James M. Thoburn, Missionary Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church for India and Malaysia, is of Scotch-Irish ancestry, and was born at St. Clairsville, Ohio, 1836. Left fatherless at the early age of fourteen, he at once began to think of his future course in life, and in a few months decided, as a preliminary step to his final decision, to pursue an ordinary course of college study. His widowed mother, who fully approved his decision, was able to assist him during his first two years at college, after which he was able to earn enough by teaching to enable him to complete the college course. It was while engaged in teaching, at the age of seventeen, that he received his first impression that his life was to be spent in the foreign mission field. This call was clear and distinct, and was the more remarkable from the fact that it was received before he had any decided religious experience.

Graduating at the age of twenty-one, Mr. Thoburn at once accepted an appointment as junior preacher on a county circuit, where he remained nearly two years. He had become clearly convinced that God had called him to preach the Gospel of Jesus Christ, but in the meantime his conviction of a call to the foreign field had been growing stronger, and in the latter part of 1858 it began to assume a more definite shape. He felt a clear impression that God was moving him to offer himself for India.

The Bishop tells the story of how the crisis was reached in his book, "My Missionary Apprenticeship."* An engagement to preach at a neighbouring village brought his presiding elder within the bounds of his circuit, and furnished him with the opportunity of seeking the advice which he desired. Making his way to the house where the elder was staying, Mr. Thoburn found him warming his feet at the stove, for it was a snowy morning. After the usual greetings, the elder remarked:—

"I met Bishop James on the train this morning."

"Bishop James! What can he be doing out here?"

"He is on his way West, looking for missionaries for India. He wants six immediately."

My heart leaped into my throat, but before I could say anything, the elder continued—

"James, how would you like to go?"

"It is very singular," I said; "but I have come here with the special purpose of asking your advice about going to India."

"Well, I must tell you that you have been in my mind all the morning. I incline to think you ought to go. I have felt so ever since the Bishop told me his errand."

Let the subject of our sketch tell how the solemn crisis was met:—

> I went up stairs to the little prophet-chamber and knelt down to seek for guidance from above, but I could not pray. God poured his Spirit upon me from on high, and my heart so overflowed with a hallowed feeling of love and joy, that I could not utter a word. Before I could ask God had answered. It was not so much a call to India that I received, as an acceptance for India. It was my "burning bush." It has followed me through all the years which have passed like a Divine Presence, and a hundred times when wearied and oppressed with doubts and discouragements have I fallen on my knees and pleaded with God, by the hallowed memories of that hour of blessing, to prove faithful to the promise of his love and care, which was then burned into my very soul.

The young missionary arrived in Calcutta, August 21, 1859, and at once proceeded to North India, where a new mission had been opened by the Church with which he was connected. His first appointment was to Naini Tal, among the Himalayas, where he preached both to natives and Europeans. In 1865 he was transferred to Pauri, in the remote mountain province of Garhwal. Here he remained two years, and before leaving he was permitted to organise a little church with a dozen members. When he revisited this remote station, about a year ago, he found a Christian community of 800 persons. At the beginning of 1868 he was transferred to Moradabad, where he remained two years. While stationed here he made many tours through the towns and remote villages of Western Rohilcund, and was thus brought into close contact with the simple villagers, especially of the lower castes, and he began to perceive that many of them were peculiarly accessible to missionary effort. During one of these tours he baptized one hundred and twenty-five persons, a measure of success which at that time was considered very extraordinary.

In 1870 Dr. Thoburn was transferred to Lucknow, and four years later to Calcutta, where he has since resided. While at Lucknow he was providentially led to give a large portion of his time to preaching to Europeans and Eurasians, both in Lucknow and other cities in North India. When he reached Calcutta he found a wide door open before him among English-speaking classes, and within a few weeks no church or hall large enough to hold the numbers that thronged to hear him could be found. A new theatre was opened in the course of the year, and the bold step was taken of renting this for Sunday evening services. The theatre from the first proved too small for the audiences which eagerly gathered to hear the Word, and within two months it was announced that a large church, or tabernacle, would be erected, and this enterprise was at once taken in hand and pushed to successful competition. Here for nine years Dr. Thoburn preached to the largest Protestant congregation in Asia, the recognised leader of aggressive, evangelical, and mssionary effort in the metropolis, and in the meanwhile doing a large amount of evangelistic work in India, Burma, and Malaysia. In the two last named countries he was permitted to found missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church, among the most successful to be found in any part of the world. The blessing of God has always attended his preaching, and a noteworthy feature of the work he has initiated has invariably been its permanency. While never forgetting that his first duty is to the native millions, he has been careful to minister to Europeans and Indians wherever God has opened a way of access to them.

In May, 1888, after a long and varied experience in India, Dr. Thoburn was elected Missionary Bishop for India and Malaysia, and thereby placed in superintendence of all the missions of the Methodist Episcopal Church in Southern Asia. According to the theory of his Church, the Bishop does not belong to a higher order of ministers, but merely administers the duties of a higher office. Hence Bishop Thoburn, now well known throughout his vast field, remains among his brethren without any visible change in his style of living or manner of working, in spirit, aim and effort, as truly a missionary as ever.

During six years of his episcopal administration the work which he superintends has greatly prospered. The missionaries within his jurisdiction are giving the Gospel to the millions in sixteen different languages, and the converts of all ages number over 80,000. For three years past literally thousands of the poor villagers have been asking for preachers and teachers to "show them how to be Christians." This work has assumed very large proportions and continues to extend every year. The field seems practically unlimited. A dozen missionaries affirm that there are always not less than twenty thousand of the low caste natives not only willing, but eager to become Christians, but these good men have learned that such people cannot safely be admitted to the privileges of the Christian Church unless ample provision is made for their instruction after baptism. Hence they constantly appeal to their friends at home, and in a measure to the whole Christian world, for means to extend a work which might in the near future be made to embrace a million souls.

As a preacher Bishop Thoburn is direct and intensely practical, and while none are more careful than he to exalt Christ as a present and all-sufficient Saviour, he is especially effective in showing the relation which the Gospel sustains to the perplexing social problems of the day. In the work of philanthropic and social reform he has shown remarkable capacity for wise and successful leadership. But it is as the executive of a great Church, presiding in its councils, supervising the disposition of its forces, directing its aggressive efforts, and planning for widespread conquest, that Bishop Thoburn most freely displays the great qualities of mind and heart with which God has endowed him. His courageous faith and capacity for bearing burdens of care and responsibility on behalf of the Church he serves are little less than phenomenal. In all his many-sided work he is most efficiently aided by Mrs. Thoburn, a lady of rare personal worth and spiritual qualifications for the important and conspicuous position which she admirably fills. To this honoured servant of God and the elect lady whom God has given him for help-meet, the cause of Indian Missions owes more than the present generation can rightly estimate.

VIGILANCE ASSOCIATION.

PREVENTIVE HOME, URSWICK-ROAD, HACKNEY.

This branch of our work is daily proving a most useful adjunct to the Association. Since taking over the Home from Mrs. Lauder (née Miss Forsaith) ten months ago, we have been able to help special cases of children and young girls coming to us, for whom we have always found it so difficult to obtain vacancies. We are now able to keep those in whom we are interested under our own supervision, and thus to watch their subsequent career. Some of the girls have been placed in service, and are doing well.

The discipline of the Home is that of a well-regulated family, and each one is aware that she will be trusted until she forfeits the privilege of such confidence. The response to this method is most encouraging, and we have seldom to complain of any failure. We should welcome visitors to see the Home, and feel sure that this would ensure a personal interest in the girls. We have some children there who are not only orphans, but also absolutely friendless, to whom a motherly loving interest would be a wonderful help both now and when they leave us for service.

THE MEDICAL HOME FOR WOMEN

is full, as usual, and we should like to give some instances of the cases received, but those who know the nature of the work are aware of its difficulties. The first preference is given to young applicants for admission, whom we are anxious to save from the Lock wards of the general hospital. It cannot be possible that the Christian public will be unresponsive to the fact that one little girl of ten is an inmate, two other children whose ages are respectively seven and eleven are waiting to be received as soon as vacancies occur. These things ought not so to be, but since they are, and since these awful evils exist, it is surely for us to tend the helpless children. We want to keep an open door for them, where they can have all the womanly care and skilful tendencies of a lady doctor and Christian nurses. Whilst thanking our friends for their remembrance in practical form, we shall be very glad if it is still more frequent and generous.

BRITISH SEAMEN IN BRAZIL.—On Christmas Day at the Seamen's Home, Mr. Holms, who is sailors' missionary at the port of Pernambuco, made an effort to gladden the hearts of his own countrymen, and, at the same time, to win them for Christ. Dinner and tea were provided, and some thirty men of various nationalities, chiefly English, sat down. Mr. Holms showed his magic lantern, and while the pictures were on the sheet the story of the birth of Christ was told to a most attentive audience of rough sailors. Some short, pointed addresses were also given. If any friends could give Mr. Holmes a few lantern slides it would greatly help him in his work.

PROPHETIC CONFERENCE.

A profitable conference on prophecy was held at Kilburn Hall on Thursday and Friday last. The attendance was large at all the meetings, and the Lord's presence was much realised. Many testimonies of blessing have since been received.

Mr. W. H. Seagram presided at the opening meeting, and advised Christian forbearance on points of difference in detail. Dr. Gritton showed the difference between accomplishment and fulfilment, and gave a warning as to the danger of looking for fulfilment of prophecy from a mere natural standpoint. Dr. Pentecost followed with an able address, giving a general outline of Bible teaching on the Lord's second coming. He was specially good in illustration.

On Thursday evening Hon. R. Moreton presided. Pastor Fuller Gooch took up the coming of the Lord from a practical standpoint. Mr. J. J. Sims followed with a brief address on the great facts which centre around the Lord's return.

On Friday afternoon Sir Robert Phayre presided. Col. Morton spoke specially in reference to the Lord's coming to reign, quoting from the Psalms to show how clearly his coming kingdom is foretold. Mr. George Hucklesby spoke on the different aspects of "the Hope" as being a comforting hope, a living hope, a purifying hope, and an energising hope.

The closing meeting was a time of much power and blessing. Mr. R. C. Morgan presided, and struck the keynote by pointing out the distress and perplexity in the world as signs distinctly connected with the Lord's return. Mr. Purcell, of Brighton, took up 1 Thess. v. 10, as the plain proof that when the Lord came for his saints all would be taken up. Mr. J. J. Sims gave an exposition of Numb. xxiv. 15-25. Mr. Oscar Owers closed the conference with the fitting question: "What result is all this to have on our lives? Are we going to live like men that wait for their Lord?" This solemn question was felt by all.

TOWER HAMLETS MISSION.

The distress in the East End has now become so keen and pressing that I trust you will allow me to plead for help for the literally starving families by whom we are surrounded. Our visitors report case after case of homes in which there is no fire and the children are crying for bread.

We have had sufficient experience during a quarter of a century to prevent our being imposed upon by those we know to be worthless. We are daily inundated with deserving applicants whom we are unable to assist, as our funds are entirely exhausted. Fredk. N. Charrington.

TO A SNOW MOUNTAIN.

White monument of changelessness!
Yet, changing ever, day by day;
Teach me thy wondrous steadfastness,
Though varying lights around shall play.
Thy spotlessness to me impart;
That mystery I long to know;
O grave it deeply on my heart—
"Whiter than snow."

I would from all that's base be freed;
Be noble, self-restrained, and true,
Yea, higher yet, my spirit lead,
Till, far beneath my feet I view
All that would trammel, mar, degrade;
Thy loftiness on me bestow.
O raise to light that ne'er shall fade—
"Whiter than snow."

Thine own deep calm around me shed,
While battling in the daily strife;
Lest with but faltering steps I tread
The Narrow Way that leads to life.
Whene'er mine earthly course is run,
May I too stand, in sunset glow,
The height attained; the triumph won—
"Whiter than snow."

WEEK OF PRAYER.—Different denominations were represented at the public prayer meetings held at the School Chapel of the American Mission (Esbekieh), Cairo, Egypt. These cheerful meetings were brought about mainly through the efforts of Sir Matthew Dodsworth. All were invited.

MARCHMONT, BELLEVILLE, ONT.

In their latest report of work in connection with the placing out of young emigrants from the old country, Mr. and Mrs. Wallace state:—

"Our needs during the past year have been many and varied; we have needed much wisdom to deal aright with the 222 boys and girls of different ages, characters, and dispositions, which it has been our privilege to receive from various Homes in England and Scotland, and place out amidst happier and healthier surroundings than was their lot in the old land. Not only has this number of new arrivals been provided for, but there is always a large number of children returned for various reasons during the year, and these have all been supplied with fresh places, and helped in various ways. We seek to make the time spent in the Home on these occasions profitable, reminding them of lessons learned, and truths taught years before, and seeking to lead them to definite decision for Christ. As a result not a few go out with a new aim and purpose in life, determined by God's grace to live to his glory.

"We are glad to be able to report an unabated demand for the children; we have always more applications for well-trained boys and girls over twelve than we can supply. This is an unanswerable argument as to the need that exists, and the Canadians' appreciation of our endeavour to supply that need."

Mr. and Mrs. Wallace are now in this country preparing to take out another party of boys. Their address is 92, Wellesley-road, Croydon.

DEEP DISTRESS IN MONMOUTHSHIRE.

A correspondent of the South Wales Argus, who has been making inquiries into the state of things in the eastern valleys of Monmouthshire, gives many sad cases illustrating the deplorable straits to which many are reduced.

"Never," he says, "was there such need for help as now, for never was the distress so severe. The Pontymoile Works, the Town Forge and Osborne Works at Pontypool, and Pontnewydd Works are completely idle, with apparently no hope of re-starting, and between five and six hundred families are affected, which, roughly speaking, means between two and three thousand persons, the majority of whom are helpless children. It is quite impossible that private, unorganised charity can cope with the distress, but Mr. Wintle has found that by working on a large scale it is possible to give children a good meal at a cost of one penny per head, while for adults he was last year able to provide a meal at a fraction under fourpence per head. The mission has five branches, and at three—Pontymoile, Pontypool, and Cwmffrwdoer—meals are being daily given to children; indeed, they have never ceased at Pontymoile since August, 1893, and now they are being given at the other two branches, so marked is the destitution in consequence of the stoppage of Messrs. Tinn's large works at Pontnewydd, and the depression of the coal trade in the district. The meals for adults were continued for forty-two weeks, but then some men were able to obtain a little employment, and they were discontinued; now the need for them is imperative, and Mr. Wintle makes an earnest appeal for such financial aid as will justify him in once more commencing them. His address is, The Christian Mission, Pontymoile, Pontypool, Mon."

[Our readers have from time to time liberally helped these suffering workers, thrown out of employment by trade-depression and change. We heartily endorse the present appeal for our native county.—Ed.]

CITY HOUSES.—The seventh annual meeting of the St. Albans Bible Class, which is connected with the firm of Ward, Sturt, and Sharp, was held at 89, Wood-street, on Thursday, Mr. Frederick Sturt occupying the chair. There was a large attendance, including several of the leading members of the staff. The report stated that every Monday a meeting had been held for one hour to study various subjects in the Holy Scriptures. The average attendance had increased, thus proving that the opportunity was appreciated by many; and it was further hoped that the present year might be even more successful than the past. Following the reading of the report, an address was given by Rev. W. R. Mowll.

IRISH NOTES.

The annual appeal on behalf of Foreign Missions was held on Sunday in all the Presbyterian churches in Ireland.

As the outcome of the recent week of united prayer in Sligo a monthly united prayer meeting has been established in the town.

A successful Sunday-school conference has been held at Rathmines, Dublin, Dr. Todd attended on behalf of the Sunday-school Society of Ireland, and delivered a helpful address, full of useful hints and suggestions for teachers. Rev. S. M. Harris, J. S. Carolin, and several others took part in the proceedings.

The spiritual awakening which began some weeks ago in Belfast continues to spread in depth and breadth. During the past week Revs. Dr. Elder Cumming and John Sloan, of Glasgow, and S. R. Macphail, of Liverpool, have been engaged in work. The arrangements included a ministers' devotional meeting each day at noon, in Rosemary-street, in the centre of the city. Sectional meetings in the afternoon for the north and south sides of the city were held respectively in Duncairn and the Crescent Churches, and then in the evening an evangelistic service in each of the Presbyterian churches. As a result scores have already professed conversion, and the spiritual life of many has been deepened.

SCOTTISH NOTES.

The Dundee F.C. Office-bearers' Union have issued a strong appeal for union between the Free and U.P. churches.

Mr. John W. Barclay, a member of the Aberdeen Y.M.C.A., is about to start for mission work in Old Calabar. At the farewell meeting in Aberdeen many friends wished him God-speed.

The lectures by Rev. Geo. Wilson on Pastoral Theology at Aberdeen University have been most valuable and practical; if the students faithfully carry out his counsels in their future ministry it will create a spiritual revolution in many a Scottish parish.

Lord Overtoun presided last week at the second annual meeting of the Glasgow Auxiliary of the Paris Evangelical Missionary Society's Basutoland Mission, held in the Christian Institute. An address on the work of the mission was given by Rev. F. H. Kruger, Paris; and a resolution was adopted commending the mission to the public.

The annual meeting of the Edinburgh Auxiliary of the Christian Literature Society for India was held in the saloon of the Royal Hotel, Principal Sir William Muir presiding. The annual report, submitted by the secretary (Mr. D. M. Traill), referred to the great advance of Education in India, and stated that every year a million pupils left the schools able to read in their mother tongue. The Society aimed at counteracting the tendency to read impure literature, and this they did by the training of teachers for employment in missionary schools and in the production of healthy Christian literature.

THE STRANGERS REST.

The new report states that the "Rest" has been open weekdays and Sundays, and services held afternoon and evening, telling out "the story of Jesus and his love." In addition meetings have been held in Scandinavian, German, and other languages. The work is being blessed of God. Says a worker: "We are having a time of manifest blessing; at the close of the meeting on Sunday night, a young Belgian sailor whose father is superintendent of police in Antwerp, yielded himself to the Lord. A fine-built Englishman in the prime of life also knelt with tears to plead for forgiveness, and left praising God that light had broken in. Again at the close of last night's meeting four at least signified their acceptance of Christ as their Saviour." The English meetings have been fairly well attended throughout the year, and the results have been most encouraging. The Bible classes continue to prove times of rich blessing. Good work is also being done among Jewish, German, Scandinavian, and sailors of many nations.

Moreover, the Rest is really training converts for future mission work. During the past year some 1500 meetings have been held in the following languages: English, Swedish, German, French, Italian, Spanish, Portuguese, and Lettish, with an estimated attendance of nearly 20,000 sailors. Five dock gates are visited every Saturday. Nearly 2000 magazines and papers are given away to dock labourers weekly. Each sailor receives as far as possible a bag of books when he leaves. About 100,000 tracts were distributed last year, and many pledges taken.

The sec. is Mr. J. Theo. Isaac, 163, St. George's-street, E., who will be glad to hear from sympathisers. The work at present is in great need of help.

Letters to the Editor.

CHRISTIANS AND MONEY.

SIR,—Is it not a misinterpretation of our Lord's words, "Lay not up for yourselves treasure upon earth," to represent them as forbidding Christians to lay up anything great or small for the future needs of themselves or their families?

If this were so, how could St. Paul say to the Corinthians (2 Cor. xii. 14), "The children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children"? or to Timothy (1 Tim. v. 8), "If any provide not for his own, and specially for those of his own house, he hath denied the faith, and is worse than an infidel"?

Let me call attention to another parallel passage (in John vi. 27), where our Lord says, "Labour not for the meat which perisheth, but for that meat which endureth unto everlasting life." If in the former passage all laying up of earthly things is forbidden, then here a Christian is forbidden to work for his living; and St. Paul must have been very wrong in censuring those Thessalonians (2 Thess. iii. 11) who "worked not at all," and in declaring that "if any man would not work, neither should he eat." Surely this is a sufficiently strong reductio ad absurdum.

Such a form of words, so common in the Bible, is only the Hebrew mode of expressing a contrast or comparison between two things, of which one is of more importance than the other, without the latter being forbidden—but, it may be, even positively commanded, in its proper place and degree.

And so in the comparison between the laying up of earthly and of heavenly treasures, the former, in its due measure, is not forbidden, but the latter should engage our special attention—the devoted service of our hearts and lives. G. A. JACOB, D.D.

Teignmouth.

DEAR SIR,—Does Mr. Heath take the true and broad meaning of our Lord's words: "Lay not up for yourselves treasure upon earth"? Does it follow because a Christian invests his money prudently, securing thereby a reasonable interest to supply his own wants, his children's after him, his means for daily charities, that his "treasure" is in earth, not in heaven? Does not our Lord's word "treasure" mean that upon which the heart is set—be it money or pleasure or ambition, or even love of our children, which may absorb the heart in earthly things instead of in the treasures of life and love in heaven?

As to our Lord's words, too, "Be not anxious for to-morrow," "Be not anxious for your clothing," "Be not anxious what you eat and drink," is not the anxiety the thing deprecated? God truly will clothe and feed us, and does it by giving us the means to do so. But it surely is a false interpretation to assert that it means that it is wrong, by due care and thought, to provide for the future clothing and feeding of ourselves and those depending on us, according to the station in which God has placed us. Are we, instead of laying by, perhaps with much self-denial, for our children, to leave them to swell the already overwhelming thousands of the unemployed?

What does St. Paul say, 2 Cor. xii. 14? "For the children ought not to lay up for the parents, but the parents for the children," as though that were an admitted truism.

When Zacchæus stood forth, and said, "The half of my goods I give to the poor," our Lord did not say, "Give the other half; don't keep it by," but we read, "Jesus said unto him, to-day is salvation come to this house"—"and Zacchæus was rich." The parable of the talents is put aside from this argument because the receivers did not work for themselves but for their Master. But no hint is given that the Master was wrong in requiring interest for his money. It is surely unquestionable that each Christian is responsible before God for the use he makes of the means given him, and the manner and extent to which he is justified in laying by or endeavouring to increase those means, either for his children or to enlarge his powers of doing good, or providing for the "rainy day," so that he and his may not be a burden upon others. Each is responsible before God to see that his "treasures" are not in these things.

Would not the carrying out of the literal meaning of each word in our Lord's sermon lead to, I could almost say, absurdities? Might not good men be found everywhere without coat or cloak because they had been asked for them? or with no money to pay their just bills, because the idle had borrowed from them? Are we literally to pluck out the right eye and cut off the right hand, because, alas! both have too often sinned? Are we never to reap or sow, or gather into barns, because the birds do not? Is not the very act of sowing putting out money to interest?

Is not rather the whole lesson to be gathered from our Lord's beautiful images of treasures, birds, flowers, grass, "Be not anxious, be not over careful. Do not carry to-morrow's burden of anxieties to-day." Trust to Him to give the increase when, like the men in the parable, you have done the best with the talents He has given you.—Yours faithfully, A. K.

"ADVANCING APOSTASY."

DEAR SIR,—Your correspondent, "An Evangelical Clergyman," gives a most misleading view of the present condition of the Church of England, and one which involves deepest ingratitude to our gracious God and Father. Let it be granted that every one of his isolated facts are true. I do not dispute them. No doubt they could be paralleled by other correspondents. But to take them by themselves as picturing the "advancing apostasy" of the Church of England is unjust and unthankful.

1. The Evangelical clergy have always been in a minority, and I do not believe they can rightly expect ever to be otherwise in this dispensation. Particular neighbourhoods will, of course, vary from time to time. But upon the whole it may be said that a hundred years ago they were numbered by tens, fifty years ago by hundreds, and now by thousands. In the early days of this century, Simeon, and Scott, and John Newton, and John Venn were but a handful of men, utterly ignored by the Church generally. Did they set up a cry of despair? No, they quietly worked away, founding the C.M.S. and other great Evangelical societies without the smallest countenance from bishops and dignitaries; and if they could now see the Church they loved they would burst into a song of praise and thanksgiving.

2. Take a few cases in London. In the middle of this century, when I was a boy, Evangelicals had scarcely any parish churches in the West End. They had to be content with licensed chapels. In these the Gospel was faithfully preached, and souls were converted to God. But they were quite looked down upon by the mass of the clergy. In Paddington and Bayswater there were Bayswater Chapel and the Chapel of the Lock Hospital. Now the former has been superseded by the spacious Christ Church, which, under Mr. E. A. Stuart's ministry, is thronged to the doors; while the three largest and most important Paddington churches, and several other newer ones, are in Evangelical hands. In Marylebone, there was then Portman Chapel. So there is now; but in addition, the two great churches at the north and south end of Portland-place have Evangelical rectors. In Belgravia and South Kensington, there were then Belgrave Chapel and Eaton Chapel. So there are now; while in addition, four of the most important parishes in that important district have for their vicars Canon Fleming, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Prebendary Eardley-Wilmot, and Mr. Evan Hopkins. The evangelisation of Islington is not new, but the ten or twelve churches of forty years ago have become more than forty, and almost all are faithful to the truth. In South London, as elsewhere, there have been ups and downs. Clapham is no longer an Evangelical stronghold, though it is not without Evangelical churches; but most of the great suburbs in that direction are well provided, and the most famous Ritualistic church in South London a few years ago, St. James's, Hatcham, has become, under Mr. Selwyn and Mr. Stone, a centre of light and life. These are only a few of the districts of London, and many other might be adduced. There are losses on the other hand, notably St. Pancras, but upon the whole, the progress is most marked.

3.—The leading watering-places and health resorts have long been for the most part Evangelical, notably Tunbridge Wells, Cheltenham, Leamington, Harrogate, inland; and Ramsgate, Hastings, Southsea, Torquay, Weston-super-Mare, Southport on the coast.

4.—Of the great Midland and Northern towns, one thinks instantly of Birmingham, Derby, Nottingham, Sheffield, Hull, Huddersfield, Bradford, as mainly Evangelical. Liverpool also, of course; while Manchester and Leeds, though stronger in High Church tendencies, are not without numerous churches on the right side.

5.—It is perfectly true that the rural districts have far fewer Evangelical clergymen than the towns; and the painful cases to which your correspondent refers are numerous enough. But I expect that this has always been so. It is nothing new. The only difference is that the old-fashioned country parson, though he had a horror of everything distinctively Evangelical, was not so aggressive as the modern ritualist. The old fox-hunting and port-wine drinking parson is dying out, and he is succeeded by a man who is active in all kinds of practical church work, though his teaching is not such as you, dear sir, or I, could accept.

6. Changes in a parish under a new vicar are often sad and painful. But this is not always so, from our point of view. Take Great Yarmouth, which has always been all but exclusively under High Church influence. Its magnificent church, the largest in England (except cathedrals), is now occupied by a faithful and ardent minister of the Gospel, Rev. J. E. Rogers; and the six or seven subsidiary churches are worked by his ten or twelve assistant clergy, every one of them a thorough Evangelical. One really feels inclined to sympathise a bit with some devout High Church people who are sorely hurt by the change; but one hopes they will gradually be won to fuller light and truth.

7. I know very little of Wales, where your correspondent says the Established Church is entirely Ritualistic. But, at all events, the Welsh contributions to the Church Missionary Society have advanced more rapidly in the last few years than those in any other part of the Kingdom. That does not look like the stamping out of Evangelicalism.

8. Once more, I do not for a moment forget that all Evangelicals are not alike. They do not all read THE CHRISTIAN. They do not all go to Mildmay or Keswick, or belong to the Evangelical Alliance. But the number who do is increasing fast. I say, therefore, that while not shutting our eyes to the truly alarming spread of Ritualistic error, we have abundance of cause to praise the Lord for his goodness to the Church of England.

EUGENE STOCK.

130, Haverstock Hill, N.W.

SIR,—No Christian can read the letter of "An Evangelical Clergyman" upon the above subject, as contained in your last issue, but with sorrow and alarm. It is, alas! too true that the Church of England is being rapidly Romanised; and that, at the present rate, only a very few years will be required to make the Ritualistic conspiracy completely successful. The Rock, the English Churchman, and other Church of England papers, give deplorable news, week by week, of the sacerdotal propagandism which is overwhelming towns and villages alike.

The question is, What is to be done by the Protestants in the Establishment? The Church Association and other societies have spent large sums of money to try to prove the Protestant character of the Church; and have, alas! spent them without proving their case, and without preventing the spread of the Ritualism which they have attacked.

Others are forming unions for prayer and Christian fellowship. But, surely, something more is needed. As Dean Alford well said, "There is a good deal of the scarlet in the Prayer-book." And I venture to think that until the godly Protestants in the Church are willing to take that book and to contrast its teachings on certain points with the teachings of the New Testament, and to abide by and act upon the result, they will continue to occupy that position of isolation and weakness which they deplore to-day. Where will they find infant baptism, confirmation, diocesan episcopacy, and priestly absolution in the New Testament? And are not these the four corner-stones of the temple of Sacerdotalism?

I pray God to guide our Protestant brethren in the Establishment, in this time of their sore distress. But I often mourn, when speaking to some of them, to see their unwillingness to face the points I have alluded to, which lie, in my judgment, at the very basis of the Romish and Ritualistic controversy. We need a second Reformation, which, while making due allowance for the age in which we live, and for the circumstances by which we are environed, will bring us back to primitive and apostolic Christianity, both in regard to the doctrines taught, the rites practised, and the discipline exercised.

But is such a Reformation practically possible within the Establishment? Who can indulge such a hope? If such a Reformation be hopeless within the Church, a separate denomination, or a fusion with some already existing denomination, would seem to be indicated as the solution of the present difficulty. But is the Protestantism in the Church of England sufficiently vigorous to brave the odium of the epithet Dissent, and to endure the great sacrifices which that dissent always involves?

Truly yours,

J. Mountain.

Emmanuel Parsonage, Tunbridge Wells.

THE Y.M.C.A.

An Association has been successfully launched at Ballynahinch, co. Down, Ireland.

At a recent meeting of the Nazareth Association twelve young men applied for cards of membership.

The Liverpool Courier publishes a most appreciative special article upon the work of the local Y.M.C.A.

The committee of the Damascus Association have decided to erect a small building, their present accommodation being too limited.

The Christian Recorder is the title of a bright new local, started by the Weybridge Association. The first number is lively and full of interest.

In connection with the Rochester Association seven days' special meetings have been held. A weekly evening Bible-class has also been commenced for young men.

The Newport Y.M.C.A. Lads' Bible Class has held its annual meeting, reporting continued progress, and an average attendance of sixty, with much spiritual fruit.

The Southampton Y.M.C.A. held a most successful annual meeting in the Hartley Hall on the 21st inst. The same night the Southsea Association held an encouraging meeting.

The new Brompton Association, which has been formed about eight months only, now numbers one hundred and fifty members and associates, and is doing a good work.

The statistics of the Sydney Association show that during the year 12,000 young men attended the services, 37,000 handbills and tracts were distributed, and 477 young men remained to the after-meeting for conversation.

A Y.M.C.A. has been formed in Rome, in which Christians of all denominations hope to work together for young men. Meanwhile help is being sought to secure and furnish central rooms. The treasurer is Dr. R. Prochet, Via della Consulta, Rome.

Sir Thomas Lea, M.P., gave a social gathering to the Dawlish Y.M.C.A. last week. About 100 young men assembled in the Shaftesbury Hall. Solos and musical selections were rendered, and an earnest address was delivered by the district secretary, Mr. Roberts, of Plymouth.

Mr. W. D. Dunn, evangelist, is in the midst of a mission in connection with the Edinburgh Y.M.C.A. The addresses from the first have been accompanied by great power and blessing. On Saturday and Sabbath evenings the Y.M.C.A. Hall was crowded to overflowing, the majority being young men.

The Shrewsbury Y.M.C.A. gave a coffee supper to fifty soldiers on January 22, in the rooms of the association. Miss Thiselton, of Berwick Vicarage, addressed the men, and seventeen afterwards signed the pledge. Special social meetings for various classes have been held during the winter months, with good results.

Tavistock Y.M.C.A. held their annual meeting on Wednesday, 16th inst. There was a large attendance of young men, and the proceedings were bright and breezy throughout. An adverse balance of £13 9s. 2d., with which the year commenced, had been reduced to £7 8s. 5d. An excellent address was delivered by the president, Mr. R. Morshead, J.P.; Rev. H. J. Karslake, Messrs. J. H. Foster, and W. H. Roberts, also gave brief addresses.

The Fulham and South Kensington Association held its annual meeting on Tuesday week in Fulham Congregational Church. The attendance was but small, owing to the severity of the weather. The addresses by Messrs. F. A. Bevan, H. W. Maynard, S.E. Burrow, and Rev. A. J. Shirley were most profitable. The annual report shows good work in the various branches, while the boarding-house for young men has been most useful to many.

About forty of the workers and leaders of the various branches of work in connection with the Stratford Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A. took part in a consecration meeting last Sunday. At the instigation of the young men's committee the heavy debt on the building of the Conference Hall and Y.M.C.A., and the making up of the adjoining roads was cleared off last year, they having made themselves responsible for collecting the first £50 to commemorate the jubilee.

The anniversary of the Bournemouth Y.M.C.A. was held in Shaftesbury Hall, on Thursday last. Captain Dawson, in whose partial restoration to health many will rejoice, was in the chair, and spoke with more than his wonted interest and power. The secretary, Mr. Meredith, gave an encouraging report of the work of the association, and a stirring address was given by Rev. W. R. Mowll, of Brixton. An interesting incident of the meeting was a brief address from Mr. Frodsham, who is about to leave for the South African mission field. The collection amounted to over £200. In the course of an address on Sunday afternoon, Captain Dawson said: "There is one now lying dead in London, one who has been much before the public, called away in the prime of life, only forty-five years old. To this one I had the privilege of saying a few words unexpectedly in the Association next door on the subject of the difference between the way of life and the way of death. His attention was called to that interesting Dutch picture, 'The Broad and the Narrow Way,' which hangs in our lecture-room, and I was asked by H.R.H. the Prince of Wales to explain it. Would that I could have done it better! I have often looked back in prayerful thought to the privilege of those few moments."

THE Y.W.C.A.

The Week of Prayer for young women will be held from February 17 to 24.

The Y.W.C.A. motto text for 1895 is, "In the Lord have I righteousness and strength." Isa. xlv. 24.

The New York Y.W.C.A. Convention was attended by 150 delegates, and was felt to be the most helpful ever attended.

The Missouri Convention, held at Trenton, was pronounced by one who has attended every convention held in the State, to be "the best we ever had."

The quarterly missionary reunion which has been held at the institute, Belfast, was a pleasant gathering, and the record of last year's work, which was presented, was most encouraging. Several of the members are engaged in foreign missionary work.

In connection with the Teachers' Department, monthly meetings are held in various parts of London. Mrs. Amand Routh, 14a, Manchester-square, W., is hon. secretary, and will gladly send particulars. All teachers, irrespective of membership, are warmly invited.

At Portland, Maine, U.S.A., the Y.W.C.A. has placed a permanent matron at the railroad station to assist young women who enter the city as strangers and are exposed to fraud and crime. The railroads have furnished rooms for the work at their own expense, and are co-operating in every way.

The usual monthly conference of secretaries and workers was held at the Morley Halls on Thursday last. There was a large attendance. Mrs. E. W. Moore presided, and an address was given by Miss Wingate, on "Work for God, its responsibilities and its rewards." The conference is held in the third Thursday in each month at 4 p.m., and all interested in the Y.W.C.A. and the F.H.U. are cordially invited.

The Stoke Newington and Upper Clapton Branch has removed to more convenient premises at 22, Cazenove-road. The rooms were opened with an afternoon meeting, when Mrs. Rennison spoke of the necessity of casting aside all sloth and indifference, and of coming "to the help of the Lord against the mighty." Dr. F. Montague Miller presided at a meeting for members and friends in the evening, and gave an address.

Miss Reynolds, the newly appointed general secretary of World's Y.W.C.A., started for the Continent last week. Her tour will last two months, and will include visits to Berlin, Stockholm, Christiania, and many of the French Associations. Most cordial expressions of sympathy and readiness to co-operate in the work of the World's Association have already been received from the leading workers in all these countries. Communications should be sent to 316, Regent-street, London, W.

GOSPORT.—Miss Ridout's cosy little Soldiers' Home has been the scene of much activity during the past week. The troopships Jumna and Britannia have disembarked nearly 2500 time-expired men, and the Christian men amongst them have gladly availed themselves of the hearty welcome always held out here. Each evening meetings have been held, and have not only been helpful to the Christians, but wanderers have been restored to the fold.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

United States soldiers at Fort Hamilton, Brooklyn, now have an Endeavour Society.

An Endeavour Society, with over thirty members, has been formed at Lichfield-street Church, Willenhall.

In Texas, a State Union of coloured societies has just been organised, and is prospering finely. One pastor organised eighteen societies during the summer.

A "Société d'Effort Chrétienne," with the stirring motto, "En avant," has been organised with thirty members in the French Presbyterian Church, Green Bay, Wis.

At Fort Riley, Kansas, an aggressive society of thirty members exists among the soldiers. It is active in personal work, distribution of good literature, and other forms of true Christian endeavour.

In Pittsburg, Penn., a Chinese society of thirteen members has been organised in the Fourth Avenue Baptist Church. The society is named after Robert Morrison, the first Protestant missionary to China.

At the first annual meeting of the Warwick-road Society, Coventry, the secretary gave an interesting account of the work. The society numbers thirty-four active members, thirty-six associate, and three honorary.

How tracts can be used to counteract error was recently well illustrated in Portland. Colonel Robert Ingersoll lectured there to, it is said, 1500 people. Christians could not hinder it, but they did do something to counteract his influence. Eighteen Endeavourers stood at the door of the hall, and gave to each person as they came out from the lecture a copy of Mr. Hasting's tract, "Will the Old Book Stand?"

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[From our own Correspondents.]

OXFORD.

The University sermons on Sunday last were both preached by Evangelical Churchmen, a circumstance possibly unique during recent years. Principal Moule, of Cambridge, preached in the morning, and Rev. H. G. Hopkins, of York, in the afternoon. Mr. Moule also preached in the evening at St. Peter-le-Bailey a very practical sermon on "Adorning the Doctrine" (Titus ii. 10).

Bishop Ridley, of Caledonia, British Columbia, spoke at the first meeting of the Missionary Union last week. He will also take part in the forthcoming C.M.S. anniversary.

Oxford friends of Rev. F. S. Webster note with prayerful interest his appointment to the large parish of Aston, succeeding Bishop Knox. The foundation of his present usefulness was laid in an "apprenticeship" in St. Aldate's parish in Oxford, under Canon Christopher.

One of the preachers at Mansfield for this term will be Dr. Stalker, of Glasgow.

CAMBRIDGE.

We are looking forward to a visit from Rev. A. J. Harrison, the lecturer on Christian Evidence. He will address a meeting at the Guildhall on Sunday next. He will also address evening meetings the greater part of next week.

Bishop Ridley gave a very interesting and solemn account of his work in Caledonia, N. America, on Friday last at the C.M.U. About 180 men were present.

On Wednesday, Jan. 23, at Radley Hall, the Rev. C. Johnson, the new clerical superintendent of the Irish Church Mission in Dublin, gave an encouraging account of the work of the Mission. A great many of the students were present.

A nine days' mission is being held at the Wesleyan Chapel in Hill's-road, its chief object being to reach those who do not attend any place of worship. Rev. T. F. Hulmes is the missioner.

MR. E. WARLAND addressed five meetings last week in connection with the Working Men's Teetotal League, Leeds.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For the work of the Gospel Mission at East Surrey Grove, Peckham, and for a special mission about to be held.—That Gospel work among Moslems in Algiers may be attended by great blessing, and that the converts may be bold to confess Christ more openly before their fellows.—For a special mission in Pollokshields Free Church, Glasgow, January 27 to February 3.—For services by Mr. William Forbes in Arran, from February 3.—For much blessing on a United Evangelistic Mission in the Corn Hall, Fakenham, from February 4 to 17, and on a Gospel Mission in the Baptist Chapel, Wendover, from February 14 to 21.—That great blessing may attend a Gospel temperance mission which Mr. Matthew Burnett hopes to begin at Kettering on Monday next.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. J. Greenwood, of the Evangelisation Society, has concluded a fifteen days' mission at Tetbury, Glos., which has been marked by much blessing.

Ireland.—Gospel services have been held in Mongahan by Rev. Henry Ball, Methodist Conference Evangelist, and in Ardara, co. Donegal, by Rev. Jno. Wilson, of Dunkineely.

Brynmawr.—We have had a visit from Mr. J. H. Roberts, of the Temperance Hall, Newport, Mon. A few of the worst characters have professed conversion, and Christians have been sanctified. W.

Shipton, Hants.—Mr. A. Clarke, of the Evangelisation Society, has held three weeks' services in the Mission Hall here. Not a few have been led to decide for Christ, and believers have been greatly helped.

Mr. Matthew Burnett's nine days' mission at Newport, Mon., was attended with much blessing. All sections of the Church of Christ took part in the mission. Mr. Burnett is conducting a united mission at Horsham this week.

Blandford.—A ten days' mission has been concluded at the mission hall here by Mr. Gerald Coultas. There have been numerous decisions, and backsliders have been restored, whilst Christians have been greatly cheered and quickened.

Mr. Gerald Coultas has concluded a tour in the South and West of England, visiting amongst other places, Hailsham, Eastbourne, Conference Hall, Stratford, Devizes. The Lord has given definite blessing.

Connah's Quay, Wales.—A week's special services have been held in connection with the Welsh Congregational Church here, when several ministers took part. The services were well attended, and marked throughout with great earnestness and power.

Gipsy Smith has been holding a week's mission at Wycliffe Chapel, Stepney, which has resulted in the quickening of a large number of Church members, in the spiritual decision of many, and the gathering night after night of very large congregations, and that in the most inclement of weather. T. R. S.

Catrine, Ayrshire.—A fortnight's mission, conducted by Mr. Harry Young, of the Evangelisation Society, was brought to a close here on Sabbath, January 20. A good many professed a saving knowledge of the Truth, Christians were revived and strengthened. House-to-house visitation was much owned.

Bristol.—The Lord is working mightily in connection with Mr. Telford's mission in Counterslip Baptist Church. On week nights and Sundays the large church, holding 1000 people, has been crowded. Over 300 inquirers have been spoken with in the inquiry rooms during the past twelve days. At the earnest request of the pastor and deacons Mr. Telford has arranged to stop another week, and much prayer is being offered for still greater results. K.

Mr. J. Crofton Rainey concluded a second fortnight's Gospel mission service this winter on Sunday last in Wallingford. This has been attended with much blessing. Before the mission closed many had been led to receive Jesus as their Saviour. God has greatly used Mr. Rainey in different places; and in Wallingford many are now rejoicing in Christ as their Saviour through his instrumentality. Prayer is asked for a blessing on a mission he is to hold at Long Wittenham, commencing on Sunday next.

Torrington.—The pastor of the Baptist Church has been conducting a number of quiet services for the unsaved during the last fortnight following the week of united prayer among all the churches of the town. No unusual means have been put forth during these services, but the fruits harvested have been unspeakably encouraging. There has been much prayer, in the morning, at noon-day, at night, specific—definite importunate prayer. The Church has been blessed; many have yielded their all to Christ. A singular feature of the ingathering is the salvation of married people. At a meeting for men only on Sunday last, the Spirit was at work, and there were some striking results. The good work goes on.

LENDING UNTO THE LORD.—Rev. W. Williams, of Upton Chapel, has issued his report of mission work among the poor. In it he says:—"Our devoted sister, whose life is spent in the very centre of misery and vice, tells of trials and triumphs, while personally I come in touch with much woe and wretchedness which we seek to relieve to the utmost of our power. A new effort to get the poor under the sound of the Gospel was made during the year by the hire of the South London Palace for Sunday afternoon services. Every house in the neighbourhood was visited by our workers. Special open-air services were held, with the result that from 1500 to 2000 people gathered for each service. The mission schools are perhaps the most hopeful features of our work. Help is sorely needed in this service."

PERSONALIA.

Rev. Dr. Paton has been visiting Tasmania, lecturing on the New Hebrides Mission.

Mr. Geo. Hefford, of the Evangelization Society, on Wednesday last week was seized with paralysis, and is dangerously ill.

Mr. W. Wheatley, of the St. Giles's Christian Mission, was presented with an illuminated address by the workers at their annual social meeting.

Rev. Thomas H. Carryer, of Leicester, who has been honorary secretary of the Melbourne Hall Church since its formation, has just celebrated his eightieth birthday.

Lady Henry Somerset is expected back in England by about the middle of March. She will speak at a great meeting in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., on March 22, when addresses will be given by Mrs. Elizabeth Andrew and Dr. Kate C. Bushnell.

Rev. M. Nikambé, Presbyterian pastor, Bombay, with his wife, is now on a visit to this country to investigate Christian work. He would be glad to address meetings on Christian work in India if friends desire. He may be addressed, care of Presbyterian College, Queen-square, London, W.C.

Bishop Tucker has lately had some very unpleasant experiences. During his return journey to the coast from visiting the mission stations at Usagara he suffered much discomfort from flooded rivers, storms of rain, swamps, and mud. He had, too, several attacks of fever, and arrived at Zanzibar quite invalided. He was, however, kindly nursed in the hospital there connected with the Universities' Mission, and after a time he was able to remove to Mombasa, but at the date the last letter was despatched he was under treatment in the hospital of the British East Africa Company at Mombasa.

Mrs. Bishop.—The numerous friends of Mrs. Bishop (says a London correspondent) will be glad to learn that, notwithstanding all she has gone through since her unexpected arrival at Chefoo, she is as enamoured of the "immemorial East" as ever, and looks forward to her return to Europe in April next with anything but joyful anticipation. She was attacked by malarial fever, and, to crown all her misfortunes, just as she was nearing Moukden the cart on which she was being carried toppled down an incline, and her right arm was fractured. During the six weeks she remained at Moukden Mrs. Bishop had her arm in a sling, but the fact that her energy has suffered no diminution is shown by her subsequent visits to Peking, where she was the guest of the British Legation, and to Russian Manchuria.

SCRIPTURE READERS IN IRELAND.

In a sermon recently preached in Dublin, on behalf of this society, Rev. W. D. Austin, Rector of Castlecomer, said:—The Gospel message gave the soul liberty, and for the want of this true knowledge of salvation there were many uneasy deathbeds among their Roman Catholic fellow-countrymen, who, in the last moment, had to trust in the ordinances and sacraments of their Church, without which they believed they could not enter into the kingdom of God. It was the blessed message which gave the soul liberty that they should all try and spread amongst their fellow-countrymen. This was the special message of the Scripture Readers' Society for Ireland. The object of the society was to take the Gospel message, with which God would not allow any interference in the way of additions or subtraction, pure and undiluted, to the homes and hearts of the people throughout the length and breadth of the land.

He had had many years' experience of the society, and he could honestly and boldly say that he knew of no better organisation for the spread of the Gospel message in its simplicity amongst the people. He happened to be the minister of one of the largest parishes in the South of Ireland. It was a parish in the diocese of Ossory, thirty-six square miles in extent, in which there were many poor Protestants. There were between 800 and 900 Protestants in the parish, scattered through ten times that number of Roman Catholics. In his parish he had received the greatest help from the agents of the society in delivering the message of salvation to the people.

THE ANTI-OPIUM CAMPAIGN.—Large and interested assemblies have been addressed by Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Kate Bushnell at Newport, Swansea, and Bristol. Resolutions were passed protesting against the continuance of the traffic. Mr. Man Sukh Lal has been addressing gatherings in Scotland on the same subject.

Theatrical Tea Meeting.—About seventy theatrical women accepted the invitation of Mr. William Forbes to tea on Friday last at Waterloo-road Chapel. After tea, hymns and solos were sung and addresses given. Sachets with texts attached, from the Bible Flower Mission, were given to the guests.

OBITUARY.

MISS ALLARDYCE, CROMARTY.

The death of this well-known and much esteemed resident has caused much sorrow, though she had reached the age of 81. Miss Allardyce was converted when a girl by the simple reading of the Word, and has spent a long Christian life in active effort for the good of others. She took special interest in the circulation of the Bible.

M. CHARLES SECRÉTAN.

The death is announced of M. Charles Secrétan, of whom Le Christianisme speaks as "the most illustrious citizen of Lausanne, and one of the most eminent masters of French-speaking Protestantism and contemporary philosophy." For some time M. Secrétan had been in declining health, and now that he has been removed, at the age of eighty, he is widely mourned. He was a professor in the University of Lausanne. He was unquestionably a great thinker, and a strong (although not orthodox) apologist for Christianity. The Journal Religieux (Neuchatel) speaks of him as a living proof that a man may be an intellectual genius and a sincere and humble Christian.

REV. JOHN H. ORR, D.D., ANTRIM.

Much regret is felt amongst a wide circle of friends throughout Ireland at the sudden death of Rev. John H. Orr, D.D., of Antrim, clerk of the General Assembly, who has just been called away. Deceased had over forty years ago organised the congregation of which from that time till his death he continued to be pastor. As clerk of the General Assembly for several years he was widely known, and was remarkable for his methodical habits and his extensive and accurate knowledge of Presbyterian laws and usages. Under his editorship the minutes of the General Assembly were annually published, and it was a matter of surprise to most people how very soon after that body had usually met he was able to issue so bulky a volume. In 1887 he was elected Moderator of the General Assembly, and in his capacity as such was one of the delegates who presented a congratulatory address to the Queen that year at Windsor on the occasion of her Jubilee. He was an earnest, broad-minded man, who gladly co-operated with persons of other denominations than his own in evangelistic and other works, and was very highly esteemed by all who knew him.

MRS. GORDON FORLONG.

We hear with sorrow of the death of Mrs. Gordon Forlong at Wangapui, New Zealand. She was the youngest daughter of the late Dr. Houlton, of London, formerly army surgeon, and at an early age commenced work for Christ in ragged schools, mission halls, etc. While thus engaged she met her husband. When she was twenty-five years of age they were married, and a true and noble helpmate she at all times proved herself to be, and a more devoted and truly united couple it would have been hard to find. Mrs. Gordon Forlong leaves a large family of grown-up sons and daughters to mourn her departure. Her eldest son is at present at the New Hebrides, while of four married daughters two are in India. As soon as the death became known in Wanganui many beautiful wreaths, etc., were sent to the mourners, as tokens of love and sympathy, from all classes of the community. The sons of the deceased lady, at their own request, carried the coffin from the hearse to its last resting-place. The service was conducted by Mr. Forlong, who commenced by repeating the well-known text, "The Lord gave, and the Lord hath taken away, blessed be the name of the Lord." Laying aside all other thoughts, Mr. Forlong seemed urged forward by the desire to use the opportunity afforded of reaching the people and urging the claims of his Master. All denominations were represented at the grave side.

MELBOURNE HALL, LEICESTER.—Rev. W. Y Fullerton, reviewing his first year's pastorate at Melbourne Hall, Leicester, says:—"My first care has been to make the pulpit a centre and source of power, to speak living words straight from Christ, and instead of bringing man's thoughts to Scripture, to seek to expound the thoughts of God therein written for our admonition. I can honestly say that I have prayerfully put myself into severe discipline to attain this end, and judging by the congregations, I am encouraged to hope not without some success. My next effort has been to know the people: to understand your difficulties, enter into your aspirations, sympathise with your joys and sorrows, and generally to look at things from your side rather than from my own. Deeper still, and the end of all, it has been our prayer day and night that men and women may be led to a full knowledge of Christ, and that each believer may be filled with the Holy Spirit."

Among the Churches.

CHURCH OF ENGLAND.

The mission at St. Stephen's, South Lambeth, closed last week with many indications of blessing.

A mission to young people has been held in St. Peter's, Colchester, by Mr. H. Hutchinson (C.S.S.M.).

Rev. F. S. Webster, of St. Thomas's, Birmingham, has accepted the vicarage of Aston, Birmingham.

Mr. D. Marshall Lang has been appointed lay secretary of the C.M.S., in succession to General Collingwood.

It is announced that Bishop Johnson, of Calcutta, has intimated his intention of resigning in the spring. It is expected that the see will be offered to Bishop Copleston, of Colombo.

The Liverpool Clergy Sustentation Fund has proved a great success. When it was started in 1892 it was hoped to bring the incomes of all the incumbents of poor and populous parishes up to £250. Now they hope to reach £300.

Rev. Dr. Knox, the new Bishop of Coventry, preaching his farewell sermons as vicar of Aston, said that clergymen had no right to let any part of their parish be the undisturbed preserve of Satan, and the work of disturbing Satan's kingdom did not belong to the clergy alone.

The Bishop of Peterborough preaches at St. Mary Magdalene, Sandringham, on Sunday, the proceeds of the offertory being devoted to the funds of the Gordon Boys' Home. The annual anniversary sermon on the death of General Gordon was preached at the morning service on Sunday at St. Mary Abbots, Kensington, by the Archbishop of York.

In St. Andrew's, New Kent-road, one of the poorest parishes in South London, the devoted vicar, Rev. L. S. E. Trousdale, is face to face with a serious difficulty. The hired school-rooms, in which Sunday-schools and all manner of mission effort has been going on, are about to be pulled down, bringing the whole valuable work to an end. In these circumstances he is trying to raise £2000 to build a mission hall. Some doubtless will wish to cheer this faithful worker by co-operating with him in the effort.

CONGREGATIONAL.

Rev. Richard Parry, of Llandudno, has celebrated his ninety-first anniversary.

Handsworth Church reports 166 members. In the Sunday-school there are 500 scholars and forty teachers.

The ladies connected with the Manchester and Salford Auxiliary of the L.M.S. have raised £951 as a special contribution to the Centenary Fund.

Rev. Sidney Beveridge, son of a former pastor of the church, has been ordained at Fareham as missionary of the L.M.S. He has been appointed to Samoa.

At the anniversary of East Parade Chapel, Leeds, the report testified to the steady growth of the various agencies. The revised church roll contains 393 names.

The Principal of the Lancashire Independent College has presented a very favourable report of the results of the Christmas examinations of the students in both the theological and art courses.

Edgbaston Church, Birmingham, reports 69 members added to the fellowship during the year, making 180 in the three years of the pastorate of Rev. W. S. Houghton. The roll now numbers 550 members.

At Wimbledon Rev. F. Hall's anniversary has been held. The reports showed that during the year ninety-seven members had been added to the church roll, while the Guild, the Christian Endeavour, Total Abstinence, and other societies were doing a large amount of good and useful work.

Rev. T. W. Holmes, preaching at the Tabernacle, Sheffield, on social questions, said that if church and chapel could be depended on to vote as straight for righteousness as the public-house votes for what it favours—if the Christian people of the city would exercise the power they possess to secure a wise and righteous administration of local affairs, they could sweep all before them.

Calls.—Rev. Wilson Murray, of Oldham, to Clitheroe; Rev. S. Blackwell, to Fould, Shetland Isles; Rev. T. J. Rees, of Pentyrch, to Bethesda, Llangatoc, Brecon.

Resignations.—Rev. J. D. Davies, of Burgess Hill; Rev. R. Tutin Thomas, of Therfield.

BAPTIST.

Zion Sunday-school, Cambridge, reports a membership of over 600, over 100 of whom are members of the church.

A memorial chapel to Christmas Evans is to be erected at Llangefni, Anglesey, where that eminent Welsh preacher lived for many years.

Rev. George and Mrs. Hughes, formerly missionaries in India, have resigned by reason of ill-health, and gone on a voyage to New Zealand.

Rev. Charles Pates, having completed twenty years' pastorate at Wood-street, Bilston, preached on Sunday his twenty-first annual sermon to the young.

Rev. T. R. Matthews, of Mundesley, Norfolk, who has gone on a voyage to Australia under medical advice, has arrived at Melbourne in improved health.

On Thursday last, Jan. 24, some eleven members of the Stratford Association were baptized by Pastor Archibald G. Brown at a special baptismal service at his church in Burdett-road.

Fuller Chapel, Kettering, which celebrates its bi-centenary next year, reports a membership of 539, as against 509 last year. There are 1462 scholars in the Sunday-schools, with 125 teachers.

Devonshire-square Church reports that the membership numbers 769, of whom 103 have been received during the past year, nineteen from the Sunday-school. In the Sunday-school there are 750 scholars.

Rev. A. Riley, pastor of Archway-road Church, Highgate, N., has been very seriously ill for some days, and on Monday his life was despaired of. The latest news, however, is that he has rallied somewhat, and the doctor has given hopes of his ultimate recovery.

On the Sunday evenings of January special evangelistic services were held by the pastor in East Hill Chapel, Wandsworth. During the past week Mr. George Goodman has conducted a mission for the Sunday-school children, when there was much blessing.

On Thursday last, in connection with Cann Hall-road Church, Leytonstone, the first anniversary of the opening of the enlarged school premises was celebrated in conjunction with the jubilee of the pastor, Rev. G. T. Ennals. Encouraging progress was reported in the work, and a gold watch and other tokens of love and esteem were presented to the pastor.

A good meeting was held (according to the Cape Argus) at the Wicht Zaal for the purpose of welcoming Rev. Charles Spurgeon. Among the speakers was Rev. C. F. J. Muller, who said Charles Haddon Spurgeon was beloved of all in the country. One of his works had been translated into Dutch, and during the Dutch Reformed Church Synod every copy was sold out.

An important step in the direction of a sustentation fund for Baptist ministers who are connected with the London Association has been taken. A scheme has been devised by which every unmarried minister shall have at least £100, or if married, £150 a year, with £5 additional for each child dependent upon him. The scheme is now being criticised and looked at by the churches and their representatives before it can be adopted.

Calls.—Rev. Henry Oakley, of Devizes, to Trinity-road, Upper Tooting; Rev. Hugh Rodger, of Bromley Common, to St. Leonards; Rev. E. W. Jenkins, to Salendine Nook, Huddersfield; Mr. E. M. Durbin, to Ernest-street, Accrington; Rev. C. E. Shearman, of the Pastor's College, to Hook, Norton.

METHODIST.

A good mission has been held at Watergate, Rochdale.

A new Wesleyan chapel has been opened at Mottram St. Andrew, Wilmslow.

A new church has been erected at Spondon, near Derby, where up to the present cottage services have been held.

The anniversary of the slum children's branch of the East London Mission was held on Sunday week. Mr. Freimuth and Rev. J. Jackson conducted the services, and the chapel was full of ragged children.

The Van Mission (Primitive) continues to do capital service. During the past quarter the van, in charge of two young men, has visited north-west Norfolk. The farmers and labourers have supported the meetings well.

Bowron House continues to render invaluable service to the United Methodist denomination. Fifteen sisters are employed in connection with circuits, or are holding evangelistic services. Five sisters are now in the Home.

Rev. J. Tolefree Parr conducted a midnight service in Surrey Chapel on Tuesday week, in connection with a special mission. Before the service the Blackfriars, Waterloo, and Westminster Bridge roads were paraded by workers, who distributed invitations. The result was a well-attended service.

PRESBYTERIAN.

A new church is being built in Bath-road, Newcastle.

Rev. A. Ramsay, of Highgate, has declined the call to Glasgow.

Principal Dykes presided over a Sunday-school conference on Friday night in Crouch-hill Church.

New mission-rooms are being built at Bwlchymynydd (Glam.), and Crennant, near Neath.

The late Mr. W. F. Rawdon, of York, has, amongst other charitable legacies, bequeathed £2000 for the support of the Presbyterian ministry in that city.

The Birmingham Presbytery, after much discussion, have decided against the removal of the college to Cambridge. On the other hand a meeting held in the Common Hall, Liverpool, in support of the proposal to remove the Presbyterian College from London to Cambridge, decided that a guarantee fund of £10,000 should be raised to prevent any financial difficulty arising.

The Presbytery of London, South, has held a conference at Upper Norwood on Societies for the Young. Rev. J. G. Train spoke upon Christian Endeavour Societies, Mr. Barlow, of Croydon, upon Boys' Brigades, and Mr. Alexander Thomson upon Literary and Fellowship Associations. The subsequent discussion turned mainly upon the Boys' Brigade (of which several companies have lately been successfully formed), and C.E. Societies.

Calls.—Rev. W. Tudhope, of Westbourne, Glasgow, to Queen's-road, Liverpool; Rev. J. Forsyth, of Kilmarnay, to Cathedral-square, Glasgow; Rev. W. E. Edwards, to Gorseinon, Swansea; Rev. J. F. Padkin, of Perth, to Greenlaw; Rev. J. Anderson, of Sanday, to Hoy; Rev. J. Muir, of Govan, to Kildirnie.

Resignation.—Rev. J. M. Jones, of Alexandra-road, Swansea.

SOCIETY OF FRIENDS.

The great subjects of Peace, Anti-Slavery, Temperance, Adult Schools, and Home Missions are engaging the constant attention and efforts of Friends, and that of Capital Punishment may soon again be among those clamouring for settlement. The sacredness of human life and the frequency of hangings urge the latter subject to the front.

A series of meetings recently held at Tunbridge Wells turned out fairly successful. Gospel meetings and lectures excited much interest, and at a missionary meeting addressed by Wm. and Susan Thompson, of New England, their recent visit to Ramallah, near Jerusalem, was described. The meetings were good solid occasions, and the interest seemed to be well sustained throughout.

Isaac Mason, of Chung-Ring, has just paid another visit to Yang-Pao-Chi with a view to something like permanent work there. He found much openness in this town of 10,000 people, and was warmly welcomed by some benefited by the former visit. He says: "I would ask prayers for this needy district and its people who are stumbling through life in darkness, also for those who are seeking after the light."

THE SALVATION ARMY.

The Labour Exchange offers a good record for the New Year. Already employment has been found not only for the utterly submerged, but situations and work provided for men with good characters who are submerged in circumstances only.

In Madrid, where Commissioner Railton has recently gone, a commodious building has been taken which is open daily as a place of rest and warmth. The Commissioner proposes while the people take shelter to preach the salvation truths of the Gospel.

At the International headquarters in Queen Victoria-street, the midday meetings for prayer open to the public are to be resumed; they were discontinued a few years ago on account of want of space, but a new hall has now been constructed in the basement which will hold four or five hundred people. The opening meeting will be held on Friday, February 1, and will be conducted by Mr. Bramwell Booth.

The social work in Holland is developing satisfactorily. The Salvation Army recently sent over an experienced officer in order to carry forward the salvage operations there in connection with the "poorest of the poor" and the outcast among the Dutch denizens. Also in Belgium, after receiving a communication from the Goverment, a social scheme has been floated which promises to be a great success.

General Booth's proposal to provide for neglected children—the waifs and strays of our big cities—is about to be carried out. "Major" Swift has been entrusted with the initiation of this work. A start will be made immediately by the opening of a home, or shelter, for boys in the City of London. An investigation in the slums will be made forthwith in order to correctly estimate the extent of the evil to be grappled with, and a plan is to be adopted by which suffering children may be removed from their unwholesome surroundings, and taken into the open country.

The Book World.

Taken Home: A Brief Record of a Beloved Son. (E. Wilmhurst.) As the title indicates, this is a loving tribute to one who, having borne brave testimony for Christ, was early called home. Many will read with profit and sympathy this simple memorial.

From Day to Day; or, Helpful Words for Christian Life, is an admirable volume of "Daily Readings for a Year," by Robert Macdonald, D.D. There is substance and strength in these pages; the divinity is practical, and the experience always helpful. (Cheaper edition, 3s. 6d. Nelson & Sons.)

"Oh, to be Ripe and Ready." The poem by the late Mr. A. A. Rees, of Sunderland, bearing the above title, has been set to music by Mr. E. Gombert. (2s. nett. Novello & Co.) It has met with so appreciative a reception, that we doubt not many who loved the author will like to know of its publication.

St. Giles' Bells is a booklet of short readings by Rev. J. A. Lloyd, M.A., vicar of St. Giles', Norwich. The pages deal with subjects of doctrine and practice, and in conclusion they present a thoughtful "Sermon on the Times." The Dean of Norwich writes a sympathetic preface. (Colby & Son, Upper King-street, Norwich.)

The National Temperance League's Annual for 1895, edited by Robert Rae, is a work replete with facts and figures that will prove of service to temperance advocates. The frontispiece is a portrait of the late Professor Cheshire, the well-known lecturer on temperance subjects. (National Temperance League Publication Depôt.)

A Reply to Rev. C. F. Aked's "Changing Creeds and Social Struggles." By Jesse Huxley, Oswestry. (Marshall Bros.) We very much doubt whether Mr. Aked's book was worth so much attention as it here receives. Mr. Huxley's work is characterised by sound sense throughout; and should prove of service to such as have been perplexed by Mr. Aked's wild utterances on "The Gospel for the Day," "The Bible," and "The Atonement."

The Quiver (Cassell & Co. 6d.) presents a full and varied miscellany of general interest. "Some Professional Deceivers" will stir a sympathetic chord in the minds of many who have suffered from such. "A Day in the Life of a Bishop" reveals how varied and arduous are the duties devolving upon a hard-working bishop. Miss Sparrow gives another of her realistic pictures of life among "The Penniless Poor," illustrating the life of the fishcurers.

"The Regions Beyond." The monthly parts of this magazine, edited by Lucy E. Guinness, give information as to the progress of the work of the East London Institute, the Congo-Balolo Mission, and the "Regions Beyond" Helpers' Union. The editorial and contributed articles are instructive and stimulating, and the illustrations are very attractive. The annual volume, containing last year's parts, is a repertory of facts and arguments which should not be overlooked by the increasing body of Christians who make a serious study of foreign missionary enterprise. (3s. 6d. Partridge.)

Talks with Bunyan: Being Discourses on Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress" and the "Holy War." By Rev. Douglas Thompson, pastor of Bunyan Tabernacle, Kingston-on-Thames. (3s. 6d. Elliot Stock.) Rev. Archibald G. Brown writes a hearty preface to this book. The "talks" are as straight as Bunyan's pictures are "speaking," and though not professing to cover the entire ground, they deal with the principal scenes and characters in the combined works of the great allegorist. Lectures on Bunyan and his teachings find general acceptance among the people, and those who contemplate giving such would do well to consult Mr. Thompson's suggestive treatment.

The Library Book Cover and Reading Case is a useful invention for the protection of books. It may be had in a variety of sizes, and the price is small. (3d. and 4d. each, according to size. W. G. Wheeler, Paternoster-row.)

CENTENARY
LONDON MISSIONARY SOCIETY.

Head Quarters: 14, Blomfield-street, E.C.

This Society, founded in September, 1795, by a number of Episcopalians, Presbyterians, and Congregationalists, on a broad and catholic basis, from which it has never departed, is about to celebrate the completion of its

among the heathen and unenlightened races of the earth.

The Society has had the honour of sending out more than a THOUSAND MISSIONARIES, not reckoning their wives, among them such distinguished men as John Williams, Moffat, Livingstone, Morrison (the first Protestant Missionary to China), Medhurst, Ellis, Mullens, Gilmour, of Mongolia, and Dr. Mackenzie, of Tientsin. In pioneering work in lands little known, in translating the Bible (some forty versions of which in whole or in part have profited by their labours), in the preparation of Christian literature and educational manuals, the Society's representatives have always occupied an honourable place, while their contributions to science have been generously acknowledged by scientific men.

Its Chief FIELDS OF LABOUR are:—China, from twelve chief centres; North India, the Madras Presidency, and Travancore; Madagascar; South Africa; Central Africa; West Indies; Polynesia; and New Guinea.

It has on ITS PRESENT STAFF 258 missionaries, 17 of whom are qualified medical missionaries; 1476 native ordained pastors and evangelists; over 12,000 other native helpers; 94,192 church members; 404,795 native adherents; 1891 schools; 125,984 scholars; 10 hospitals, in which 98,992 patients were treated during 1893.

Never did the Society possess a stronger, abler, or more devoted band of agents than to-day; never had it such openings for work or such promise of success as now. Money is the great need. "The possibilities of going forward are simply limited by the means of going forward."

A Centenary Fund of £100,000 has been opened £43,000 of which has already been promised. Donations are earnestly solicited, and may be made payable to the Rev. A. N. JOHNSON, M.A., 14, Blomfield-street, London, E.C.

LONDON CABMAN'S MISSION.

EST. 1871.] KING'S CROSS, W.C. [EST. 1871

Owing to the decease of many of our old supporters, we find it a difficult task to get new subscribers for this much-needed work amongst cabmen. Only those who have to do with these men know the difficulties in getting them under the sound of the Gospel. Yet hundreds have been brought to the Saviour. We implore Christian friends to help us, that the work may not flag. Particulars of the mission and its agencies may be had of the founder, JOHN DUPEE, 165, Hemingford Road, Barnsbury, N.

Donations may be sent to the Office of THE CHRISTIAN.

THE BITTER CRY!

Great has been our pain this week to find sick ones lying in cheerless hovels with no fire and a freezing atmosphere. FRENCH POOR IN LONDON.

The "Dispensaire Français et Etranger," Oxford Mansion, Oxford-street, a Medical Mission for poor and sick French-speaking and other foreigners in London, has had to be closed through lack of funds, after sixteen years of good and useful work. During that time 30,714 foreigners have been relieved, 55,658 attendances have been given, and twenty different nationalities have been represented among the patients. The work, which is the only means of bringing large numbers of foreigners within the sound of the Gospel, has proved a blessing to many. To carry on the Mission efficiently, only £300 a year is wanted. Communications may be addressed to the superintendent of the work, Pasteur Du Pontet-de la Harpe, French Parsonage, Bayswater.

MR. E. TENNYSON SMITH is to be given a public welcome by the National British Women's Temperance Association (with the co-operation of other leading societies) on Feb. 12. The meeting will be held at Union Chapel, Islington.

PARIS CITY MISSION.
President—THE LORD KINNAIRD.
Treasurer—F. A. BEVAN, Esq.
Each day has a record of blessing. Our ten evangelists are encouraged by open doors, and a fair share of attention from a people who know not the Gospel. Spiritual darkness is dispersed, while infidelity and superstition are overcome by "the sword of the Spirit, which is the Word of God." Several of our liberal friends have been called home, and our poverty is such that unless others cast into this part of our Lord's Treasury the work of an effective missionary must cease.

Notes and Comments.

THE suddenness of the catastrophe and the great loss of life by the sinking of the German ss. Elbe, last week, off Lowestoft, form an international calamity that has touched every heart with genuine sorrow. It is not possible as yet to allocate any blame in connection with the collision; but clearly someone had blundered, when such a thing was possible on a night when lights could easily be seen a considerable distance off. For the honour of our countrymen we can but hope that the officers on board the Crathie, the colliding vessel, will be able to disprove any charges of carelessness or inhumanity. Meantime we mournfully join with those, from Her Majesty downwards, who have expressed deep sympathy with the bereaved friends of those 335 men, women, and children who found a swift and watery grave.

Despite all his efforts to prohibit foreign pressmen in Asia Minor, the Sultan has not been able to prevent the searching light of publicity falling on the recent Armenian massacres. The special correspondent of Reuter's Agency sends from Tiflis a harrowing account of the social state of the country. While admitting that all the wrong-doing has not been on the side of the Turk, he clearly shows that the oppression displayed towards the Armenians is enough to goad them into revolt. His description of infamous outrages perpetrated by Kurds on young Armenian women reveals a cruelty and immorality that are demoniacal. All this would be impossible under any system of strong and righteous rule. Surely the Turk has filled up to the full, in those fair lands, the cup of incapacity and corruption. It rests with Great Britain and the other Powers who have assumed responsibility, to see to it that liberty and good government are introduced into Asia Minor.

The unsettlement of thought characteristic of the present day has led the bishops of the Protestant Episcopal Church in America to put forth an important pastoral in regard to the doctrine of the Incarnation and the Inspiration of Holy Scripture. The pastoral is addressed "to our well-beloved clergy and laity," and in a prefatory note the bishops say that they have met in council—

To consider our duty in view of certain novelties of opinion and expression which have seemed to us to be subversive of the fundamental verities of Christ's religion. It has come to our knowledge that the minds of many of the faithful clergy and laity are disturbed and distressed by these things. . . . It is a conviction of solemn duty which constrains us thus to address you at this time, and particularly to state what the Church requires all who minister in holy things to hold and teach, first, concerning the Incarnation of our Lord Jesus Christ, and, secondly, concerning the Holy Scriptures, by sure and certain warrant of which the Catholic faith is proved.

With regard to the Inspiration of Scripture, the writers take firm and satisfactory ground, accepting and holding the Word of God as inspired, authoritative, and containing all that is necessary to salvation.

We said in one of our Notes and Comments a fortnight ago that Jesus Christ should be taken as our Master in every sense; that He can teach art and science as none else. A remarkable confirmation of this is given in Mr. Theodore Watts's "Reminiscences of Christina Rossetti" in the current number of The Nineteenth Century. Before meeting her he regarded her as the most indubitably inspired of all contemporary poets. A lifelong study of poetic art had not enabled him to lay his finger on the secret of her art. Her brother William says:—

She never made up her mind that she would write something and then proceed to write it. She always wrote just as the impulse and the form of expression came to her, and if these did not come she wrote not at all.

It was this very power in her which touched the deepest chord in Mr. Watts's soul, and we think it will be the same with all who read her writings. You cannot anticipate or imagine or be ready for anything; her verse is full of surprises of thought and expression. The inspiration of the Almighty giveth understanding.

There is a note of considerateness and kindness in the circular issued by the Local Government Board to Boards of Guardians, which is pleasing to the heart; Government is not all red tape. It recognises the good which has been done by ladies who have visited the wards for women and children. Further classification of the inmates may proceed according to their moral character and behaviour, or on such other grounds as may appear expedient. Special attention is called to the Act relating to married couples, both of whom shall have attained to the age of sixty years.

Such two persons shall not be compelled to live separate and apart from each other; and by the 39 and 40 Vic., c. 61, it is further provided that the guardians may permit any married couples to live together, either of whom shall be infirm, sick, or disabled by any injury, or above the age of sixty years.

Though the law since 1842 has been that inmates of workhouses need not be clothed in a uniform, the practice of guardians has usually imposed a uniform. This circular may aid in bringing about a change.

Mr. Braxton Hicks, coroner for the South-Western district of London, who has long made a stand against baby-farming, was interviewed the other day by a representative of The Westminster Gazette. He says that the law in relation to babies is monstrous and barbarous. At present it is the easiest thing in the world to dispose of an infant without anyone in authority being in the faintest degree the wiser. The subject is very shocking, but, on that account, calls for exposure and reform. One sentence more will suggest quite enough. "Many newly-born infants are allowed to die, or are even murdered by the midwife who attends these lying-in houses, and it is positively this very interested individual who gives a certificate of still-birth!" These houses are greatly on the increase, and some of the infamous women who keep them make capital incomes. If these are facts, we have in England a class of baby murderers—women Thugs.

The Century, in noticing that there has been renewed discussion in America on the question of social purity, and that great differences of opinion exist among honest and thoughtful persons, gives its own vote in favour of the maintenance of a nobler moral standard. It deprecates the cynicism of large sections of the community, both the openly evil and the apparently decent, "the cynicism which would sacrifice the human soul—especially the soul of woman—upon the altar of the body." Unless this scoffing and low view can be altered there can be no upward movement. It is a good sign that so powerful a magazine is on the right side.

Rev. J. R. Tyerman, of the South American Missionary Society, reports that doors are open everywhere in Chili, and that thousands of Chilians are willing and anxious to listen to the Gospel. He supports the appeal for men, native or otherwise, who know Spanish, and have been trained for missionary work. One of the ablest men at work is an ex-Jesuit, Rev. Count de Bon, who has charge of a Spanish Mission at Angol. Then, again, the Indians are accessible; "the lance is laid aside, and they are now tillers of the soil." Spanish is the medium of communication. Fifty years ago Allen Gardiner could gain no footing; now the Gospel is preached throughout the length and breadth of Araucania. What is to be the effect upon English Christians of the news which thus comes from every land of the willingness of the people to hear? Will someone who has both time and knowledge point out to us the world's open doors which the Church is not entering, or entering with an inadequate staff?

When Charles F. Thwing was pastor of Plymouth Church, Minneapolis, he had several hundred young men in his parish. To a hundred of these he sent a letter in which, among other things, he asked their views as to the preaching they wanted. Broadly stated they asked both for spiritual and moral preaching. "The plain application of the Gospel in regard to right and wrong." "That which shows the character and manliness of Christ." They cry for personal help, and they like to be spoken to by a man who has to fight in the world as they have to do; they love personal testimony as to need, and grace to meet the need. On the whole, perhaps, the desire for strong moral preaching is stronger than for spiritual preaching. That may arise partly from an imperfect apprehension of the bearing of doctrine upon life, and of a wish to be strengthened and guided by direct teaching for daily duty. No desire was expressed for "entertainment." or a discussion of such things as are involved in rationalism.

One of the young men expresses a strong wish that each Church had a Bible-class where every man could come with an honest question, and know that it would be discussed honestly, "where any religious question would be treated with the same honesty and fairness given to legal questions." If there is any church where such honest handling of truth cannot be obtained in some way, then indeed there is a great lack. We should think such churches in large towns in England and Scotland are few. Another young man is of opinion that there are scores of men in connection with his church who could make church-goers out of non-church-going young men by simply asking them in a friendly way to join them on Sunday at church, and to go home with them for dinner. "Of course such courtesies must spring out of genuine interest and friendliness." The same may in some degree be affirmed of every congregation; all the more need, then, to be up and doing.

In a recent sermon on the resurrection, Dr. Fairbairn put the arguments for belief in a historic resurrection with great force—the unanimity of the Apostles, the inability of the Jews to dispose of the resurrection, the hatred of it by the Greeks and all the Gentile world. He told his hearers not to imagine that the dream of necessity, of uniformity in nature, of the iron reign of law, had driven out the belief in the resurrection.

The great difficulty that Christianity has all along had to contend with—says Rev. J. M. Gibbon—has been that of finding men who would take it seriously and follow its principles to their fullest length. We agree. It is treated conventionally, traditionally, in a common-sense way, spiritualisingly—any way but obediently; hence its loss and the world's loss, too. How long would many Church practices continue among us, if the teaching of Christ were taken seriously, and its principles followed fully out? Not a day.

The drudgery of a good deal of Christian work is apt sometimes to be discouraging. "What is the use of my coming five miles into this dreary neighbourhood, and giving from four to five hours of my precious time to attend to such trumpery affairs as these?" So asked himself the chairman of a meeting, as one petty detail after another came up. In a moment he bethought himself, and said in own mind. "It is neither petty nor trumpery to ease the friction between brethren. The work is for Christ, and the smallest affairs of this mission which involve love and faith and holy service are important; it depends on the light in which things are placed." The chairman says he went home feeling he had not wasted either time or strength.

There is a rendering of Psalm c. 4, in the English Prayer-book, which has always seemed to us very personal and fresh, "Be thankful unto Him, and speak good of his name." The gladdest praise, the purest blessing, the most acceptable sacrifice, anywhere and at any time, is to speak good of his name. To speak a good word of Him is to speak a good word for Him; it will be as the fragrance of flowers, as the song of birds, as the beauty of the sky. What a cloud of incense may go up to the throne of God and the Lamb through his people just speaking of Him as they have tasted of his love and as they have seen his glory in the face of Jesus Christ!

SIX YOUNG MEN AND YOUNG WOMEN belonging to the Rochdale "Joyful News" Mission have intimated their willingness to go to Africa, China, and India in connection with the Wesleyan mission work in those countries, and arrangements are being made for their leaving in April or May next.

OPEN-AIR MISSION.—On Thursday evening last the quarterly gathering of the Mission was held in the Baptist Mission House, whither a goodly company wended their way amid falling snow and extreme cold. Rev. J. G. Train's address on "The Abundance of the Heart" proved a spiritual feast which everyone enjoyed. A season of earnest prayer and testimony followed.

WORLD-WIDE EVANGELISATION.

The following extracts are from the late well-known Dr. A. N. Somerville:—

"Would it not be well could we train ourselves to take up all the countries of the world in detail, and make mention of them systematically before God? . . Let me say that our faith should lay account with a blessing coming to whole regions and kingdoms in response to the prayers of even one individual. . . If we find that individuals are employed to change the face of continents by exploration or personal effort, why may not individuals equally prevail when they by prayer may lay hold of the arm of the Almighty? The answer to your prayers may come by God's sending you as evangelists or settlers to the very lands for which you prayed. I believe that the day will declare that solitary individuals have simply by their prayers prevailed to introduce the Gospel into vast and populous dominions."

In regard to this word "settlers," used by our much-respected friend, let me add a word about that small but deservedly esteemed body the Moravians.

The Moravian Brethren early entered on missionary work, and all the prosperity of their Church has been evidently connected with their earnest prosecution of it. Their first mission was planted in 1732 in the Island of St. Thomas in the West Indies; the missionaries who went thither expressing their resolution to become slaves if necessary in order to carry out their purpose. A mission to Greenland, which has been eminently successful, and may be said to have made Greenland a Christian country, was commenced in 1733. The importance of the Moravians is not to be estimated by their numbers. The impulse which they gave to the cause of religion was felt in the origination and growth of Methodism in England; and their influence has been felt throughout all Protestant churches, and particularly in what relates to missionary enterprise.—Chambers's Encyclopædia.

I was greatly struck recently in reading that God may answer our prayers by sending ourselves as colonists or settlers to the very lands for which we have prayed.

Just so at the starting of Christianity, not apostles merely, but all went, and every believer that had a mouth opened that mouth, so says the Scripture, to tell the glorious, joyful news of liberty to the slaves of sin and servants of the devil, through the wondrous love of the great God, and the life and death and resurrection of Jesus Christ. Then why should not the whole body of believers take up the prayer of our beloved brother, the late Dr. Somerville, and pray, as in Acts, "Grant that thy servants, all, young and old, may speak the Word with boldness"?

Oh that in our closets and uniting together over Christendom we could, all round the world, pray with one accord for such a Pentecost, at least equal to, if not far greater than, that at Jerusalem, from which they were driven forth, and often fled; yet they all went forth sowing the good seed of the Word and spreading the glad tidings.

Brothers beloved, Christendom is filled with churches and chapels, but these are nothing without the blessing of the Holy Spirit. So let us now cry for such a Pentecost that Christendom, and every nation under heaven, and even Jews and Mohammedans, shall be blessed, not by man, but by the All-Mighty God Himself, for the sake of Jesus Christ, in whose name we cannot ask too much.

THY WORD IS MY WARRANT.

"Remember the word unto thy servant, upon which Thou hast caused me to hope."—Ps. cxix. 49.

Thy Word is my warrant!
Else how should I dare (Gen. xviii. 31)
To enter thy presence (2 Kings xiii. 23),
Or breathe out my prayer (Lam. iii. 56)?
A sinner, a rebel (Isa. lxiii. 10),
An alien am I (Eph. ii. 12);
Yet by Thee I'm summon'd (Jer. xxxi. 3, marg.),
And made to draw nigh (Jer. xxx. 21).
Thy Word is my warrant!
Empower'd I stand (2 Cor. vii. 1),
To claim ev'ry promise (2 Cor. i. 20)
I hold in my hand (2 Pet. i. 4).
Adoption and sonship (Gal. iv. 5),
And cleansing are mine (1 John i. 7);
Free grace and full pardon (Isa. lv. 7),
And all that is thine (Luke xv. 31).

GREAT ASSEMBLY HALL.

The Great Assembly Hall, Mile End-road, E., is the centre of a many-sided work, which not only increases as time goes on, but is attended by ever-growing and ever-deepening blessing. On Monday evening the twenty-sixth anniversary of the work was celebrated, some thousands of persons assembling on the occasion. The Hall is open every evening all the year round, and Monday marked the 6857th consecutive meeting.

Mr. F. N. Charrington was surrounded by many of his devoted workers, and attended by a number of friends. In the course of a brief address he gloried in the fact that the old Gospel, and no other, is preached in the Great Hall. Total abstinence from intoxicating drinks is also advocated with undiminished earnestness. Every Lord's Day, and on the three succeeding days of each week, the Gospel is preached; on Thursday night Gospel temperance is the order; on Friday there is an experience meeting; on Saturday a prayer-meeting, which is often attended by as many as a thousand persons.

Proceeding, Mr. Charrington acknowledged the whole-hearted co-operation of Mr. E. H. Kerwin, secretary of the work, Captain Andrew Hamilton, who superintends the emigration department, and Miss Turner, of the Y.W.C.A. The Boys' Home is a successful agency, and self-supporting; and the Children's Hall, which accommodates 120 little ones, is a welcome auxiliary. Many must have heard with regret that on this latter building there is still a debt of £1000. A friend of the work has, however, promised £100, on condition that the remainder of the money is raised by the month of June. The heavy deficit on the general work of the Mission had been almost cleared off; and the sum of £100 had been promised on condition that the remainder, about £300, is raised without delay. With regard to the church assembling in the Great Hall, Mr. Charrington said that its present membership is 1416.

Addresses were delivered by Lord Kinnaird, who presided, Rev. Peter Thompson, Mr. Thomas Richardson, and others. A resolution was passed regretting that the work is crippled for want of funds, and commending the Mission to the more liberal support of the Christian public.

THE SPEZIA MISSION.

In the new report of the Spezia Mission for Italy and The Levant, we read:—"A large proportion of those now labouring in the various departments of the Mission have been for a considerable time under the direction and influence of the founder (Rev. Edward Clarke), and in many cases it has been his privilege to be God's instrument in leading them to Christ in the first place, and afterwards in training and equipping them for Christian service.

"Recently two genuine Christians have given themselves to the Mission for training. One is a young monk. His father was a Spaniard, and his mother an Italian. His entire youth was consecrated to a search for God, and until God made Himself known to the lad through the pages of a Latin Bible his heart was fully set upon a monastic life. As it became known that he had opened his heart to the light of God's truth, and as it was seen in his daily walk that old things had passed away and that all things had become new, a fierce persecution arose. He had to escape from the monastery by a fearful leap of between twenty and thirty feet. He had not proceeded far before he was missed and telegraphed for, and was soon seized and handcuffed. "Since then he has been exposed to almost every variety of suffering and persecution for the sake of his Lord. He possesses singular ability, coupled with a deep piety, and bids fair to be a good soldier of Christ.

"The other youth is an Englishman, and has a talent of no mean order for school work. He gives promise of being eminently successful in his efforts to win the young of Italy to the knowledge and love of God. Both of these young men are earnest and devoted Christians, and both have taken kindly and heartily to Christian labour as well as to earnest study under Mr. Clarke's direction. Full of love to their Lord and to his blessed service, much is expected of them."

Communications regarding the work should be addressed to the co-director of the Mission, Rev. H. H. Pullen, Marola, Park Hall-road, East Finchley, N.

THE UNVEILING.—6.

THE LETTERS TO THE CHURCHES.—I.

So much has been written on the Epistles to the Churches and so well that it is not necessary here to dwell long upon them. It is, however, in keeping with the purpose of these papers to point out that these Epistles, like the subsequent prophecy, have a wide and continuous fulfilment. (1) They describe the condition of the seven ancient Churches to which they were originally written. (2) They have been applicable to the Church through all the ages of the dispensation, so that either Epistle, read and enforced in any Church at any period, would not have been irrelevant. (3) They have a successive fulfilment, so that the lapse from first love in Ephesus indicates the cause of the decline which (with the exception of Smyrna and Philadelphia) marks the history of the whole, until self-satisfied and lukewarm Laodicea must be spued out of the mouth of the Amen, the faithful and true Witness, the beginning of the creation of God. (4) They are applicable to the individual Christian, so that any believer, reading any of the Epistles, would find them answer (as, indeed, would any other part of Scripture) more or less distinctly to his own experience.

The church at Ephesus is the only one which is said to have fallen. But it is the fall from first love which is the real and all-inclusive fall. That leads on, in faithful and persecuted Smyrna, to the blasphemy of them that say they are Jews and are not, but are the synagogue of Satan; to Pergamos, where Satan has his throne; to Thyatira, where that woman Jezebel teaches and seduces the servants of Christ; to Sardis, which has a name to live, and yet is dead towards God; to the false Jews, the synagogue of Satan; Philadelphia, the other faithful church; until the evil culminates in Laodicea, who, in her own estimation, has need of nothing, and knows not herself to be the wretched one, poor and miserable, blind and naked.

So it was with Israel of old: "I remember thee, the kindness of thy youth, the love of thine espousals. . . . Israel was holiness to the Lord, the first fruits of his increase." But they went far from Him, and walked after vanity, and changed their glory for that which doth not profit (Jer. ii.). "Thou hast utterly rejected us: thou art very wroth against us" (Lam. v. 22). In the days of her first love the Shulamite sat under the shadow of her Beloved with great delight. His banner over her was love. She had no second thought. "Let Him kiss me with the kisses of his mouth. Thy love is better than wine." But by-and-by she would have Him to be like her brother, that when she kissed Him she might not be despised of them that were without.

The ten days of Smyrna's tribulation are a symbolic period expressive of proof or trial. Thus Johanan, son of Kareah (Jer. xlii. 7), and Daniel and his fellows (Dan. i. 12-15), were proved ten days, as were the disciples at Pentecost between the ascension of the Lord and the outpouring of the Spirit.

Balaam, Balak, and Jezebel, inside the Church, answer to the Beast, the False Prophet, and the Harlot, in the outside world, and teach us that the same kind of evils which are abroad in the world are also operative within the Church: for the flesh and its evil workings are the same in principle, however by the overcoming believer they may be modified and subdued, as he walks not according to the flesh but according to the Spirit.

It is to be observed that in these Epistles we have only the internal condition of the churches, and the dealings with them of the Great High Priest, who walked among the seven golden candlesticks by which they were symbolised. We should naturally expect that in the Book of the Unveiling, with which the canon of Scripture is closed, and which is specifically written to the seven churches, the Church's relation to the world in the midst of which she is left would not be omitted. If the whole of the prophecy from chapter iv. onward is to be regarded as future, and to relate exclusively to a period when the Church has been removed from earth to heaven, then we are forced to this strange conclusion—that while the internal condition of the Church is briefly but distinctly and exhaustively pourtrayed, there is not a vision or even a word descriptive of her relation to the world, in which the generations of her children were to spend two thousand years as the witnesses of their crucified and risen Lord. And this appears the more remarkable when we remember that (as has been shown above) the counterparts of Balaam, Balak, and Jezebel, Satan's agents within the Church, are the three principal agents of the Old Serpent, the Devil, and Satan, in the subsequent world-wide prophecy.

M.

Dr. Parker on Love.*

Nearly everybody in Corinth was either a good speaker or a good hearer; it was the city of eloquence. Paul having heard eloquent declamation said, All this amounts to nothing, unless it be backed up by an infinity of love. And when he heard faulty, hesitant speaking, speaking almost contemptible for its stumbling and feebleness, he said, "This kind of speaking will tell in the long run, if there be behind it the love that suffers long and is kind. Love wins. Be not tired of love. . .

The Apostle calls upon us to believe that unless we have love everything else goes for nothing. He does not depreciate other things, but he values all other things in proportion as they are charged by the spirit of love, and directed by loving purpose; and where there is an absence of other things, that absence is forgotten in the presence of overflowing love. Let there be a child in God's kingdom rather than a philosopher. If you cannot be both, be the child. . .

First of all, the Apostle gets rid of all genius, mental power, pretence of mental eminence,—yea, he gets rid of all almsgiving and all self-martyrdom. The Apostle had a tremendous fist. Whatever he struck reeled under the stunning blow. He comes into all these little pomps and ceremonies by the right of birth, by the right of merit. When some men try to take down the Church, they seem to be doing something beyond their strength; when Paul undertakes to remove, to rebuke, to set things in their right relation, he works with the dignity of a master, and with the ease of one who could produce his credentials if called upon to do so. It is Paul therefore, and not Peter, who sets aside great speaking, great thinking, fine utterance, and even charity of a visible and palpable kind; it is Paul who puts his foot on the smoking ashes of self-martyrdom, and says, All this is useless: what about your love, your self-sacrifice, your living in the spirit of Christ? Where is the cross on which you died for other lives?

Trying myself by this standard, and inflicting myself in so doing with cruel yet righteous humiliation, I have endeavoured to reverse the process. Thus: "Love suffereth long, and is kind." Do I suffer long? Am I kind with it all? No; I break down at the "kind." The long-suffering may be beyond my control, I cannot get things straightened and rectified and put into musical relation and form; I have suffered twenty, thirty years and more from this; so that if I have suffered long, have I love? No; that is the point of self-deception. Love suffereth long, and is through it all sweet, kind, courteous, gracious, uncomplaining; there is not a reproach upon its tongue, there is not one drop of bitterness in its gentle heart.

HOSPITAL MEMORIES.

Some hospital visitors have very cheering stories to tell of the Gospel message proving itself a word in season to the suffering and sorrowing. In a booklet, "Reminiscences connected with the General Hospital of Montreal" (10 cents. Grafton & Drysdale, Montreal) some deeply interesting narratives are related by "Visitor." We quote one:—

"There came to the hospital one day a tall, handsome young fellow, nineteen years of age. He had been out in his father's woods in the Eastern Townships felling trees, when a billet struck him in the eyes. He came to town, and Dr. Buller at once removed one eye; the other, from inflammation, was almost sightless. He went back home a blind young man. Some months afterwards, meeting the doctor, I was asked how Levi was getting on, if he could see at all. 'Yes,' I replied, 'he sees a window when entering a room, but no individual article of furniture.' 'Tell him to come up to town again. I was occupied with a similar case lately. I will try again.' So the poor fellow was brought back to town, but the General Hospital being full, he had to go to Strong's.

"Alas! it was no use; the sight was irrevocably gone. But a noteworthy event took place that shines out in my memory with singular brightness. In Strong's Hospital at that time were two other patients, one a lady, very deaf and almost blind but a devoted Christian, the other also a believer, suffering from a most peculiar disease. The ligaments that sustain the neck were powerless on one side, so that his head always turned with the face looking over the left shoulder; a wooden frame kept it in its place. Now, can you picture these three patients? The lady, I think it was, suggested that as they had all three been brought to the Lord, it would be delightful before parting if we partook of the Lord's Supper.

"I spoke of it to beloved Dean Baldwin, now Bishop of Huron, and he was most happy to come. Shall I ever forget the rapt look on that dear lad's upturned face? The blind eyes were closed for ever, yet the spiritual sight was revealed for ever more. Then the service of the supper—I must not try to describe it, words fail me. The Dean had to go quite close to the deaf and nearly blind lady, and shout so that she could hear his words; the gentleman, stuck up, as it were, in his frame, made the scene altogether most peculiar. Again and again I have visited dear Levi at his home; though blind, he is not inactive, raising poultry and bees, and otherwise, through the greater development of his other senses, being a useful man."

A FOUR-FOLD CORD.

Thine—by eternal choice
Before the word began;
The Father and the Son
Devised the wondrous plan.

Thine—as the Father's gift
To thee—his only One!
This was the chosen Bride
For his beloved Son.

Thine—by redeeming love!
In agonies and blood,
Our debt of sin was paid,
And we brought nigh to God.

Thine—by our full consent,
The rebel heart is won!
Our arms are grounded at Thy feet,
We would be thine alone.

"After the Thousand Years."

Dear Sir,—The correspondence resulting from the first dispersion of copies of this book has brought out a number of points of such interest that I venture to ask leave to mention the principal in your columns.

Dr. Anderson in his kind and able review, and another valued friend privately, have deprecated the words on p. 47. "The Millennium will be, humanly speaking, a tremendous failure," judging apparently that something derogatory to the glory of the King is implied. That this is not so I can fortunately prove by reference to the whole of the four pages which precede this remark, the object of which is to show that as in all the previous dispensations man had failed to profit by the varied dealings of God, through conscience, law, the life of our Lord on earth, and the presence of the Holy Ghost in the Church, so once again will man fail under the coming dispensation even in the presence of the King and absence of Satan. That is the sense, a most real, indisputable, and awful sense surely, in which the Millennium is a failure, as shown by the overwhelming judgments that mark its opening and its close, and the sin, suffering, plague, famine, and death by executive ruling power that characterise its whole course.

All these facts, usually neglected or purposely glossed over, are brought out in the preceding chapters. And with all respect to my friendly critics, I believe that anyone who will read the Scriptures (see footnote p. 36) referred to with sustained attention, will involuntarily find his heart uttering the conclusion to which objection has been taken.

In these earlier chapters it may no doubt have occurred to some that I have painted this Millennial scene with too heavy shadows, and not introduced enough light to give a true impression. Be it remembered, however, I pray, that the glories, beauties, peace, prosperity, and perfection of the Millennium are already fully appreciated by the public mind. The word "Millennium" has slipped even into political talk as indicative of a perfect world. There was no need to enlarge upon these. The book is very short, very condensed, the fruit of the leisure moments of a busy life, and diligence was given to impress mainly that side of the scene, those parts of the picture, that had been too commonly overlooked.

Before leaving this point let me refer students of the subject to a remarkable passage which certainly shades in a portion of the canvas very deeply. It is in Isa. xxxiv. 5, etc., where, referring to the initiatory judgments of the Millennium, we read: "My sword shall come down upon Edom;" "For it is the day of the Lord's vengeance;" "The land shall become burning pitch. It shall not be quenched night or day; the smoke thereof shall go up for ever, from generation to generation, it shall lie waste; none shall pass through it for ever and ever" (v. 10). It is impossible, I conceive, to make room in this passage, as to Edom at least, for the universal blessing usually attributed to the Millennium. Right through that age, and as long as the world standeth, Edom shall be branded with the irreversible vengeance of Jehovah in never-ending barrenness, desolation, and malediction.

I am indebted to an objector for an unintentional service rendered in the correction of the words ("or diligently") on p. 37 as an amended reading for "early" in the verse from Ps. ci. "I will early destroy all the wicked of the land, that I may cut off all wicked doers from the city of Jehovah." The statement is that this Psalm sets forth the exercise of "constant...judgment, detecting, convicting, and punishing with death" all sin, as "the normal system of government throughout the Millennial reign." My correspondent points out that the Hebrew for "early" will not (as in Prov. viii. 17) bear the alternative meaning of "diligently." But on referring to the Revised Version we find that the word is translated "morning by morning," instead of "early." Thus my argument is immensely strengthened, for these words convey, as none others could so forcibly do, the regularity and continuity of the judgments, and prove that it is not only at the opening and the close of the reign that such inflictions will be needed, but throughout its course, from the beginning and to the end. The same truth is taught by the words "from one new moon to another, and from one Sabbath to another...they shall go forth and look upon the carcases of the men who have transgressed against Me" (Isa. lxvi. 23).

A question which another letter has raised is, "Why is Satan to be released at the end of the thousand years?" Why is his imprisonment interrupted for that terrible final act of the drama? The reply is, that the Millennium is a Dispensation of Probation. Man's claim is that, given a fair field, and no hostile foreign element of temptation; given a Righteous Ruler and a favourable environment; and given all this long enough in time; and then he will be found to be all that he ought to be, a lover of God and an obedient servant of his Creator. Now, if Satan were not to be released after that full and favourable probation had been granted, the professions of man would be subjected to no test. This is the heavy coal-train by which that graceful bridge-structure must be proved. Before the new earth is peopled by these Millennial professors it must be clearly known and publicly displayed in the sight of all creation that the old Adam is truly reformed. So Satan is given a little space to call man to his standard as of old. With what result we know. The release of Satan will be an essential link in the chain of the vindication of God, that He may be justified when He speaketh, and be clear when He judgeth (Ps. li. 4).

There are other inquiries and criticisms with which, not to make this letter too long, I shall ask leave to deal in my next.—Yours in the blessed Hope,

Geo. F. Trench.

CONVENTION AT NORWOOD.

The severe weather did not prevent large congregations gathering in Lansdowne Hall, West Norwood, on Wednesday and Thursday of last week, for the Convention on the Deepening of Spiritual Life, convened by Pastor Gooch. In the matter of speakers, the Conference was altogether admirably served, and the many practical utterances of the two days must surely have due weight in the lives of the hearers. The afternoon audiences were largely made up of ladies, but in the evenings they were well mixed.

The first set speaker on Wednesday afternoon was Rev. J. G. Train, of Upper Norwood, who drew many telling lessons for the professing Church of to-day from the ancient story of Abraham and Lot. As against the close fellowship with God maintained by the father of the faithful, there was set the worldly conformity shown by Lot, with the many sorrows into which it led him, and the spiritual paralysis that followed. Rev. R. Middleton, of Norwich, had also a weighty message from the Old Testament—"What do these Hebrews here?" (1 Sam. xxix. 3). The ungodly world of to-day is often surprised at seeing those who are called by the name of Christ hand and glove with themselves in their aims and pursuits. Reproach is thus brought on the name of the Master and defeat on his Church. In a third address Mr. Samuel Wilkinson urged believers to a full acceptance of the provision stored up for them by God in Christ.

Pastor Gooch was the opening speaker in the evening. He dwelt forcibly on the dishonour done to God by the feeble, unspiritual lives of Christians, and the need for humiliation of spirit on this account. Mr. Walter Sloan showed how the fulness and power of the life and walk of the believer will correspond with the practical apprehension of the Christ-life for us and in us. Dr. McKilliam impressively pointed out some hindrances—spiritual pride and sufficiency, leaning on self, and a non-appropriation by faith of the Divine power at our disposal.

On Thursday afternoon there was again an abundance of soul provision in the three addresses given. Rev. F. B. Meyer's utterance was at once uplifting and humbling; exhibiting the rich privilege of the believer, and the sense of personal shortcoming, which all honest hearts must feel. From John xv. 13-15, he showed that friendship in the Christ life is on a higher plane than mere service, and indicates an advanced stage of attainment. As friends Christ will naturally and reasonably expect from us obedience, community of interest and intercourse. We, on the other hand, may count on Christ calling out our best powers and possibilities; on his telling us where we are defective; on his explaining to us the mysteries that baffle us in life; and on his carrying the heavy end of all our burdens. These points were very felicitously stated and illustrated. Rev. G. H. C. Macgregor urged the entire consecration of the intellect, of the conscience, of the heart, of the will, and of the body—a very comprehensive and far-reaching exhortation. Rev. J. J. Luce, of Gloucester, threw a fresh light on the twenty-third Psalm; the first part of which he regarded as setting forth the satisfying life, and the latter part the ever-flowing life. The link between the two is in verse 4, "Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil." This he interpreted as pointing to the crucifixion of self that must precede any true life of holiness and service. The reason why there is so little practical outcome comparatively from all the talk about consecration is that we seek to avoid this crucifixion of the self-life.

At the closing meeting, in the evening, Mr. Luce again spoke, expounding with many beautiful touches some portions of Psalm cxvi. The phrase, "the cup of salvation" (verse 13), he said, would be more profitbly translated "the cup of deliverances"; and three of these are mentioned in verse 8—"delivered my soul from death, mine eyes from tears, and my feet from falling." Another helpful exposition of the sacred oracle came from Mr. R. C. Morgan, who read and commented on 1 John chap. i., and a part of chap. ii. It was a plea for a sincere and honest walk ("in the light") before God, and a testimony that even the most advanced and consecrated believer daily needs the covering and cleansing of the atoning Blood. At the close of the address Pastor Gooch expressed thankfulness for Mr. Morgan's message, greatly needed in these times, when some are claiming to have the root of sin extracted from the nature. The closing address by Rev. R. Middleton was a very simple but delightfully clear and comforting exposition of the well-known words of Christ, "Come unto Me all ye that labour and are heavy laden, and I will give you rest. Take my yoke upon you and learn of Me, for I am meek and lowly in heart, and ye shall find rest unto your souls" (Matt. xi. 28, 29).

On the Tuesday evening there was a preparatory meeting, at which some appropriate words were spoken by Rev. James Douglas. A meeting for praise and testimony was held on Saturday evening.

The following lines, suggested by the conference, are sent to us by one who attended the meetings:—

DAILY LIFE.

Are you watching for the Master
Day by day?
As each golden morn is breaking
Does the thought your spirit cheer?
Maybe ere the day is over
He'll appear.

Are you walking with your Master
Day by day?
Simply walking on with Jesus,
Trusting Him for one step more;
Thankful that He veils the future
Yet in store.

Are you working for the Master
Day by day?
Are you gathering in some lost ones,
Following in the Saviour's track,
Till the Keeper of the vineyard
Cometh back?

Go on watching, waiting, working,
Day by day,
In the little time that's left you,
Even though the way be dark,
Press still onward, upward, Heavenward,
T'ward the mark.

MIDNIGHT MEETING MOVEMENT.—The Voluntary Workers' New Year's devotional meeting was held a few days ago at Exeter Hall, under the presidency of Mr. Frederick Hughes, one of the original committee. A deeply spiritual address was given by the Rev. W. H. Dickinson, of Notting Hill, and much prayer was offered for the society's work. Additional interest was given to the gathering, as it commemorated the twenty-fifth anniversary of the secretary, Mr. Wilson McCree.

FRIENDLESS AND FALLEN.—During January, the Homes and Open-all-night Refuge have been kept in full operation, and many painfully interesting cases have been admitted. Ninety-seven applications were received during the month at the office, and every suitable case was promptly succoured. Seventy-one were admitted during the same period to the Open-all-night Refuge. The continued inclement weather is bringing more applicants for help, and the daily needs of the work is a heavy burden to the executive.

CONFERENCE AT FOO CHOW.

It has been my privilege during the last few weeks to be in Foo Chow, one of the ports of Southern China. And while here the annual conference of the Methodist Episcopal Church has been in session. The American Methodists have an admirable plan of sending a bishop out annually, who encourages, cheers, strengthens the hands of his brethren and sisters in the field, looks into the details of the work, and, fully equipped with information, returns and reports to his co-workers in the homeland; thus a helpful and intelligent bond of union is established between the home churches in America and the native Christians in China. Some of the oldest work in the empire is in this province; it is now some fifty years since the first missionaries came. And while they recall the initial ten years of toiling and weeping, it must indeed be encouraging to their hearts to-day to realise that there are more doors open now than they can possibly enter, and that native Christians number something over 30,000.

Perhaps nowhere in China would one see a native church more fully organised, and in working order, so to speak. The Methodists seem to have a specially effective plan of drawing the church members into active service, and encouraging the men and women to take part in the development of church life. It was very interesting on the day set aside for the discussion of "native support" to observe how unanimous was the better mind of the native section of the Conference in regard to the advisability of favouring, as far as possible, a system of support independent of the foreigners' money. The anti-foot-binding meeting was also a stirring time, and while the native mind is moving on this subject, it is slow to realise the evils accruing from this dreadful practice, but the testimony from the lady worker is that definite spiritual blessing commonly follows the decision to unbind the feet, so that in view of this fact one cannot lightly underrate the importance of pressing home this subject. The missionaries here are unanimous and resolute in regard to the three fold pledge for their native preachers against opium, tobacco, and the use of wine.

It was a thrilling meeting, the last grand one of the Conference, when missionaries and natives together pledged over three hundred pounds for the building of a new church, the present one being quite inadequate for the requirements of the Mission. Some of the women came and laid their ornaments down as offerings, like the women of Scripture times, and one of their number said, "We are not going to have any more wine in our home, so we can give the equivalent of that in money." And yet people will coolly ask is Christianity doing anything for China? Yes, Christianity can do for the Chinese exactly what it is doing for you—what it has done for your forefathers, and what you expect it will do for your children. The Gospel is the power of God unto salvation in China as elsewhere.

Perhaps one of the salient points of the Conference to a visitor was the huge camp meetings which were held during two days. The tent was calculated to hold about fifteen hundred persons. And it did indeed make one's heart rejoice to see the crowds that assembled and attentively listened to the preachers' words, and many were the short, bright testimonies given by natives at the experience meetings. Here was the answer to many an earnest prayer offered up in the homelands for the coming of the Spirit in power on the native Christians. Brothers and sisters, pray on.

It is rather a matter of interest in connection with the work here that perhaps two of the most warm-hearted and aggressive of the native Christians are men in business positions in the city, and not at all in the employ of the missionaries. They are just now planning a trip in the interior to visit and have meetings with the native Christians.

Most interesting were the afternoon meetings for the women, and it was at times difficult to believe that one was in dark China as one point of interest and another was under discussion. One native pastor's wife read a paper on "The Observance of the Sabbath"; another, "The Evils in Connection with the Use of Wine," and so on. God bless abundantly the women who labour in the Gospel of whatever clime or tongue! It may be of interest to our English readers to know that Mrs. Ahok, whose visit to England is still fresh in the minds of many, was present at these meetings, and was the one appointed to give an address of welcome to the delegates to the women's conference.

Lately one of the villages in Archdeacon Wolfe's country district has en masse professed to renounce heathenism, the temple has been given over for a church, and the idol brought away in triumph. Such are some of the inroads being made on Satan's kingdom. Praise the Lord! One important point which seems to have been indisputably established during the last few weeks in the Foo Chow district is how God can and does use interpretation. Lately four people have been manifestly owned and blessed by God in this way: the Bishop of the Methodist Episcopal Church; Mrs. Ninde, a delegate from the "Woman's Missionary Society" in America; Mr. Baring Gould, one of the secretaries of the Church Missionary Society, and Mr. Millard, formerly in business here, but during the last few years associated in mission work with Mr. George Grubb, in the Colonies and elsewhere. The latter, night after night, has been speaking by interpretation, to little bands of native Christians, and the spirit of the Lord has been manifestly present in power.

A good deal has been said first and last in China in regard to the special difficulties of treaty ports. This is, indeed, doubtless true, but when God the Holy Ghost really takes possession of a man, it does not seem to be of any special importance, whether his home is located on the coast line or in the interior; he seems to be turned upside down, and old things become new to him. In these days of wars and rumours of war, when the sound of Eastern cannon seems almost to be vibrating in our ears, it is, indeed, a matter of rejoicing to me that I can be the herald of such good and blessed tidings of the conquests of the Prince of Peace.

EXPOSITORY NOTES.

THE SIN OFFERING.

And Nadab and Abihu, the sons of Aaron, took either of them his censer and put fire therein, and put incense thereon, and offered strange fire before the Lord, which He commanded them not. . . And Aaron said unto Moses, Behold, this day have they offered their sin offering and their burnt offering before the Lord; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin offering to-day should it have been accepted in the sight of the Lord? And when Moses heard that, he was content.—Leviticus x. 1—7, 16—20.

The priest represented all Israel before the Lord; therefore, when he sinned, it was as though the congregation sinned; it brought guiltiness upon all the people (Lev. iv. 3). When either the priest or the whole congregation had sinned, the same sin-offering was required—a young bullock. And it was treated in the same way for the priest and the congregation; some of its blood was carried into the tabernacle, sprinkled before the Lord before the veil, and put upon the horns of the altar of sweet incense. Then the inwards were burned as a sweet savour upon the altar of burnt-offering (showing that when regarded as a sin-offering, Jesus was in his inward being as well-pleasing to God as when regarded as a burnt-offering). Then the whole body of the victim was carried forth without the camp, and burned up with devouring fire.

But if a ruler or one of the common people had sinned, the blood of the sin-offering was poured out at the bottom of the altar of burnt-offering, which stood outside the entrance to the tabernacle, and some of its blood was put upon the horns of the burnt-offering altar; it was not carried into the tabernacle, nor sprinkled before the veil, nor put upon the horns of the incense altar.

Nor was this all the difference between the sin-offering of the priest or the whole congregation, on the one hand, and that of a single individual, whether a ruler or one of the common people, on the other. In the case of the priest or the congregation, the whole of the creature (except the inwards, which in all cases ascended with acceptance upon the altar of burnt-offering) was consumed without the camp. But in the case of the ruler or other person the fat was burnt as a peace-offering, showing that atonement had been made, and that reconciliation between God and the sinner was complete. And there was this further and important difference: the flesh of this sin-offering of the ruler or one of the common people was eaten by the priests.

We are told in Exodus xxviii. 38, that the golden plate engraved with Holiness to the Lord was always to be worn upon the forehead of the high priest, that he may bear the iniquity of the holy things which the children of Israel should hallow in all their holy gifts. At the inauguration of the priesthood (Lev. viii. ix.), sin-offerings were offered for Aaron the high priest, and for the people—not to make atonement for any specific sin, but for their inherent sinfulness; and as no transgression had been committed, the blood was not taken into the tabernacle, nor sprinkled before the veil, nor put upon the horns of the altar of incense, but put upon the horns of the burnt-offering altar and poured out at the bottom of that altar. The body, however, of the sin-offering for Aaron was burnt without the camp; for he could not eat his own sin-offering. But Moses expected that Aaron and his sons would have eaten the goat of the sin-offering for the people, because God had given it to them to bear the iniquity of the people, and to make atonement for them before the Lord. And Moses, though the meekest man on earth, felt so deeply the importance of this priestly ministry, that he was angry because Aaron had not done so.

But the very first act of the priests, Nadab and Abihu, Aaron's sons, had been, possibly under the influence of strong drink (x. 1-3, 9-11), to offer strange fire before the Lord which He had commanded them not (Ex. xxx. 9). And there went out fire from the Lord and devoured them. Aaron rightly felt that, such iniquity having been committed by the priests, his sons, it would have been unseemly for him to have put himself forward as bearing the iniquity of the people.

It was wonderful that Aaron, who a year before had modelled the golden calf, and made the people naked before their enemies, should have so grown in spiritual intelligence as was manifest on this sorrowful and humiliating occasion. Observe the obedient self-restraint of his words. Any expression of grief by the priestly family had been forbidden, for, as God's representatives, silent acknowledgment of his righteous judgment must prevent any expression of their personal distress. It must have been very hard to suppress his grief. He could not trust himself to say many words, and the brief reply to his brother was in "words fitly spoken, like apples of gold in baskets of silver." They were instinct with the humble dignity of a broken and contrite heart: "Behold, this day have they offered their sin-offering and their burnt-offering before the Lord; and such things have befallen me: and if I had eaten the sin-offering to-day [professing to bear the people's iniquity, when my own sons have so fearfully transgressed and suffered], should it have been accepted before the Lord?" And when Moses heard that, he was content.

We must remember the unsubdued wailing of an Eastern's sorrow, in order to appreciate the self-suppression of these pregnant words, "And such things have befallen me." But to be observed with reverent admiration is the sense of God's holiness, which made it impossible for him that day to take his priestly place of bearing the iniquity of the people. If the priesthood began with grievous failure, it began also with the meekness and lowliness, the truthful confession, and the contrite humiliation, which are the first qualifications of a true servant of God. It was in the spirit of the poured-out sorrow of the sinless Servant in the hundred-and-second Psalm. It was because in Aaron's consciousness all things were naked and opened unto the eyes of Him with whom we have to do. He felt himself to be, as we always are, in the presence of the Holy Lord God.

Soon the whole,
Like a parchèd scroll,
Shall before my amazèd sight uproll;
And without a screen
At one burst be seen
The Presence wherein I have ever been.

PORTKNOCKIE, N.B.—A five weeks' mission was recently conducted by Mr. James McKendrick, evangelist, in the Free Church Hall. The meetings were of an undenominational character, Rev. P. Brown and other Christian workers freely assisting. The Lord very manifestly owned the work, fully 100 during the course of the mission professing to have received Christ. The testimonies borne by many of the fishermen were touching and refreshing.

THE PEACE SOCIETY (47, New Broad-street, E.C.) has, at great expense, purchased half-a-dozen sets of beautiful slides for magic lantern lectures. One of these has been lent by the society to ex-Provost Clark, of Paisley, who has been making good use of them in that place and its vicinity. Another fine set has been lent to Mr. S. J. Capper, who has been exhibiting them at a series of meetings in Scotland. The other sets are being utilised in various parts of England.

AMONG RUSSIAN EXILES.—3.

By A STUNDIST.

(Concluded.)

At the first opportunity I went to these despised and persecuted Christians. Their hovels were dug down so deep in the earth, and their roofs so low, that one had to stoop deep down in order to get in. On entering, a damp and stinking atmosphere, charged with carbonic acid, threatened to suffocate me. I had to make a strong effort to overcome an attack of nausea and fainting. My eyes having got used to the sparse light, I could discern the father and the mother with their large number of small children, who looked curiously at me. In spite of the extreme poverty and the overcrowding (in the outer room were poultry, ducks, turkeys, calves, and a lamb), they evidently tried to keep their hovel as clean and neat as possible.

"How did you get here?" I asked them, wishing to know the particulars about their banishment.

"We are called Mogilevzi because we come from the Province of Mogilew. Formerly we belonged to the Orthodox Church, but some years ago we left it and ceased worshipping the ikons. At first there were only few of us, but in a short time almost the whole village became interested in the evangelical doctrine which we proclaimed to the best of our ability. The pope began to grumble, because his sheep left him, and he was in danger of losing all his income. He instigated the village police against us, inciting them to adopt severe measures in order to stop the heretical propaganda.

"The uriadnik (the lowest village police) began his own way to do the priest's commandments, namely by using the fist and the knout. The brother who was supposed to be our leader was treated with special cruelty; they pulled out almost all his hair and beard, and finally threw him, wounded and half dead, into prison. After a few days an administrative order came from the Governor that we should be sent forthwith to the steppes near the Black Sea. We had not even time to sell our izbas (huts) and the rest of our property, in order to get a little money for the journey. Our men were sent by étape, and our women and children and the aged, started on foot after them. Our sufferings from hunger and cold God alone knows. We had just arrived at this place when we were overtaken by the severe winter cold—without food, without homes, and without clothes. If we had not received help from M. (my host) and his brother, we would all have died from scorbutus and typhus, which broke out among us in consequence of hunger and cold. They gave us land, some building material, some cattle and agricultural implements, in order to make it possible for us to till the land and save our families from starving. We enjoy here more liberty than we did at home, because we live far away from the villages where the ataman (the Cossack chief) resides. God be praised, we have now got homes of our own, and if we are left alone by the authorities we shall have no reason to complain."

I visited several of these humble homes, and observed everywhere great poverty, but none of the people complained; but on the contrary, they regarded it as a grace from God that they had found a corner where they could live, and a piece of bread to stay their hunger. I offered to establish a temporary school for the children, because I pitied them, seeing that none took care of them, and that nobody was able to teach them. Many of their parents could read, it is true, but even if they had time they had not knowledge how to teach their children. They gladly accepted my offer, and the school was established.

I was not permitted, however, to continue my work for more than four months. The pope of the village having been informed that we held meetings, which were attended by even large numbers of orthodox people, he incited the ataman to send Cossacks to watch us and our meetings. On the following Sunday we saw, to our astonishment and dismay, four armed Cossacks posted at the entrance of the meeting-house. We continued our meeting as usual. The faces of the Cossacks, which at first seemed very stern, by-and-by got a softer expression, under the influence of the prayers and the singing, and soon large tears were seen rolling down the face of one of them. In this manner the meetings continued for six weeks. We were expecting every day from the authorities orders of banishment "by administrative process" of such among our numbers as were regarded as particularly "dangerous," but no order of banishment arrived. The reason was this, that the Cossacks had reported to the ataman that we were peaceable and honest people, that nothing unlawful or improper was done at our meetings, and that we were faithful subjects of the Tsar, praying at every meeting for the Tsar and for Russia.

This had evidently a reassuring influence on the ataman, but within a short time the situation changed entirely. One of the Cossacks ordered to watch us was so strongly influenced by the Gospel that he left the Church, and joined us, and so did another Cossack with his family in a neighbouring village. This occurrence could not remain unnoticed by the local civil and ecclesiastical authorities, and they now instituted a much stricter watch over us, in order to put an end to our heretical propaganda. Now I had to leave the place, and return home. Some time afterwards I was informed that the brothers M. had been compelled to leave the steppes, and that the unhappy religious exiles again had to suffer terrible misery from persecution. Their elder was imprisoned and banished a second time, after having been "deprived of all his rights," on the accusation of having "seduced Orthodox people to join his sect."

On my way home I found another group of families, who had suffered terrible persecution for their faith, having been hunted and driven from place to place. Among their number was an old man, who at the age of eighty had been banished, although he was suffering from hydrostrophy of the heart, and was so ill that he could not walk even with the help of crutches. He had been transported in a miserable telega (peasant cart). His old wife, who suffered from emphysema, went to St. Petersburg to try and get her husband released from banishment; but the climate in the north was too severe for her, and she had to return without gaining her object. A few days after her return she died. Of the old exile I have since then heard no further. Probably he has been called to his rest and reward by this time.

This is not the only old person banished for his faith; there are many, both men and women, who have been banished at the age of 65-80. I have a list of over 223 "numbers" of religious exiles in Elisabetpol alone, not including their families. The relatives of these exiles, mostly women and children, number 342, making in all 565 individuals. Among those 223 "numbers" all ages are represented, from twenty-one to eighty-two years. It often happens that the wife is sent away to one place, while her husband is sent to another, the children being taken in charge by Orthodox "guardians."

I close this narrative (which could be doubled by similar authentic facts which have come to my knowledge or under my personal observation) with an extract from a petition which was sent last year from Stundists in Elisabetpol to the late Tsar, but which probably never reached him:—

"It is the glory of God to conceal a thing, but the honour of kings is to search out a matter. Therefore we venture, with the deepest affection and love, to lay down our humble petition at your Majesty's feet. We have been banished because of our Evangelical, so-called, Baptist faith, to the Government of Elisabetpol for five years. We have been entirely ruined, and some of us are compelled to go about begging to save our own lives and those of our children from starving to death. Besides, our children have been deprived of their parents, and we are unable to fulfil the Lord's command to bring up our children in the fear of the Lord. Our suffering is so much greater because these sufferings have been brought upon us by professors of the Gospel, and yet Christ has said, 'I have come not to destroy men's lives, but to save them.'

"And why have we not been treated according to the spirit of the Gospel? Perhaps because our chains should be witnesses before God of the violence to our consciences perpetrated by professors of the Gospel? The places to which we have been banished are dreadful, both with regard to the climate and to the economical conditions; wherefore the most of us are deprived of the means of subsistence, and are doomed to perish among Tartars and Armenians, where we are unable to earn anything by our work. Our lot is made still harder by the fact that we are forbidden to go to other cities, and our miserable condition compels us to appeal to your Imperial Majesty for help. We are convinced that God has put on your Majesty the care of all your subjects without regard to religion.

"We obey your Imperial Majesty in all civil matters, according to law. We pay taxes, fulfil the military service, as well as other duties laid upon us. But as for our worshipping God according to his will, as far as we can learn it from his Word, we will never give it up, because it is our greatest treasure, which we value highly in our inmost soul; and we would rather sacrifice our lives and die from hunger than deny our Lord. We desire to endeavour in all things to follow the example of Christ, who suffered and gave his life for us.

"Whatever trial shall befall us, yet we will rejoice that we, for Christ's sake, are counted worthy to suffer an ignominious death. We lay down at your Majesty's feet with the greatest humbleness the list of all those that are banished to Elisabetpol, and implore your Majesty to pardon us, and permit us to return to our homes with our families, and deliver us from a premature death, which many of our numbers have already suffered on account of unbearable hardships. . . ."

(The petition was signed, on the accompanying list, by over 200 Nonconformist exiles.)

THE STORY OF A GOOD WORK.

For five years past a good work has been carried on by a devoted band of Christian workers connected with John-street Chapel, Bedford-row, in the common lodging houses of the district. Recently they gave a substantial tea to some 300 destitute men and women. At the after meeting the pastor (Rev. J. E. Shephard) presided, and stirring addresses were given by various friends. The secretary reported that during the year 703 had been supplied with lodgings, and nearly as many with food. Clothes had been given to a large number. Four people were started in business with watercress, newspapers, shoe brushes, cottons, tapes, etc. Twelve women were rescued from the streets and placed in homes; twenty-seven signed the temperance piedge; four professed conversion, one of whom has died since.

Many cases of usefulness and blessing were reported, one of which we give. L. R. was deeply convicted of sin during a service in the lodging-house kitchen. She was pointed to the Saviour and gave herself to Him. She had come from the country and had been led astray. Her parents were communicated with; they were heart-broken, but too poor to pay her fare home. The mother wrote that if she could only have her home she would find her food. A train was selected, and a letter written stating what time she would arrive, and then one of the workers paid her fare and saw her off to her distant home in Devonshire. There was her mother waiting to receive and give her a hearty reception. Soon came a letter of deepest gratitude; others have followed, and the last one, just to hand, says she has just married a respectable man, is trusting in the Saviour, and hopes ere long to send some acknowledgment by way of helping to save others.

Who will help on the good work? More could be done if the means were greater. Clothes, hospital letters, and convalescent home letters will be thankfully received by Rev. J. E. Shephard, Mountfort Lodge, Barnsbury-square, N.

TRACT DISTRIBUTION IN WALES.—English and Welsh tracts are eagerly accepted by country people visiting the county town of Brecon, and my colporteur who visits the market receives the heartiest of welcomes. Will those who have old Gospel papers (illustrated preferred), tracts, or booklets, kindly send a portion to D. Devoir Thomas, Castle-street, Brecon, and thus help a good work?

BLACKTHORN-STREET CHAPEL, BOW, E.—The children's work, which is the work for East London, is most cheering. Six years ago we had about 300 children; to-day we have considerably over 1200 under our instruction. Of these 800, with nearly sixty Christian teachers, are in the Sunday-school, and besides these we have a Band of Hope, drift children meeting, Sunday night classes, etc., which bring up our figures to the above-named total. The drift children (400) have had their annual treat. The Band of Hope (200) has held its quarterly tea; and the Sunday-school has just concluded a series of most successful anniversary services. During the past year much blessing was granted on all the departments of the work. T. J. H.

AGGRESSIVE WORK.—13.

A MIDDLE-AGED Roman Catholic priest, above the ordinary in appearance, with a cord and tassel round his hat, sat alone in a railway carriage in Exchange Station here. I entered and sat opposite him, remarking it was a fine day. He smilingly assented, and seemed ready to converse. I said, "I suppose it will always be fine when we reach the better land, sir?" His attitude quickly changed, and giving a sort of grunt he drew a small book out of his side pocket, and began to settle himself to read.

I remarked, "I shall be so glad, sir, if you will allow the conversation to continue upon this subject." He asked, "What subject?" "The matter of salvation; as I am interested in it and would like to have some instruction upon that point which I presume you will be able to give me." He answered, "Yes, but this is not the time or place for that; if you will come down to Crosshall-street on Thursday evening at eight o'clock I shall be glad to do so." He was inviting me to a Roman Catholic institution and chapel which I happened to know. I said, "I live in the outskirts, and it would be inconvenient for me to go down into town of an evening from such a distance. Why not inform me now how salvation is to be obtained?" Again he repeated, "If you will come down to Crosshall-street on Thursday evening, or any other evening, I shall be glad." I explained that time was hurrying on, and we never knew from day to day what may happen, so that there is no time like the present.

"No, no," was his answer, and he began to open his book again.

I then asked whether it would take me long to understand it, and he said, "That depends upon your aptitude to learn; but I should think not." Once more I said, "Then why not tell me now, as the train is still stationary and we shall have some time together?" He muttered something, and began handling his book. I now looked him straight in the face and said, politely but firmly, "Is your own soul saved, sir, and do you know it?" This brought matters to a climax, for he energetically dropped the carriage window, and putting out his head called lustily, "Porter, porter!" One of the inspectors came up and the priest appealed to him for protection, saying that I had annoyed him with a conversation he did not wish to continue, and had spoken insultingly to him. Of course I had spoken only civilly, but the subject was uncongenial to him, and I have always found it is so with such men. "Out of the abundance of the heart the mouth speaketh," but when the heart is full of something else the subject is naturally distasteful.

The inspector happened to know me: he at once saw through the whole matter, and could do nothing but smile. The poor priest now evidently considered his case hopeless, and savagely opening the carriage door he rushed out and entered a compartment higher up, and so the little episode terminated!

Attacking error seems to me almost as important as directly preaching the Word, and Romanism is so wily and destructive a system that, to my mind, it should receive our uncompromising opposition. I feel irresistibly compelled to challenge such owls of midnight whenever the opportunity offers. After drawing these men into conversation about the assurance of salvation, I find them over and over again answering, with a sort of self-satisfied air, as though it settled the whole matter, "No man knows whether he is worthy of love or hatred"; and when I ask where that passage is, they have replied, "Paul says it"; but they don't know where. Of course, I inform them that there is no such passage in Scripture, but that Paul teaches the very opposite, and plainly shows in Romans iii., Romans vi. 23, and 2 Corinthians, v. 1, what we are by nature, and may be by grace. Then I show they are misquoting Ecclesiastes ix. 1, and that Solomon is there not speaking of salvation at all.

Then follows another attempt at quoting Scripture. "The just man falls seven times a day." I ask where that is, and again they are unable to say. I tell them they are referring, I presume, to Prov. xxiv. 16, "For a just man falleth seven times, and riseth up again." I also explain the passage, showing that its teaching is the power of the endless life in restoring the true believer who has fallen.

But fancy their lamentable ignorance of Scripture! These are undoubtedly the blind leaders of the blind, for very rarely indeed have I found any of them knowing much about the grand old Book; consequently, it is not difficult to expose their ignorance if you can only get them to talk.

ON THE UPPER ZAMBESI.

I wish and pray that our appeal for a medical missionary may find an echo somewhere. It is not one medical man we need for the mission, but two, one for Lealuyi and this part of the country, and the other for Sesheke and Kazungula and that vast district. It is somewhat strange that in a climate like this we should have been left so long without medical assistance. Yet it is not for the members of the mission themselves that we plead. We firmly believe that if the Lord places us Himself in such circumstances where we cannot depend on human help, He Himself is bound to care for us, and He does it with infinite lovingkindness. But we grieve that there should be no one in this land of suffering and woe to fulfil that ministry of sympathy and love which our Lord honoured when He was among men.

Each of us does his best, of course, in dispensing medicine according to the little knowledge which he has gained by study and experience. But there is not a day that I do not grieve over my powerlessness to relieve and to cure intelligently and efficiently the sufferer and the sick. I cannot understand how we have come, in the preparation of men sent like the apostles among the heathen, to separate the ministry of healing the body from that of healing the soul. The natives do not separate them; in their minds it is one whereever we go, and even where the Gospel is unknown. And yet, though I say I do not understand why that blank in the preparation of the missionary, yet I think I do—lack of men, lack of means, and the pressing spiritual needs of perishing millions! We are hurried on to the battlefield. Happy and blessed are the few who are fully equipped to be good Samaritans to their fellow men, and attend lovingly at the same time to physical and to moral evils, which are so closely connected!

RED INDIANS AT RED EARTH.

DEAR SIR,—Devon is the name of my station, and it is situated in Eastern Saskatchewan, N.W. Canada. Red Earth is an outstation, and is about 110 miles south of Devon. Simon Bell, one of my Christian Indians, came to me about the end of August, 1893, and said he had been thinking and praying much about the heathens at Red Earth. The more he prayed, the more he felt that God required him to give up his home at Devon to go and teach the Indians at Red Earth. He made known his impressions to about half a dozen of the leading Christians of our congregation, who joined with him in prayer asking God to make his will known to them concerning Simon. After prayer had been offered, he said, "I feel the call is for me, and I feel I must go; and I am prepared to go in God's strength to teach the poor heathens at Red Earth." I gave my hearty approval of what they had done, and another prayer-meeting was held for the purpose of commending this native missionary to God for his guidance and blessing.

I took Simon and his family to Red Earth, where he remained during the winter of 1893-4. Every one spoke well of him, and he did a good work. Knowing he could not remain there long without some support, I appealed for funds both in England and Canada to enable me to keep him there permanently. But as I received no response from either country, Simon had to return in the spring of 1894 to Devon. On my way to visit that station, I met him returning. His features plainly showed how much he had suffered from lack of food during the winter, and he asked me if I had a spare shirt with me, as the only one he possessed was too ragged to be washed. I found on arriving at the Mission that both the heathen and Christian Indians were sorry he had to leave them. The Roman Catholic priest who is stationed near is watching every opportunity to take advantage of our weakness, and I fear we may lose this Mission station unless some Christian friends will help me to support a teacher there.

Sixty pounds per annum is required to keep one such servant of the Lord at Red Earth. If any Christian friend would like to help support a native teacher at Red Earth, I shall be glad to answer any questions.—Faithfully yours,

(Rev.) J. HINES.

EFFORT IN KABYLIA.

REV. JEAN PAUL COOK, writing from the French Mission House, Il Mathen par El'Kseur, Kabylia, says:—

"Eight years ago the French Methodist Conference decided to start a mission in Kabylia, and sent out Mr. Thomas Hocart, a young and zealous pastor. After staying two years with his young wife at Bougie, to learn the language and get a knowledge of the country, he came to take up his abode in this place. It was thought best to begin with the young, and several Sunday and Thursday schools have been established. In this way we gather together, in five different villages, about 120 boys and thirty little girls, whom we teach to sing hymns and to repeat verses from the Scriptures. We are much encouraged in our work. The children, although undisciplined, listen attentively, and some of them know already by heart a goodly number of parables. They would put to shame, I am sure, many children brought up amidst Christian surroundings.

"But it is only with great difficulty that we have arrived at this result. Sometimes we were received with showers of stones, and sometimes even threatened with death if we continued our work; but we went on with God's help. A chief said to us one day, 'You see my beard is white. I am too old to follow, but I give you the children.' May we lead them all to the Saviour! This is our prayer. Besides labouring in the schools we take turns among the tribes, announcing the Gospel to all; on the road, in the market-place, in the mosques, and in the houses. They listen, and then enter into discussion, trying with their arguments to convert us to Islamism. But we are not satisfied with preaching to them the Gospel. We try to do them physical good as well. Twice a week they come to the Mission to get medicine, and to have their ailments attended to. They come even in very large numbers.

"During the month of October there were 654; in one day as many as 107. All sorts of diseases pass through our hands, from typhus fever to simple eye complaints. To all we give something in the way of medicine, and speak to them of the Saviour. We think we have thus a great influence over these poor people for the glory of God. But the remedies cost much, and we are poor. Besides this we are obliged for part of the year, when food is well-nigh impossible to obtain, to distribute barley to the most necessitous, to the infirm, to the orphans and widows. We are afraid, however, that this may encourage begging and laziness, and for this reason we want to buy a piece of land near the mission-house, where we will be able to make all who thus receive help to work according to their ability. They will then feel that they earn what we give them. Further, we feel the want of a school-house, in which to instruct the children. We have, therefore, commenced to build a small schoolroom, but find that we have not enough money to finish. But good Christians in France do all they can to support the work, but for special expenditure they are unable to help us much."

PASTOR VAN SCHELTEMA.

PASTOR C. S. ADAMA VAN SCHELTEMA, who for half a century has carried on the warfare against strong drink in Holland, has just completed his eightieth year. The occasion was accompanied by festivities, in which honour was heartily done to the pastor and his great work, especially among sailors and children. Infusing enthusiasm into like-minded friends, Mr. van Scheltema opened in Amsterdam, in 1864, the King William's House, which is a great centre of temperance effort and influence. Then three schools were founded; and quite recently the Sailors' Home at Ymuiden, where so many English fishing smacks call with the produce of the sea.

In a recent issue of Mr. van Scheltema's temperance paper, De Wereldstrijd, scores of testimonies, in poetry and prose, from Dutch and foreign friends, were given as to his great work. A demonstration at Amsterdam was attended by between 2000 and 3000 people. In the course of the evening a white marble bust, made by Rev. C. Beets, of Arnhem, was presented to Mr. van Scheltema, together with various tokens of love and esteem. Citizens of Amsterdam and other places contributed £250 for freeing the Sailors' Home from debt, the Queen Regent giving the first donation, and placing her autograph in the album of donors.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 10.—ACTS IX.

Conversion of Saul (1-23).—The first name for Christianity was "the Way" (2, R.V.). It was the narrow way to God and Heaven. It is comforting to feel that the Lord Jesus was the direct means of Saul's conversion. Not merely a vision, but Christ Himself. St. Paul so often emphasises this—that he was an eye-witness of the glory of the risen Christ. Till that moment he had thought of Him as lying in the grave. There could be now no doubt of the resurrection. (5) How swiftly does pain travel from the members to the head! The Lord Jesus was strong enough to bind the persecutor in chains, and yet gentle enough to sympathise with these humble believers. A pattern, indeed, of all long-suffering. (10) Ananias did not teach Saul the Gospel. It was his boast that he did not receive it from man, but there was a brotherly sympathy in his touch. Prayer is a symptom of true conversion. (15) We are chosen to suffer as well as serve. (17) The hour of conversion should be the time of Spirit-filling. (20) Nothing so strengthens the young disciple as immediate confession. It is noticeable that all this help was given by a simple disciple who had not the apostolic gift.

The Peace of the Churches (23-31).—The lion was now a lamb, the persecutor persecuted. So the churches had rest. Days of peace are days of upbuilding. The multiplication of disciples depends on our holy walk and the co-working of the Holy Ghost. We should be ready to imitate Barnabas by seeking out young disciples and introducing to the fellowship of the Church.

Æneas and Tabitha (32-43).—Jesus wrought through Peter, and to Him all glory was given. Tabitha means "Gazelle." She was a choice woman. What a contrast to Sapphira. They delayed her burial in the hope that there would be no need for it if Peter came. The best memorial of our life is in the love of those we have helped and comforted.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 11.—ACTS X.

The Vision of Cornelius (1-8).—Here the Church takes a new departure, and the Gospel is preached to the Gentiles. Cæsarea was a great Gentile city; Cornelius, a Roman soldier, probably an officer of high rank. Contact with the Jews whilst quartered in their country did not set him against their religion. He adopted their hours of prayer, reverenced their God, and gave alms to their poor. God sends his holy angels still to lead inquirers into a deeper knowledge of the truth. The angel reverses the order of v. 2, and puts prayers before alms. Angels cannot point souls to Christ. This is the sole prerogative of redeemed men.

The Vision of Peter (9-23).—God prepares the inquirer on the one hand, and the teacher on the other. It was a sore humiliation for Peter's Jewish prejudices to be in a tanner's house; but when we have come to the end of ourselves a new reach of service often opens unexpectedly. The four corners are the points of the compass, including the whole family of man. All mankind stood, by virtue of Christ's death and ascension, on the same footing. The Levitical dispensation was at an end. The knock of circumstances coincides with the summons of the Spirit.

Peter's Address (24-48).—There was no trace of sacerdotalism in Peter's manly insistence that Cornelius should stand beside him. He was evidently deeply moved with the revelation he had just received. His theme was Jesus of Nazareth; his anointing at the Jordan; his life of ministry; his death and resurrection; the witness to Him of all the prophets; the judgment of quick and dead; good tidings of peace and remission through his precious blood. How comprehensive and suitable! The sermon had just begun when the Spirit bore witness. Oh! that more often our sermons might be interrupted by a similar testimony!

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 12.—ACTS XI.

Peter's Apology before the Council (1-18).—It is our duty by courteous explanation to conciliate adverse opinion. Though the leader of the Apostolic band, Peter made himself amenable to their judgment because he recognised in the Church the organ of the Holy Spirit. (15) There was an especial baptism of the Spirit of God on the Gentiles, as at Pentecost on the Jews. We should not now expect the Holy Spirit to fall, but we should receive Him as being always present. (18) This admission in face of the strong Jewish prejudice was an admirable tribute to the genuineness of God's work in their hearts.

The First Gentile Church (19-30).—Christian earnestness will overflow restraining barriers. These simple unnamed disciples, finding themselves in a great Gentile city, could not refrain from preaching the Gospel to every creature (Greeks; R.V. 20 makes this very clear). Note how the Spirit used these unordained men to inaugurate the first Gentile Church. The hand of the Lord is with each humble preacher of the Lord Jesus. (22) Barnabas was the right man for this work. He perceived God's grace; he rejoiced in Gospel fruit outside the Jewish garden; he gave the best possible exhortation. Only a truly good man could have so acted. It would have been so easy to complain of irregularity, or to interpose systems or creeds between the young converts and Jesus. It was magnanimous also to seek a co-worker, and the value of their work was approved by the outflowing of the benevolence of their converts. They were called Christians—perhaps by the people of Antioch, more probably by the Holy Spirit Himself.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 13.—ACTS XII.

The Prison (1-10).—How little the Scripture speaks of death. This of James is hardly noticed. Why did he die, and Peter live? Infinite love embraced them each, but infinite wisdom had some plan to serve. The arms of a household of feeble women raised in prayer are stronger than the strongest precautions to hold the servant of God in ward. How the days of our Saviour's crucifixion must have come to Peter's thought, as at the same time of the year he anticipated death. (6) His sleep indicated a calm and trustful heart. The Lord is nigh even in a prison. His deliverance is delayed to the night before the catastrophe is timed to fall. So God leads us out of our darkest hours, and iron gates open, and we come forth hardly wisting, counting it a vision, to find that God has done great things for us. This is an emblem of our emergence from death into glory.

The Street (11-19).—Rhoda is Rose. Her inimitable portrait has charmed every age. So life-like and natural. But how good to find that this girl cared for a devotional meeting, and was welcomed to it. It shows what a new spirit Christianity had introduced. They would not believe her, and yet their prayers were answered. Though we believe not, He remains faithful. Angels do not lead us where our own sanctified common sense will avail.

Herod's Death (20-25).—So the oppressors of the Church are struck down by the sword of Divine justice, and his feeble ones are delivered. Be not afraid of the reproach of men, for the moth shall eat them like wool.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 14.—ACTS XIII.

The Gentile World (1-12).—Now for the first time does the true meaning of the Gospel appear. It is for every creature. The ends of the earth shall hear the salvation of God. Our hearts must be entirely sympathetic and open, or God cannot reveal his purposes. He calls his workers. It is our part to send them forth with prayer and the loving touch of brotherly hands. (6) Every forth-putting of Divine power has aroused the hatred and opposition of evil. Moses was met by Jannes and Jambres, Paul by Elymas. Notice how God's servants are filled with the Holy Spirit for special work, and have a ministry of destruction entrusted to them.

The First Sermon to the Gentiles (13-43).—The Gospel rests on facts. Paul was therefore right in reciting the successive steps that led up to and culminated in the Lord Jesus. (34) To Paul the resurrection was always the keystone of Christianity. He quotes Isa. lv. 3 and Psa. xvi., and shows that they were fulfilled on the Easter day. It is the living risen Christ who is the one attractive force to all souls. Not what He was, but what He is! Let us ponder the assurance that everyone who believes in Him is justified. Justification is already assured. The law of Moses was but a symbol and type of these Gospel facts.

Opposition (44-52).—Pride and jealousy underlay the Jews' antagonism. St. Paul always found it, but he never flinched from making the first offer of the Gospel to his brethren according to the flesh. (46) The rejector of Christ is his own judge, and pronounces sentence on himself. Those who have never heard of the love of God in Christ are more likely to receive it than such as have been familiar with it from their childhood. (48) "Ordained" might be translated "fitted."

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 15.—ACTS XIV.

Iconium (1-7).—When we speak in the Lord there is a boldness which comes of certainty. The more men controvert our message, the more persistently and earnestly we should announce it. When we are in the Lord, the Lord bears witness to our word. (6) We are justified in leaving men who persistently refuse the Gospel. They went further afield, and the highlands of Asia Minor were evangelised. Paul was eager that all which happened to him might further the Gospel.

Lystra (8-18).—The cripple repeatedly listened to the Gospel, and as he did so, faith arose. There were many legends in those parts of the descent of the gods. Man has ever longed for the Daysman. Longings of this sort anticipated the incarnation. God in Christ is the answer to the heart of man. In this tender, human, infinite Friend there is satisfaction for our hunger. (15) In these words is the foundation and seed germ of the argument of the Epistle to the Romans. Conscience, nature, providence, are three voices that have spoken to all men of God.

Persecution (19-28).—Do not trust men. Live only for the "Well-done" of Christ. Those that worship to-day will stone to-morrow. Some think it was at this point Paul was caught into heaven, and heard unspeakable words. (21) How pertinacious does the love of Christ make his servants. (22) Tribulation for Christ's sake shows that you are on the track of the saints. We must continue on that blood-stained path. It cannot be well for the servant to fare better than his Lord. Our one business is to fulfil the work to which we have been committed by the grace of God.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 16.—ACTS XV.

The First Council (1-5).—Everything depended upon the result of this meeting. The Jews desired to reduce Christianity to the level of a Jewish sect. All converts must become Jews, as well as Christians.

The Speeches (6-29).—Peter dwelt on God's attestation of the equality of the uncircumcised with the circumcised because He had given the same Spirit to all. Notice how clearly he brings out the fact that the cleansed heart is by faith. The missionary apostles make it clear that their work was God's through them. James, as the elder of the Church, and representing its conservatism, dwells on God's Word, and shows that the events transpiring around them were the fulfilment of Amos' prophecy. He considers that the tabernacle of David has been set up in the work of Jesus Christ, and that the return of the Gentiles to God is only the fulfilment of ancient words. His main case was that the Gentiles should turn to God, and having done so should avoid obvious sins, and all, like the eating of blood, which would be a needless stumbling block to Jewish prejudice. If Jewish Christians waived the necessity of circumcision, Gentile Christians might abstain from things strangled from blood.

A New Start (30-41).—The letter was the production of the Holy Ghost through the Church. Wherever it was taken it brought comfort and peace. Alas! for the sharp contentions amongst Christians in the face of the foe. Oh for a baptism of love that the watchmen may see eye to eye!

MONGOLIA.—Rev. J. Parker reports that a Lama at Chao Yang has shown himself an earnest inquirer. He was an eager attendant at the late Mr. Gilmour's street preaching, and has not worshipped Buddha since the rebellion of three years ago. Mr. Parker has been giving him a time of testing, and so far he has shown himself sincere. He has been a regular attendant at the services, and has daily attended the class for inquirers. "We are praying," says Mr. Parker, "that he may become a sincere worshipper of the one true God. At the new station of Lao Pei Tzu Fen there are over forty inquirers, and among them are three Mongols."—Chronicle of the London Missionary Society.

INTERNATIONAL S. S. LESSONS.

FEBRUARY 17.

THE GOOD SAMARITAN.—Luke x. 25-37.

GOLDEN TEXT.—Lev. xix. 18.

The occasion of this parable (25-29) helps to explain its object. At some period during our Lord's last journey from Galilee to Jerusalem, probably in the region of Perea, beyond Jordan, an important question was put to Him. "A lawyer"—a student and teacher of the Jewish law. His question was one of the supremest importance. It was that of the rich young man (xviii. 18), and substantially that of the jailer (Acts xvi. 30). A bad motive prompted a good question, not for information but for criticism. "Tempting" means testing, either with good or evil purpose.

There is great significance in our Lord's reply (26). He turned his inquirer at once to the Scriptures in which his question was answered (John v. 39). He did not come to give opinions, to say what He thought, nor to invite the thoughts of others. He always made his appeal to the Scriptures. "How readest thou?" The question is full of solemn significance to those who possess but do not properly use the Word of God. The reply of the lawyer (27) contains the whole substance of the law. Love to God was the first table, love to man the second. These are inseparable. Neither can be without the other. "Heart," according to Godet, is the centre of the being, the other terms describe the three principal directions of the moral life. "Soul" means feeling and affection; "might" refers to the active powers, the will to do God's will; and "mind" describes the intellectual powers.

The next word of Jesus (28) touches the lawyer's conscience, by showing the contrast between what he knows and what he does. "This do." Was Jesus encouraging salvation by works? No, but He would have his questioner learn that he was powerless to obtain life by his own effort. And evidently the convicting word went home; but instead of pleading guilty the lawyer sought to excuse himself, and so raised the question about the neighbour (29). "How can I keep the law if I do not know who my neighbour is?" To that question we are indebted for this most interesting parable.

The Parable (30-35).—The scene of it is the road leading from Jerusalem to Jericho, a distance of about twenty miles. "The mountainous and for the most part desert country traversed by this road was far from safe. Jerome relates that in his time it was infested by hordes of Arabs."—Godet. "Thieves," should be robbers (R.V.), banditti, men who lived by plundering, and who did not scruple to add violence to robbery. "It is said that about 12,000 priests and Levites, who used to attend the temple in courses, resided at Jericho."—Van Doren. In journeying to or from their temple ministry, one of each of these finds on the wayside the half dead victim of these robbers. Excuses may be urged for their not staying to help—they were in haste, the district that had proved perilous to this traveller was not safe for them, possibly they could not save the man if they tried. They were poor excuses, and would not be heeded by one who was concerned to fulfil the law of love. The man who did help was one of the hated Samaritans, a half heathen people, whose Bible was the Pentateuch, but who rejected all the rest of the Scriptures. Canon Tristram says that to this day the Jews hate the Samaritan remnant in Nablous more than they hate either Christians or Moslems. This stranger forgot the national hatred, pitied the wounded man because he was a man, put himself to inconvenience, and trouble, and expense, exposed himself to danger, and never left the work till he had completely ministered to his need. "Oil and wine" were used for wounds—wine to cleanse them, and oil to relieve the pain. "Inn" was in this case not a mere caravanserai, but a house kept by a landlord for the entertainment of travellers. "Two pence" represented two days' wages.

The Application (36, 37).—Our Lord's question leads the lawyer to put himself in the case of that half-dead man. He has no difficulthy in deciding which of the three men acted the part of the neighbour. The lesson is, that our love is to break through all limits, to be bound by no narrow sectarianism, to overcome national prejudice and natural dislikes, and to express itself in practical helpfulness.

His own example must not be overlooked, otherwise we have no motive to inspire us to love. The early Christians were not wrong in seeing our lost condition in the man overtaken by thieves, the powerlessness of the law in the conduct of the priest and the Levite, and the work of Christ for us in that of the Good Samaritan.

Our loving service for others must be a reflection—a perpetuation of his. Opportunities for showing his love are found in the home, at school, everywhere. And such loving service rendered for Him will not lose its reward (Matt. xxv. 34-36).

For the Young.

A GRAND MISTAKE.

BY B. M'CALL BARBOUR.

"Now then, '59,' look sharp," said the telegraph clerk at the delivery counter, addressing the next messenger whose turn it was to be despatched "on Her Majesty's Service."

"59" sprang from his seat, and stood awaiting his message. "Where to?" was his query. It was a "strag."

"59" had learned that "strags" just as well as other messages had to be tackled, and so he braced himself up for the tramp. What's the use of grumbling at a thing one can't help? It won't make it any easier—no, not one bit; but a deal harder to do, alongside o' the grumbling.

This was the usual state of mind of "59" in such circumstances. He had been a lad of this sort of reasoning all his life. By many of his fellow-messengers he was thought to be of a "peculiar turn of mind," but his mind was only peculiar in its common-sense; a very scarce commodity in some quarters. While other lads were grumbling about the drudgery of their work, "59" was doing his, and reaping the benefit.

Still, prudent and far-seeing as he was, there were some things which didn't quite strike him at first sight, as our story will show.

After a tramp of a good mile and a-half he arrived at the destination of his message. Then a hunt began for the person named on the telegram. Did anybody know one John Raeburn? was his question, and no! no! no! was the continual reply to his query. High and low he sought in vain, and when just about to give up all further effort his common-sense stepped in and prompted "just once more."

"Just once more" is often a good thing in a lad's life. How often it has proved to be the tide that led to fortune!

"Just once more" was a successful effort in the case of "59." No, it didn't bring to him a fortune, but it was a step which led to something better.

In the darkness of the corner of a stair he knocked at what he took to be a door. Every knock of his fist seemed to say "just once more." The door was opened by an old motherly-looking person leaning on a staff. She staggered a little as the light streaming through the doorway fell on the uniform of the boy, so unusual to her in these quarters.

"Mercy me, laddie, what a fricht ye've gi'en me!" she said in excited tones.

Somewhat astonished at his mode of reception, "59" stuttered forth in a tremulous voice his oft-repeated question,

"Is there a John Raeburn here?"

"A what?" queried the old woman, holding her hand to her ear, as if to indicate she was dull of hearing.

Before "59" had time to answer the question a younger woman, who had evidently overheard his question, appeared on the scene, and said, "Mither, the laddie was askin' ye if a John Raeburn stayed here. What was the name o' yon auld body that used to live in the back court? It was Raeburn, wasn't it?"

"When was that?" queried the old woman.

"Oh, dae ye no min'? about a year ago."

"About a year ago. Mercy me, lassie, hoo can an auld body like me min' back a year ago? Ye surely forget wha ye're speakin' till. Ay, but wait a bit; let me see. Wasn't yon auld doited body that used tae shachle about wi' a stick?" asked the old woman, seeming to forget her own infirmity. "Ay, ay, I min' noo; his name was Raeburn."

"59" had patiently awaited the outcome of the conversation without further question, and now thought his "once more" likely to be crowned with success.

"Ay, but yon auld body has been dead the last twalmonth or mair," resumed the old woman. "His house is empty, and there's naebody hereabouts kens ocht o' him or his noo. What was't ye wanted wi' him, my laddie?"

"It's a telegram I've got for him," said "59."

"A telegram!" exclaimed the old woman. "My sakes, that'll be somebody deed an' left him a fortune, an' they'll ha'e sent him a telegram tae tell him. What a awfu' pity he's no here tae ken. Puir body, he wad hae been muckle the better o't; but it's aye the way wi' folks that ha'e siller tae leave. They ne'er gie it tae ither folks till they ha'e nae use for it themsel's. Ay, ay, a shroud has nae pockets."

This little speech seemed to come so naturally from the old person that "59" was captivated during its delivery, and forgot all his interest in telegraphic speed. At its conclusion he saw that the end of his investigations had been reached, so, with all the dignity of a master of red-tapeism he drew out his pencil and, with an exalted air of officialdom said, "I suppose I had better say, 'Dead, gone; left no address'?"

"Ay, just that, my man; and tak' it back tae them that sent it, for the body's no here noo."

All unconscious of the real import of what he had written on the corner of the envelope, "59" replaced the telegram in his pouch and began his homeward tramp.

The report of his inability to find the person wanted was handed in along with the telegram, on which he had pencilled the word "Dead, gone; left no address." The delivery clerk read the inscription, and with a look upon his face which betokened an inward smile, said, "And you can't find him, '59'? What is this you've written here, 'Dead, gone; left no address'?"

"Yes, sir. An old woman said he once lived there, but was dead about twelve months ago," explained "59."

"Oh, yes, I see; and he's gone and left no address?"

"Yes, sir," said the boy, still with a look of unsuspecting innocence on his face.

The delivery clerk was naturally kindly disposed, and not above carrying out a joke in a harmless way. He peered into the boy's eyes, and in a tone which sent home his words, said, "If this telegram had been for you, '59,' and you had been dead and gone, would you have left an address for it to be sent on to you? That will do, '59.' Think on that!" And with this puzzle, put so pointedly, he dismissed the lad to his seat.

The clerk enjoyed the joke in a quiet way, and took a mental note of it for future use.

All that day the look of the clerk lived before the eyes of "59," and his words were continually in his mind. Try as he might, he could not see why they should haunt him. The phrase, "Dead, gone; left no address," seemed so perfect in sound, it unconsciously deluded him into the idea that it was as perfect in sense.

"59" kept his conundrum to himself; but when the day was done, and he had tumbled into bed and tucked the clothes over his head, he made up his mind he would have a good thought over it and have it settled.

"Dead, gone; left no address," he kept saying to himself. "If I had been dead and gone, would I have left an address?" He lay and thought and thought and thought, and in the very confusion of the constant repetition of the sentences, the "would I" changed itself to "could I," and this form of the question made him pause and think with a new earnestness. "Could I have left an address?" "But, then," he thought, "when a man is dead he doesn't need telegrams. No, I should think not. But if he's dead, where has he gone to?"

With these questions still unanswered, and being worn out and weary, he fell asleep. It was then he dreamed himself an answer to his perplexing puzzles. With the morning he awoke, and, strange as it may seem, the first thought which came clearly before his mind was that suggested by the words, "I go to prepare a place for you."

Why these words should come to him, and with such a sense of knowing what they meant, he did not understand. It is often so in life; things happen, the "why" of which we never can explain.

This at least he did know: the dark wrestling of the night had disappeared, and the coming of the morning had brought joy.

On "59" coming on duty the next morning he was met by the delivery clerk, who greeted him with, "Well, 'Dead, gone; left no address,' have you solved that puzzle I gave you yesterday?"

"Yes, I've got it," replied the lad, with a smile on his face that told he had discovered not only his mistake, but something more.

"And what would your address be then?" asked the clerk.

With a happy upward smile the lad was quick with the reply, "With Christ, which is far better!"

"That's right, my lad, I see you know," said the clerk, taking hold of the boy's hand. "Keep fast by that address."

Some London Missions.

THE RAGGED SCHOOL UNION.

This home-mission Union, to which the late Earl of Shaftesbury devoted the best energies of a consecrated life, celebrated last year its jubilee. This celebration was, however, no mere jubilation. In the spirit of an editorial note in The Christian, some months ago, the occasion was seized for a thorough re-examination of principles and methods, in order that in the most direct and efficient way the Gospel of salvation might be brought to bear on the hearts and homes of the children of the poorest classes. And, be it remarked that the need for such effort is as great and pressing to-day as ever it was.

The work of the Ragged School Union is two-fold, that for which it is directly responsible, and that which it fosters and supports in the 210 affiliated Ragged School Missions; each one being a centre of evangelistic activity in some of London. In the course of an interview at the Ragged School Union offices I have gleaned facts as to the scope and diversity of these operations which cannot fail deeply to interest many readers.

Nothing is more characteristic of the Ragged School movement than its elasticity and adaptability to the varying needs of the poor. Anything which promises to be of real service in winning street children receives careful consideration. Wedded to no routine or set scheme, catholic in its sympathies, it has been the means of calling forth and stimulating to activity a host of 5000 voluntary workers, representing all Evangelical denominations. These are linked together in serving the common Lord, and inspired by one aim—to win children and adults to the Saviour. Thus reaching out to the poor, ignorant and suffering, it has discovered their special needs, and has become the parent of many of the best-known Christian institutions of the day.

But past successes will not serve as a credential of present value. What is the R.S.U. doing now? It is carrying on certain missions, of which the Ashley Mission in Bethnal Green is a type. It is operating among gipsy children in Battersea, among drift and cripple children in South London, in the East-end, in the North-east, and other parts. The "drifts" are sought out by agents of the Union, and brought under Christian teaching. The pitiful home cripples are taught, comforted, and cheered in various ways, and made to feel that someone cares for them. Above all, they hear of the love of Jesus.

Then there is the far-reaching Poor Children's Aid Branch, supplying boots and clothing to half-clad, shivering, destitute boys and girls. Sympathetic teachers in any part of London know that they have but to put the case of some unhappy child before the R.S.U. to secure the needed garments—if funds permit, as well as assistance to the hungry and destitute. Moreover, there are the eight R.S.U. Holiday Homes in which, last year, 5315 weak, ailing city prisoners enjoyed a fortnight's health-giving change, in addition to 50,000 who had a day in the country. This is peculiarly summer work; as the clothing is specially winter work; but both go on, in some degree, all the year round.

Amongst the host of other direct agencies is the supply of pure literature to the Missions, the provision of lanterns for the delight and instruction of poor scholars, and the encouragement of emigration in suitable cases. These are but illustrations of the many branches of effort for which the R.S.U. is directly responsible, and in which the secretary, Mr. John Kirk, is actively engaged.

Turning to the second sphere. Scattered and isolated workers felt long ago the need of a centre for counsel, support, and mutual helpfulness. Now that small missions are multiplied, the need for a strong centre is more urgent than ever. For example, a mission may be doing genuine and useful work in an old building which becomes worn out; or of which the lease expires. Work of this kind and without aid, such as the R.S.U. can render, a bright Gospel light in a dark district would flicker out. I know, at this moment, of several recent instances of this kind. Here and there, in the various local centres, such difficulties constantly arise; and provided the work being done commends itself as worth doing, the Union takes the matter up, gives and gets, and re-establishes the local mission in new or repaired buildings. Apart from such special emergencies, the R.S.U. makes regular grants to the affiliated missions, aids in finding workers, often a most difficult task for an out-of-the-way and well nigh unknown mission. In these and a hundred different things—small, but essential to efficiency—it is a tower of strength to faithful and useful toilers all over London. Besides, it is in many curious ways a centre of inquiry, and has, as a matter of fact, aided earnest men throughout the land, and in many lands, in organising similar work.

In lending force and direction to local effort; in fostering new undertakings, when really called for, say in some new district; in saving endangered missions, when worth saving; in affording counsel based on wide experience; and in giving pecuniary aid, the R.S.U. proves its claim to support. By its means cohesion is imparted, and unity and effectiveness is maintained. Without it the mighty army of the King's servants, who in the courts and alleys of London are doing a noble and self-denying work, would be as scattered companies, instead of presenting an unbroken front to the foe. This Union of Ragged School Teachers has been one grand secret of the success of a movement which God has been pleased so greatly to bless. Full information as to the whole work may be had from the secretary, 37, Norfolk-street, Strand, W.C.

MRS. GINEVER'S HOMES.

A year ago the beloved founder of the Kingsdown Orphanage was called to her rest, and in the paralysis of this heavy loss there were those who feared that the work to which she had devoted her life must seriously suffer. He whose work it is, has, however, cared for the orphans; and the first report issued since Mrs. Ginever's death is a fresh testimony to the faithfulness of God.

To begin with, difficulties seemed to threaten the institution, Mr. T. C. Usher, an original trustee, being the only survivor able to act. Rev. J. R. Wood, however, consented to act with him, and a new trust was formed to carry on the homes, Mr. R. T. Smith, so well known for his work at Chiswick, being appointed secretary. Tender thoughts towards the Orphanage which Mrs. Ginever founded, and to which she gave herself, filled many minds, and led to generous contributions. Prayers of hers but partially answered in her life-time, have been in recent months, so that the trustees have to report that all necessary demands have been met.

There are three affiliated Homes—the Kingsdown Orphanage for boys and girls, Pemberton-road, Upper Holloway; the Infant Home, 8, Tremlett-grove, Upper Holloway; and the Home for Crippled and Afflicted Orphans at Broadstairs. All of these are in charge of trustworthy and experienced matrons, who seek to carry on the Homes in the spirit of her who has gone—that is as a Christian and thoroughly undenominational Home. There are about 170 children in the Homes; forty-eight being new cases admitted last year. The secretary, Mr. R. T. Smith, 18, Pemberton-road, Upper Holloway, will supply all information.

In rescuing a child from homelessness and poverty, and providing it a home and Christian nurture, two things ought to be remembered: what is rescued—a life, with unknown possibilities in it, and a young life, with all its best in front! The years have not been worn away and wasted: who can forecast the harvest they may yield? Secondly, remember what the child is rescued from. We not only rescue the boy or girl from being "alone in the world," but from exposure, poverty, temptation, and the almost inevitable fall, with the sorrows, sufferings, and ruin involved. The children, "who often look up with pale and sunken faces, who are weary and cannot run or leap," are worth saving. To save them is a sacred task to which we are bound as members of the commonwealth, still more as members of Christ's Church, commissioned to "feed his lambs." It is not the will of our Father in heaven that one of these little ones should perish.

THE SOUTH LONDON MISSION, Scovell-road, Borough, S.E., is an undenominational agency in one of the poorest districts of the metropolis. Meetings of various kinds are held almost every night in the week, and are well attended. Many conversions have been recorded and a large number of temperance pledges taken. Efforts are now being made to secure a larger hall. The latest report and other information may be had from Mr. R. H. Parsons, 82, Bland-street, Great Dover-street, Borough, S.E.

IN MEMORIAM C. H. SPURGEON.

Thursday last being the anniversary of the decease of C. H. Spurgeon, the evening service at the Metropolitan Tabernacle was made special. Pastor Thomas Spurgeon presided, and, after prayer by his uncle, Dr. J. A. Spurgeon, gave an interesting address upon his father's character and work, as illustrated by his correspondence. All his letters were clear and compact; there was a great deal in a small compass. His signature was often crowded into a corner, revealing the modesty of true greatness. Every letter was brotherly rather than paternal, and breathed the solicitude of a loving breath. Writing to his son in New Zealand, he said: "You and I stand foot to foot." On another occasion he wrote: "Do not expect to see me on your door-step, but my heart looks in at your window!" The filial tribute was wisely and worthily done, and brought tears to many eyes.

Mr. Chamberlain and Mr. Walter Mayers sang, "Many are the friends calling us away," from Sacred Songs and Solos, the congregation singing the refrain. Rev. James Stephens delivered an able address upon the words, "Remember them that had the rule over you, which spake unto you the word of God; and considering the issue of their life, imitate their faith" (Heb. xiii. 7, R.V.). The analysis and summary of his character and service, as a man of faith, formed a beautiful testimony to the grace of God, as seen in Mr. Spurgeon throughout his wonderful career of forty years in the ministry of the Word. A solo by Mr. Mayers, "Waiting for the Coming of the Lord," and an address by Pastor E. Roberts, of the South London Tabernacle, completed the programme of a remarkable meeting, the memory of which will be a ministry for good.

MIDNIGHT AND MORNING.

THE PASSING OF PASTOR C. H. SPURGEON.

Sunday night, January 31, 1892.

There is a spirit lingering at the portal
Of the unseen to-night;
Just on the threshold of the realms immortal,
And ready for its flight.
Will the King beckon thro' the ranks of angels
And down the starry dome:
"O faithful preacher of my glad evangels,
Thy work is done, come home"?
Is the great soldier's last fierce battle ending?
Is his last triumph won?
Will the true servant, to his Lord ascending,
To-night hear his "Well done"?
The trumpet-voice, with all its clarion-ringing,
Is hushed to whispers now;
Will he to-night join the eternal singing,
God's glory on his brow?
The rock-like heart, so brave and grand and loyal,
Beats fainter and more faint;
Will the King still it with his mandate royal,
And call his toil-worn saint?
Which will it be, O watchers of Mentoné?
Earth's strife or heaven's rest?
Alas, we cannot tell! God, and He only,
Knoweth, and knoweth best.

Monday morning, February 1, 1892.

And even as we spake thus to each other
Of him who dying lay,
The Father's home was greeting a new brother,
And he had passed away.
And even ere the midnight chimes had riven
The silence of the night,
For him had dawned th' eternal morn of heaven,
The everlasting light.
And while we watched where life and death were meeting,
Nor knew which God had planned,
The King had stilled the mighty heart's low beating
With his own pierced hand;
Had hushed indeed the voice, whose clarion-ringing
We shall not hear again
Until we, too, join the eternal singing,
Rising with Christ to reign.
Yea, the great soldier, his last battle ending,
The crown of life hath won;
And heaven's King, o'er his true servant bending
Hath spoken his "Well done!"
Yea, He hath beckoned thro' the ranks of angels,
And down the starry dome;
"O faithful preacher of my glad evangels,
Thy work is done, come home!"
And he, no longer lingering at the portal,
Hath entered at the door,
To see the King's face in the realms immortal,
To serve Him evermore.

WALWORTH.—The work carried on at the Richmond-street Mission is of a varied and extensive character, and has entirely outgrown the small building in which the many meetings are held every week-day and Sunday. Land for a larger and more convenient hall with class-rooms, kitchens, and recreation rooms, has been purchased, and plans have been prepared for execution so soon as the funds (about £1300) are provided. Mr. T. W. How, of 42, Saltoun-road, Brixton, the hon. sec., will be pleased to send a copy of the report to any interested friend.

JOHANNES VAN 'T LINDENHOUT.

THE DUTCH PHILANTHROPIST.

The example set by Mr. George Müller in the successful care of orphans has been an incitement to other friends of the young to build and open refuges for the poorest and most destitute children. Since the days of the Reformation the Churches of all denominations had their own orphanages; but Mr. Johannes van 't Lindenhout discovered that a large number of orphans, mostly in the rural districts of Holland, were neglected, and often treated worse than slaves. When orphans were to be cared for, it was common to board them with poor people, who would take them at the smallest weekly charge, with full liberty to make the most profit possible out of the use to which they put them. Thus the little ones were often the victims of a most unchristian course. At length they found a friend in Mr. van 't Lindenhout.

Mr. van 't Lindenhout's father was a well-to-do farmer, having property in Beuningen, a village in the province of Guelderland. Johannes, who was born in 1838, was the eldest son. Soon it appeared that his constitution was too weak for farm work, and he was sent to a boarding-school, which afforded him the privilege of learning French and German. Books read in the latter language, combined with the pious education he received at home, led him to decide upon making Christ his Saviour-King.

After reading Bunyan's "Pilgrim's Progress," the young man resolved to become an evangelist, and to sell Bibles in the neglected villages. With a wallet on his back he went from village to village; in some houses he was most kindly received, but in others rebuked in the most hostile way. For two years he persevered in this arduous work; and, at last, by ill-health, he was obliged to give it up, and to look for something that would relieve him from travelling and its fatigues. After a regular examination, he was accepted by a committee at the Hague, and stationed as an evangelist at Nymegen, in Guelderland. Here his mind was exercised in consequence of the sufferings of the orphans he had met in the villages, and as he found his young wife willing to be his helper, he determined to follow George Müller by opening a refuge for the poorest orphans and other neglected children; this he did without any income, beyond what God, in his tender mercy, sent day by day in answer to prayer.

All Mr. van 't Lindenhout's friends, even the most spiritual of them, condemned the plan as quite unfit for adoption in a country where the churches were thought to do their utmost for the orphans. Notwithstanding all kind of opposition, Mr. van 't Lindenhout persevered; a friend came to his help, and bought a large old house in Nymegen, and gave him the free use of it to try and see if he could fill its ten rooms with destitute orphans. After a year's effort, eighteen children, boys and girls, constituted the family of the orphans' friend. Difficulties were encountered, but on every such occasion prayer was answered, and sometimes at the last moment, and by the most unexpected means, food and raiment were supplied.

In the beginning of 1866, the number of orphans had so increased that the house was rather more than full, and applications for the admission of children were very numerous. Unexpectedly a letter came from Amsterdam, enclosing a cheque of a thousand florins, as a first gift for building a new house, and with the cheque the promise that the gift would be repeated every year. At the same time, another leading event happened in the history of the work. Where to build a second house was the rather difficult question; and just as it was causing great anxiety, a young peasant came to Mr. van 't Lindenhout and said, "The Lord has blessed us, and now my brothers and I intend to buy a farm for ourselves. If we are successful in this you may make a choice of two acres of the ground whereon to build a house for your orphans." Though the offer was very kind, Mr. van 't Lindenhout scarcely knew what to do, as the locality seemed most unfit for his plans. Yet he promised to inspect it, and went to Neerbosch with his oldest friend and helper in the work, a Mr. Belmer.

It was a most rough and rainy day, and after they had walked a long way through the stiff and wet clay, suddenly the sun broke through the clouds, and Mr. Belmer said:—"My friend, this is the place God's Providence indicates as fit for your future plans." Accordingly a spacious building was erected in 1870, since when the institution has grown to what it is to-day—a lovely village, with its own church, surrounded by corn and grass fields, orchards and trees, almost all belonging to the orphanage. This has been rendered possible through fidelity to promise on the part of the brothers who gave the two first acres; they undertook to sell to the orphanage at valuation as much ground as the institution might afterwards require for its houses and schools.

Mr. van 't Lindenhout has been most happy in the choice of his helpers. Almost all the teachers in his schools have settled religious characters, and have real ability in their peculiar line. The same has been true of the instructors in the various trades taught to the children. All the buildings, even the church and its tower, are the work of the boys. At the exhibition at Amsterdam the boys gained a gold medal for their printing and binding; in other trades also many excel, and easily find good places after leaving the orphanage. Mr. van 't Lindenhout has the privilege of having in his sons two excellent helpers. The eldest helps in the general supervision, and the younger is at the head of the printing and publishing departments, a branch equal to the larger firms in the land. The sons have married sisters, who both give a good deal of their time, assisting Mrs. van 't Lindenhout in teaching and governing the elder girls.

The number of the children at this moment is a thousand, a number which demands the utmost exertion of all who co-operate in the work, in order that Christian home influence and the family ideal may be realised. Mr. van 't Lindenhout has rendered a great service to his land by saving so many children from a miserable and godless life, and has brought many to Christ and fitted them for an honourable discharge of the duties of life.

THE MISSIONS TO SEAMEN has voted £100 to Rev. Harry Morgan, of Darling Point, Sydney, and has appointed him its chaplain for Sydney Harbour.

MESSRS. McNEILL AND BURKE.

AUCKLAND, N.Z.

(From a Correspondent.)

These honoured servants of God arrived in Auckland, viâ the West Coast, on December 19. For months much preparation had been made for the mission. A strong united committee was appointed, who did much to ensure the co-operation of the Christian workers of the various churches. Meetings for united prayer were organised and well attended, and a spirit of expectation was manifest.

Notwithstanding many hindrances from the fact of it being Christmas time, with its many distractions, large numbers, some of whom came from country districts to Auckland for the holiday season, crowded the hall on Christmas night and Boxing night. Mr. McNeill spoke with great power, and Mr. Burke sang with manifest blessing to many. At the Y.M.C.A. breakfast meeting on Christmas morning Mr. McNeill gave a characteristic address, which helped many. The last meeting of the mission was held last night (December 28), with a crowded audience, when Mr. McNeill spoke from Phil. ii. 12 and 13: "Work out your own salvation with fear and trembling, for it is God that worketh in you, both to will and to do of his good pleasure."

We thank God heartily for the visit of his servants: it will never be forgotten by large numbers. God's people have been drawn together, renewed and quickened, and cheered and refreshed by the deeply solemn and faithful words spoken night after night by Mr. McNeill. The ministers have all rallied round and supported the mission in every way. Last night there were present fifteen ministers, representing the various denominations. Each evening two ministers have taken part in the service. We believe many have passed from "darkness to light" through this mission, and much real good will follow these great gatherings in ways it is impossible to tabulate.

Large numbers from all parts of the Auckland country districts came to the city specially to hear Mr. McNeill. They have gone back to their farms, the bush, etc., blessed and strengthened. One young man travelled 300 miles, arriving in Auckland on Christmas Eve, heard Mr. McNeill at night and at the Christmas breakfast in the Y.M.C.A. rooms, and left in the afternoon on the return journey, his heart filled with joy and peace, to be a blessing to others in his far-off station. Colonists from Scotland have greatly enjoyed the preaching of Mr. McNeill. At the last meeting of the mission many lingered behind to thank him for his words. The very last to speak to him as he left the hall was an aged lady, who in broken words and with tears thanked the evangelist for the blessing his words had been to a young man in whom she was deeply interested, and who had decided for Christ the previous night. It was a touching conclusion to his mission in these Colonies, and illustrates what is felt by large numbers who will ever have grateful memories of the McNeill-Burke United Mission to Australia and New Zealand, and which finished at Auckland on December 28, 1894.

Mr. McNeill left this morning for a short visit to the Lake Country, Rotorua; he returns on January 2, and leaves by the mail steamer for Sydney, thence for Calcutta and other parts of India. His fellow labourer, Mr. J. H. Burke, who has endeared himself to so many with his sweet singing of the Gospel, left by the Mariposa for San Francisco, en route for his home in Chicago.

LEPERS IN INDIA.—In writing to the secretary of the Mission to Lepers regarding a visit to Perulia Leper Asylum, Bengal, Rev. G. M. Bulloch says:—"I spent the greater part of two days here, and received a right royal reception. No such sight is to be seen anywhere else in India—300 lepers, all Christians, full of peace and joy, notwithstanding their sorry plight, singing the praises of God, and thanking Him that through their sufferings they have been led to Him and have found in Jesus a friend and Saviour. I shall never forget the sight, and thank God that I have been blessed with such a privilege."

The Evangelist.

"THROUGH."

By LUCY A. BENNETT.

"Only to think what He has brought me through! My heart often sings for joy upon my bed. Oh, how great is his lovingkindness! I can truly say that down to this very day—this very hour—goodness and mercy have followed me all the days of my life; and yet I have been brought through so much."

The speaker had many things to weigh her down, for she was poor and old, and totally blind, as well as being one of those who, to use her own expression, habitually "enjoy very bad health." And yet the woman I was visiting was one of the brightest and happiest I have met.

It was a lesson in faith, hope, and charity to sit by her chair and hear the Spirit-taught lessons which her ripe experience afforded. "Ignorant," some would have called her, perhaps; yet hers was a wisdom of which the world, indeed, may think little, but which is much accounted of in the sight of God.

"Poor," yes, but with that poverty which "maketh many rich." "As having nothing, and yet possessing all things."

"That little word 'through' is a beautiful one and a true one," was the response. "God has indeed been good; and He has been faithful to his promise. He has not only helped us in our troubles but He has brought us through them. You remember that beautiful assurance of old, 'When thou passest through the waters I will be with thee; and through the rivers, they shall not overflow thee; when thou walkest through the fire, thou shalt not be burned' (Isa. xliii. 2). There is no promise that we shall escape trial, but there is the promise that we shall not be left to perish in it; we shall be brought through it. And how literally this was fulfilled to God's ancient people. Through the Red Sea they came, and through Jordan; through the wilderness they had to pass, too; but their glad testimony was 'We went through fire and through water, but Thou broughtest us out into a wealthy place' (Psa. lxvi. 12). And even right on to the very end it will be the same, you know. 'Though I walk through the valley of the shadow of death, I will fear no evil, for Thou art with me' (Psa. xxiii. 4).

Thou, the faithful and the True,
Wilt be there to lead me through.

"Oh, 'tis wonderful, 'tis beautiful!" And the dear old lady took my hand in hers and pressed it. "I couldn't tell you half of it, my dear! Here am I, come to my ninetieth year, and I have proved it over and over again. It cannot be very long now for me to linger down here, but I want to testify to his faithfulness and his kindness."

"Those who know Him best," I said, "are those who speak well of his name. If you hear any one speak slightingly of the Lord, you will be sure to find out that it is some one who does not really know Him. 'They that know thy name will put their trust in Thee'" (Psa. ix. 10).

I wish I could more distinctly recall the conversation with this aged saint, but the brief account I have tried to give will show how full of happiness and spiritual pleasure was that suffering woman.

Reader, have you the same secret of peace? Are you anchored in the same haven of rest? Is Jesus your Saviour, your tried and known Friend? Has the blessed Spirit of God taught you both your need of Him and his absolute fitness to meet that need? For every one of us, whether we realise it or not, this life is but a passage to the eternal hereafter.

Well may the Christian exultingly sing—even from the midst of temptation and trial—

Through, but as a pilgrim guest,
'Tis the passage of the soul.
Through, but passing to my rest,
Tending ever to the goal.
Beulah's hills are full in view,
Certainly it will be through.

Through the fire and through the flood—
This the consecrated way!
This the path the Master trod,
And it leadeth unto day.
Through the cloud and through the sea
He will make a way for me.

But if you are not Christ's, if heart and life have never been yielded to Him, yet still there remains the solemn certainty that you are being hurried through time—somewhere.

Will you not pause and ask, "Whither am I tending? To what terminus am I bound?" And, oh that the prayerful consideration of this might lead you to cast in your lot with those who have, by the grace of God, set their faces Zionward.

We want you to come with us. Many of us would fain tell you, if we could, how He has led us through our pilgrimage, and how He satisfies the heart which wholly trusts Him. We would fain increase the number of our fellow-travellers. If you who read this are still unsaved, we would humbly say to you, "There is much in us, the followers of Jesus, which may not attract you; there is much which we do ourselves deplore and mourn over. But let not this dissuade you from making the acquaintance of our Lord. We fail daily; but He faileth not. We are, oh, so consciously! weak and faulty, but He is worthy. And we can humbly but confidently testify that the blessed Saviour does carry us through all difficulties and temptations if we only trust Him. Look not at us, but set your eyes on Him who is heaven's glory and the well-beloved Son of the Father. He will never disappoint you. "Come thou with us, and we will do thee good" (Num. x. 29).

"Oh taste and see that the Lord is good; blessed is the man that trusteth in Him" (Psa. xxxiv. 8).

"Can you tell me the way to heaven?" asked one. And the answer was quickly and brightly made, "Take the first turn to the right and keep straight on." Reader, we commend that answer to you, with the urgent entreaty that the "right" turn may speedily be taken. You will never regret it—never. But, oh, think of the never-ceasing regret which must be theirs who, with the very "Come" of Jesus sounding in their ears, pass on to the eternal darkness! "I saw," said Bunyan, "that there was a way to hell even from the gates of heaven."

Fear his mercy to neglect
They who will not take, reject.

"How shall we escape if we neglect so great salvation?" (Heb. ii. 3).

JEWISH NOTES.

NORTH AFRICA.

Miss J. L. Trotter writes from Biskra, Algiers, to say that her recently-mentioned classes for Jewish women, did not long continue. "We had a large influx of Jewish visitors for three or four weeks in the summer, but I believe they were drawn mainly by curiosity. They disappeared as suddenly as they came, and now only a few stray adults come, and a few children. The counter-influence of the Rabbis has no doubt helped in the scattering."

HEBREW CHRISTIAN PRAYER UNION.

This union, which was established about fourteen years ago, held its annual meeting recently at the Hebrew Conference Hall, Old Montague-street, Whitechapel. Rev. A. Bernstein, president, occupied the chair, and from a statement made by Mr. H. Ehrlich, it appeared that there are branches in all the capitals of the Continent, one in Persia, another in America; and that day prayer was being offered at each for the bringing of the Jews to a knowledge of the true Messiah. Earnest addresses were given by the president, Rev. O. E. C. Roeder, and others. A missionary from Persia spoke most encouragingly of the progress being made in that benighted country.

PARIS.

Mr. L. C. Mamlock (London Jews Society), of Paris, recently made a Christmas tree festivity an occasion to gather Jewish women and children in his mission hall. He writes: "In many cases the children were brought by their parents, who listened very attentively to the Gospel as it was explained to the little ones. Questions were asked as to the birth, life, death, and resurrection of our Lord, and John iii. 16 was recited with gratifying intelligence. Christmas hymns were beautifully sung. Such a large gathering of Jewish children in connection with Evangelical work among the Jews in Paris has never been seen before, and much delight was expressed at the sight by interested visitors."

HOME FOR SANDWICH MEN.

I spent Friday evening with the board-carriers, popularly known as "sandwich-men." Five hundred of them were the guests of Mr. James Keates, who, in a special sense, is the boardman's friend. An abundant repast was laid in one of the spacious rooms in connection with Craven Chapel, Regent-street. The attendants, numbering about twenty, were of the same class. They had been selected for this duty because they were "rescued ones," now holding positions of trust and responsibility. Upon several of them were still to be seen, however, unmistakable marks of the hard life of former days.

No one could watch the hungry throng without the deepest interest. A history, terribly pathetic, could be seen at a glance to lie behind the degraded life that some were living. Aged and crippled ones had found admission. Others in the vigour of manhood, who should have been occupying honourable positions in the world, were there. A few were young. Why were they eligible to be present at such an assembly? Whether the guests had agreed amongst themselves or not to appear in their Sunday garments (?) I could not say, but I was certainly surprised and gratified to see so few indications of severe distress. It looked rather like the gathering together of fairly well-to-do men of the labouring class.

The meeting in the lecture hall "after tea" was most enthusiastic. Right heartily did all the men enter into it. What voice, if not soul, there was in the singing! What outward devotion, at least, in the repetition of the Lord's Prayer! Rev. W. H. Tindall presided. Several brief speeches, bright and earnest, were made. Two or three of the sisters of the West London Wesleyan Missions gave characteristic addresses. Others of their number sang suitable solos. Scarcely ever have I been in a more sympathetic audience. It seemed as though no one present could possibly know a care or a sorrow.

A Boardman's Home is established at 39, Queen's-square, Bloomsbury, with at present fifty-four inmates, where Mr. Keates is the resident superintendent, but not that only or chiefly—he lives amongst the men in a simple, brotherly fashion, sharing their misfortunes, sympathising in their hard struggles—one with them in all respects, a friend really, to whom any hopeless man could safely open his mind. Does not an enterprise like this take rank with the best efforts that Christian love has ever espoused for the recovery of the lapsed sons of men? Abundant signs appear that Christ Himself has set his own seal upon the work. A second home will be opened this month, and a third at no very distant date. It is estimated that there are some 8000 of these boardmen in London alone. No employment is possibly more precarious than theirs. (Rev.) Joseph Woodhouse.

THE ABERDEEN TEMPERANCE SOCIETY celebrated its jubilee on Saturday. The proceedings took the form of a series of meetings. In the afternoon a sale of work was opened in the Music Hall Buildings by Canon Barker, ex-Bailie Kemp presiding. The local Band of Hope Union co-operated in the demonstration later in the day, about three thousand children marching in processional order from Gordon's College grounds to the Music Hall, where a limelight entertainment was given. In the evening a conversazione took place. On Sunday night Canon Barker preached to a crowded audience in the Music Hall.

THE PRESENT DISTRESS.

By Dr. T. J. Barnardo.

The terribly severe weather recently experienced has brought misery to thousands of the poorest in our great cities; and the scenes witnessed during the last few weeks in the back streets and slums of London, and of many of the large towns where I have branches, have been sad enough to touch the hardest hearts.

One of my devoted workers heard lately of a very grave case of poverty and illness. On calling at the address given, she found a woman lying on the floor, with only a little straw under her. An infant, but two days old, lay by her side: and three other children, all young and all nearly naked, were huddled, for the sake of warmth, as close to the poor mother as they could manage.

There was no fire in the grate, and nothing to make a fire with. There were only a few rags of clothing in the room; and no food but a few crusts left from their last meal, which had consisted simply of dry bread given by a poor neighbour. A little warm milk had also been supplied on the previous day by some Good Samaritan, and no doubt but for that the baby could not have lived.

Questioned as to why she did not apply in time for relief to the workhouse, where she could have had admission to the infirmary until able to be about, the mother's only answer was that that would have meant her children going to the workhouse too, and her separation from them, and that nothing would induce her to take this step. It was pointed out that she might at least have obtained outdoor relief, and that the medical officer would then have visited her. But, notwithstanding her miserable condition, the poor creature had made up her mind that she would not apply for aid to the parochial authorities.

Now here lay a poor mother, thoroughly respectable, who absolutely risked her own life and the life of her child rather than apply for relief to the workhouse; and her neighbours, miserably poor themselves, were clearly of the same mind. While such a feeling is it is useless to rail against it. We must rather look it in the face, and reckon upon it as a factor in our social work.

Two of her neighbours had done what they could for the woman on the day of her confinement. When her case was brought under my notice, steps were at once taken to relieve the poor mother. I hope, when she is strong enough, to get her some work and to give her wisely administered assistance, so that she may be able to bear some of her own burdens. But my readers can well imagine that cases of this sort make me long for adequate means to assist the really decent and worthy poor visited by the devoted colleagues who co-operate with me in East London and elsewhere.

In another poor home, consisting of a single room, the wife was found lying ill. There were five children, all under twelve, in a semi-starving condition. The husband and father had been for fifteen weeks out of work. Everything that could be sold had been sold; not a stick of furniture was left. The rent was thirteen weeks behind-hand; but the landlord had been very kind and forbearing with them.

My readers may imagine the misery endured by this one family! Happily, I was able promptly to bring some measure of relief to the sick wife and the starving children. The father has now started, with a few shillings in his pocket, a sound pair of boots on his feet, and a warm coat on his back, to the north, in quest of work, which he has been led to expect in Newcastle or Glasgow. If he succeeds, his family are to follow him. Meanwhile, I am having them looked after so that they will not perish of want.

At the Waifs' Supper, which occurred on January 9, several dreadful cases were brought to light—cases in which quite young children had not broken their fast that day until they had their meal in our bright hall. One girl said, in quite a natural way, as if it were almost a daily experience, to a lady who questioned her, that she had had nothing to eat all day; her brother and sister had had some bread, but "mother thought as she was going to the Supper she could do without any." And so the little creature had held on bravely until she came half-famished to our feast. Needless to add, the child's pockets were well filled with bread and cake, so that when she left she carried home to her brother and sister some share of what she had herself enjoyed.

Among the children who were admitted immediately after that Supper to the permanent benefits of the Homes, there were two boys who had previously, not having money wherewith to pay for a lodging. They were unable to obtain permission, which they had sometimes had, to sleep in the kitchen of the common lodging-house where they were known. Stricter rules had been laid down, owing to the advent of a new deputy, and the boys had had, as they said to me, "to hook it and step it."

But when one looked at these two little mites—for they were mere children—clad in ragged clothes, their toes peeping out of broken boots, their thin, half-starved bodies bearing signs of long-continued hunger and want, and thought of what a struggle they must have had for months, alone upon the streets of London, one realised that the days of heroic endurance in common life were not ended.

About fifty children of all ages constituted the immediate harvest to the Homes from the Waifs' Supper, somewhat fewer than in some former years. But only to think of fifty children by one haul of our net saved from ruin—the ruin which carries with it degradation of body and mind, of soul and spirit, fills me with gratitude.

Let my readers remember that this blessed work of rescue in the name of Christ is being carried on, not merely among the children of the Metropolis, or at only one season of the year, but among unhappy little ones all over the country, and all the year round, winter and summer alike. As I have often said, there is hardly a city or town, or even a hamlet, in the country, which has not, at some time or other, contributed to the Homes its miserable waif, or destitute orphan boy or girl rescued from suffering or degradation.

This fact alone ought to constitute my very strongest claim for aid upon good men and women everywhere; for I suppose there never has been a work of rescue more widely cosmopolitan, or more comprehensive and hopeful in its character.

CHEERED BY A STAR.

A MODERN EPIPHANY.

(See Mrs. Howard Taylor's Chinese Diary in Regions Beyond for January.)

Through the rent roof of her cabin,
Dark within with noisome fumes,
Peered down one large lustrous planet
Travelling through Time's upper rooms,
Holy, tranquil—through the night
Carrying a diviner light.

'Twas the gaze of some high Watcher,
Leaning o'er Heaven's viewless stair,
Pouring down mute benediction
On that warrior maiden fair
Borne down with her dauntless toil,
Sowing Christ in alien soil.

Led by her great unseen Master,
Swift she hastes through death-bound lands,
Healing sin's supreme disaster,
Healing, sealing, with both hands,—
"Courier of the Cross, O stay!"
"Nay, but meet me at That Day."

A COLONY OF MERCY.—At a meeting in Christ Church, Westminster Bridge-road, last Thursday, in connection with this movement, addresses were given by Rev. H. P. Hughes, Dr. Paton, of Nottingham, and Rev. F. B. Meyer. It was resolved to procure a 400-acre farm in Kent as soon as funds come in, to start a labour colony on the plan of Miss Sutter's "Colony of Mercy." £2000 will be needed.

CRAYFORD, KENT.—The work begun by the late Sir Arthur Blackwood at the Village Hall, Crayford, is still carried on by a little band of voluntary workers under the direction of the Rev. George Southall, The Lindens, Dartford. Services are held on Sundays and Thursdays as well as temperance and other meetings. There is also a good mothers' meeting, a girls' help-myself class of over twenty; Sunday-school with an attendance of over seventy, and a Band of Hope with an attendance of over sixty. The neighbourhood is poor, and the weekly offerings barely cover current expenses. There are several matters of general repairs, and a new platform urgently needed. Perhaps some friends of the late Sir Arthur Blackwood would like to help us.—Yours very sincerely, F. J. Phillips.

IN THE DOCK DISTRICT.

During the past year our nation, in common with others, has suffered heavily from the great depression in trade and commercial interests generally. While all, or nearly all, classes of the community have been affected thereby, the greatest share of privation has fallen upon the industrial and labouring population. We who live and work in that part of London known as the Dock district, have a daily succession of cases whose desperate need is caused, not by loafing nor by drink, but by their inability to get the work they would so gladly do, or by sickness which prevents them from earning.

Allow me to give one or two specimens of the people we try to help a little—alas! only a very little, for we are at the end of our resources, and winter is upon us, with all its bitter clamorous wants. One man, whom I will call Mr. L., a bricklayer by trade, is suffering from rheumatic fever with some internal complications. He has a wife, a nice patient woman, and four dear little children. These are really starving, all they have to live upon being the little relief we could give them. Nourishment is more necessary than physic, but the poor fellow could not get it. Another morning the visitor goes into five houses in one short street. Each family is in dire straits through the suspension of sugar factories where the breadwinner is employed. No work, no bread.

It is simply unbearable to visit house after house and see poverty which you cannot relieve. One family, that of a Mrs. G., are in sad case—eight in all, and not one earning a penny, save that the mother gets one day of washing in a fortnight. They have no fire except through the kindness of a poor neighbour, who gives a few pieces of coal from her own little store. And this is the common everyday routine. Factories are slack, men and women are out of work, foodless, fireless. Sickly children, poor hungry waifs of humanity, pine away for lack of care and food. We entreat someone who has not tasted want like this to remember beneficently these needy ones. Who will help to bring a little gladness and cheer into the anxious lives of our poor people for the sake of Him whom we can only minister to in the persons of the sick, hungry, and dying? A LODGING-HOUSE MISSION.

In the January report of the Carey House Institute, Chester, we read:—

It is with a sense of heartfelt thanksgiving that we review the last few months' experience in our Lodging-house Mission. This branch of our work was opened at the close of last October, and the results have already been gratifying in the extreme. As a rule, in the opening of the work, our deaconesses met with a very warm reception, and the Gospel meetings held in the lodging-houses have done much to brighten the men's monotonous lives, and to encourage the workers themselves.

At the close of one of our Sunday evening services one of the men asked if he might speak to the deaconess who had given the evangelistic address the previous week. He informed the sister that he was starting for Philadelphia, and, with tears in his eyes, he thanked her for the message she had delivered, which had indeed been to him the message of salvation. He went on to say that he thanked God he had been led to Chester. The sister said that though he was leaving his lodging-house friends, he was taking his Saviour with him. "That I am!" was the hearty response, "and I will pray for your work wherever I go."

After one of the Sunday evening services, the men in chorus cried, "Come oftener! Come in the week!" Only one response could be made to such a request. A week-night Bible class was started in the same house, with what results the Book of Life alone may declare.

RUSSIAN STUNDISTS.—The Moscow correspondent of The Daily Chronicle learns from the provinces of Kiev and Kherson that large bodies of Stundists are returning to the Orthodox Church, worn out with their long struggle for freedom of worship. The Greek Church has a large number of Orthodox missionaries at present engaged in districts where there is a considerable Stundist population, and report has it that nothing in the way of scruples hinders the zeal of these priests. There is still no sign of any grace or amnesty being extended to Stundists in gaol or in banishment.

MR. TELFORD AT BRISTOL.

THE mission conducted by Mr. E. P. Telford, in connection with Counterslip Baptist Church, was concluded on Thursday evening last. Notwithstanding the frost and snow, which at times rendered the streets almost impassable, large congregations gathered every night, the chapel being frequently crowded in every part. As the Mission proceeded the interest deepened, and increased power accompanied the preacher's message.

Meetings were held during the dinner-hour in the manufactories of Messrs. J. S. Fry and Sons and W. D. and H. O. Wills and Co., and many of the employés were thus induced to attend the evening meetings in the chapel, and were subsequently led to decide for Christ.

Immediate and rich results followed every meeting without exception, and on the last evening the centre of the chapel was crowded with those who had found Christ, and were rejoicing in Him as their Saviour. The address on this occasion was especially helpful and timely, and no one present will ever forget the effect, when the new converts rose en masse and sang :—

O happy day that fixed my choice
On Thee, my Saviour and my God.

During the three weeks of the mission over 400 have been spoken with in the inquiry-room, and it is believed that the greater number of these have now definitely decided for God. The congregations were drawn from all parts of the city, and doubtless every section of the Christian Church will be enriched by the Divine blessing on Mr. Telford's work.

Mention must be made of Mrs. Telford, who accompanied her husband, and was of priceless service to many whom she led to Christ in the after-meetings. Counterslip Church will long have reason to bless God for his grace and favour in qualifying this able evangelist so richly for his work, in sending him into their midst and then using him so gloriously for the up-building of God's people and the ingathering of those out of the way. HENRY KNEE.

MISSION AT BIRMINGHAM.

WE have had a most helpful visit from Mr. John McAuliffe (Tunbridge Wells), January 20-28, and can heartily thank God for the gracious blessing He has given. The parish is a very needy one, the population consisting of gas labourers and the poorer working class. There are in it about 120 courts, some of them as poor and wretched as can be found in the city. Pigeon-flyers and loungers of the unkempt type abound, and how to reach them is a problem difficult to solve. Thank God, some have been and are being brought to the feet of Jesus. We have a thoroughly Gospel P.S.A. for men, with several hundreds in attendance. Last Sunday fifteen or sixteen stood right up amongst their fellow men as willing then and there to decide for Christ. Over fifty cards acknowledging definite blessing have been asked for, and prayer is most earnestly desired that the work may spread and deepen. God manifestly set his seal upon Mr. McAuliffe's ministry, and we thank Him for his servant's life of faith, and most faithful loving services.

There is great need of a new mission hall here. An excellent site can be obtained for £300. We could find abundant work for a Christian lady who might be able to help us voluntarily. Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Lord Radstock, Mr. Hefford, of the Evangelisation Society (just passed to his rest in the Lord), have helped us in the Gospel, and would endorse the need that exists. I shall be glad to furnish further particulars. J. O. WEST.

ARTILLERY LANE MISSION, SPITALFIELDS, E.—The twenty-second report of this work says: "Owing to the rebuilding of the premises in Steward-street, Spitalfields, which were recently occupied by the Mission, the work is temporarily carried on at Fournier-street, corner of Brick-lane. The Mission carries on lodging-house and rescue work, in addition to providing spiritual and material help for the poor and destitute. Occasionally some who formerly attended our meetings have called to tell us of their conversion, which took place in the Mission-room. We should value the prayers and fellowship of God's children in this work in a practical manner, as we endeavour to rescue the perishing, and lift up the fallen around us." The superintendent of the work is Mrs. S. Finn, 29, St. Ann's-road, South Tottenham.

LONDON JEWS' SOCIETY.

AT the annual prayer meeting in commemoration of the arrival of the first Anglican bishop in Jerusalem on January 21, 1842, and the consecration of Christ Church, Mount Zion, on the same date in 1849, Mr. W. N. West, chairman of committee, said: There are many important matters engaging our attention at the present time, amongst which I may mention on this occasion the erection of the new Mission Hospital at Jerusalem, towards which some £7750 out of the £10,000 required has been received. A development of our work at Hebron will soon be an accomplished fact, as Miss L. J. Barlee is shortly to take up honorary mission work there. The committee are also taking steps to develop and consolidate the Damascus Mission by the appointment of a medical missionary and the opening of a dispensary in that Jewish centre. It is a matter for great thankfulness that several friends are coming forward to raise a special fund for this branch of the work.

There have been no tidings from Abyssinia lately, owing to the Italian military operations preventing news from the interior reaching the coast. We must pray for the safety of our missionaries there. Though there are many difficulties in our work, the committee have much reason to thank God and take courage.

In conclusion Mr. West drew attention to the meeting of the Ladies' Union, to be held in Sion College on February 5, and the Palestine Exhibition in Holloway from March 11 to 23. A very appropriate address was given by Canon McCormick, vicar of St. Augustine's, Highbury.

CHAMBERI MISSION, MADRID.

DEAR SIR,—The premises occupied by this Mission for the last twenty years have had to be given up, as the landlord has let them to the Roman Catholics. Other premises, however, have been obtained, and, although much smaller and less convenient, are yet in a good position. It is now thought advisable to purchase this place, that it may be held as a permanent home for the Mission. We are now looking for the necessary means to accomplish this—£900. Of this about half has come in, and we are most anxious to get the remainder in as soon as possible.

There are at present about 420 boys and girls in the Mission schools, who are being educated and taught the truths of Scripture. Most of them are the children of Christians and professed Protestants, though there are also a goodly number who are of Roman Catholic parents.

BROUSSA ORPHANAGE.

THE Broussa Orphanage report for last year tells of cholera, earthquake, and famine in Asia Minor, whereby the number of orphans in the country has been increased, and the care of those who are in the Orphanage has been attended with unusual anxiety. Mr. Baghdasarian, the principal, says in the report :—

The institution had a very hard time all the year. During the cholera, the kindergarten and the day school were closed, and we kept school only with the orphans. Although the epidemic has not entered our house, still we had to stand three times at open graves. Some undecided ones have begun to plead for remission of sins and salvation of soul.

We keep all our inmates to busy work. There is work for all, even for the youngest one. All the household duties are performed by them; we have only a cook from outside. We have sent many children out during the year, and taken others in their places. Those who left us in former years are nearly all married; some are serving in Christian families, and others are teaching in Protestant or Armenian schools. We are often asked to send teachers into village schools, and some of our former orphans have succeeded very well in such spheres. One thing we most urgently need is a small hospital of ten beds; £200 is enough to supply it.

Copies of the report may be had from Rev. W. A. Essery, Sec. Bible Lands Missions' Aid Society, 7, Adam-street, Strand, W.C.

SEAMEN AT SALCOMBE.

ABOUT six years ago a Men's Bible Class and P.S.A. was formed here. It began with twelve members, and now numbers about 150, the population of the town being only 1600. Four years later it was felt necessary to erect premises of our own, and this has been done at a cost of over £600. We have, besides a spacious hall where the class and P.S.A. are held, a capacious and comfortable reading room, well supplied with literature, and a good recreation room, and the premises are largely made use of by our members.

But what I want particularly to refer to is this: Seeing that the seamen and fishermen who largely use our harbour had no place to spend their spare time and evenings but on board their vessels or at the public-house, we threw our premises open to them free of charge. I am pleased to state that the privilege has been largely made use of during the past week. About fifty Cornish fishermen have been in harbour through stress of weather, and daily they have crowded our rooms. We did all we could to make them welcome, and had it not been for our institute they would have had no choice but to remain on board their vessels or have gone to the public-house. Our institute and work is very largely that of a Seamen's and Fishermen's Mission. We have raised locally about £200, but we are burdened with a heavy debt that interferes to some extent with what we should like to do. Our work is thoroughly undenominational. We should feel very grateful if any of your readers would help us.—Yours truly, JAS. FAIRWEATHER.

MISS TAYLOR'S SCHOOLS, BEYROUT.

DEAR SIR,—I have a letter from Miss Taylor, dated January 1, in which she sends her thanks to all who have helped to sustain the work by gifts and prayer. She has under her charge in the orphanage about fifty girls, who are housed, fed, clothed, and instructed. There are besides out-schools: one at Ras Beyrout, taught by two old pupils, both Christians now, though once Moslem, with about forty-five scholars; another at Gharafy on Lebanon, a Druse village, where two Druse sisters, both bright Christians, are teaching about fifty Druse children the truths of the Gospel. At Tirakeen another old pupil, now married, has a school of some twenty-five. Thus the influence spreads.

Miss Taylor always has an open door and a hearty Christian welcome for travellers passing through or sailors touching at Beyrout. While labouring so incessantly among the Moslems, the Druses, and the Jews, she does not forget her own countrymen when she can hold out to them a helping hand.

Some special gifts having been sent her lately, she has been able to give a garment to each of the poor half-naked children at the Ras school, and also to many of the poor women who attend her Thursday and Sunday Bible classes, and who help her with her sewing.

I close with this short extract:—"In our Union prayer meeting every afternoon it would do your heart good to hear the children offer prayer by turn. They are taught to ask in prayer, shortly, just for what they want; and the out-schools are never forgotten, nor you, and all the other kind friends who think of us."

Poor as the children are, they collect at the Sunday service for the Bible Society, and for 1894 sent £2 3s., mostly made up of farthings!

Yours faithfully, WM. FERGUSON.

Kinmundy, near Mintlaw, N.B.

BARCELONA.—In connection with the Gospel school work in this Spanish city, Mr. Henry Payne reports :—"We close our year with 487 children in our day-schools and 252 in the Sunday-schools, and a staff of eleven teachers, including assistants. Important and useful as the secular instruction is which the children receive in our schools, yet to give this is by no means our object, but rather to make known the Gospel of God, that the children may be saved, and that through them we may reach others. The precious seed thus sown day by day we commend to the watchful care of our gracious God who giveth the increase, and doubt not but that there will be a good harvest, the first fruits of which we already see. During the past year we have received into fellowship at the Lord's table six of our former pupils, and there are others who give us good hope of conversion to God." Mr. Payne's address is, Brusi, 17, S. Gervasio, Barcelona.

BOOKS FOR THE BLIND.

The Lending Library for the Blind, 114, Belsize-road, London, N.W., has just issued its eleventh annual report. Opened twelve years ago with only fifty books, it now has a catalogue of over 2900 volumes in raised type; over 2500 are in Braille, the rest in Moon and Lucas. The Scriptures are there in all three types. Religious and devotional works, science, history, travel, biography, poetry, etc., are all largely represented. These volumes are in constant circulation amongst from four to five hundred readers in all parts of the United Kingdom, nearly all of whom find through this library their only admittance into the wonderful world of books. The great cost and bulk of embossed books put their possession out of the question for all but the very few.

The subscription for members is fixed at a very low rate, that for the poorer class of readers being almost nominal. From the carriage fund a part of the cost of carriage is paid for those who cannot meet this expense. Many kind friends pay subscription or carriage money, or both, for individual members who could not otherwise avail themselves of the library. To those living in London the expense of carriage is, of course, very small.

Touchingly grateful letters are often received from the members and their friends, expressive of intense appreciation. One, quite deaf, as well as blind, writes (in Braille): "You have opened a new world to me; you have done what I thought was impossible—you have made my life once more interesting to myself." Are there not others who would gladly help thus to open in shadowed lives one of the many doors which blindness closes? A copy of the report, with full catalogue, is willingly forwarded on application to the hon. sec., Miss Arnold.

MRS. ANDREW AND DR. BUSHNELL.

These ladies last week addressed two large meetings on "Social Questions in the Orient" at Darlington and Sunderland. At the former place the Salvation Army Barracks was packed with an interested and enthusiastic audience of close upon 2000 persons. The platform was worthy the meeting and the cause, among those who took part, in addition to the two chief speakers, being Sir J. W. Pease, Bart., M.P., Mr. H. Fell Pease, M.P., Sir Theodore Fry, Bart., M.P., and Mr. J. Hyslop Bell. An emphatic resolution, calling for immediate action against the opium evil, was passed, as was a similar one at Sunderland. At the latter place the Mayor, Mr. J. C. Sanderson, J.P., was in the chair, and an excellent meeting was held in the Assembly Hall. On Monday, February 4, a meeting was held in the Town Hall, Portsmouth.

Next week Mrs. Andrew and Dr. Bushnell will be at Bradford, Yorks, on Monday, Feb. 18, and at Sheffield on Wednesday, Feb. 20. The latter meeting has been altered to the date named in consequence of another important gathering being called in a neighbouring hall for the night originally fixed and announced. Preparations are going rapidly forward for the closing meeting in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, W., on March 22, when Lady Henry Somerset will preside.

THE POPLAR POOR.

Mrs. Wilkes sends a touching note, received, as she writes, "from a poor, good woman I have known for years, who distributed £1 for me. She knows those who are starving in this terrible weather. 'This has given me great ease of mind,' she says, and I know it has, for she is a good neighbour in the true sense of the word. She often shares her daily meal with those who are in want. My daughter-in-law, Mrs. John Wilkes, is out to-day in this bitter weather, having some outdoor cases of extreme want to relieve for me, and I am very thankful for her warm heart and willing feet and hands to go where I am, from my increasing age, unable to go myself."

In the letter referred to the writer gives a careful statement of what she has done with the money, and adds:—

"I have seen the greater part of it spent, and know the women to be in very poor circumstances, and good cases for charity. None has been spent on drink, I am an eye-witness. This has given me great ease of mind, and I feel it a pleasure to give it to them. "Kitty R——."

BIBLE SOCIETY NOTES.

One of the most interesting Bible publications of late years has recently been issued in Japan. It is a miniature Gospel of St. John, prepared by the three societies unitedly at work in the country—the British and Foreign, the American, and the Scottish—for the special use of the Japanese troops. The little book measures outside only 2⅜in. by 1⅝in.; it has a guarding flap, the paper is extremely thin, and the type is clear and readable. It recalls in an interesting way the Soldiers' Pocket Bible of the Cromwellian armies.

A photograph of the New Testament recently presented to the Dowager Empress of China by over 10,000 native Christian women, with its silver case, is given in the current issue of The Bible Society Reporter. The address accompanying the gift is a very interesting document. One of the sentences is—"We testify our loyalty and admiration by presenting your Majesty with the New Testament, which is the principal classic of our holy religion, namely, the religion of Jesus Christ, which is the only religion that practically aims at the salvation of the whole world from sin and suffering. The truths in this volume have brought peace of heart and purity of life, with hope of everlasting happiness, to countless millions. It has also given to Christian nations the just laws and stable government which are at the root of their temporal prosperity and power. On this account we hear it is a custom in the West to present Empresses, Queens, and Princesses with a copy of this book on happy occasions in their lives."

CHURCH PROTESTANT AID SOCIETY.

The object of this Society is to aid members of the Church of England who are distressed and driven from their parish churches by the introduction of Romish doctrines and practices. It is prepared to supply ministers to Protestant congregations, and to facilitate the erection of unlicensed buildings for public worship.

In an "Appeal to Protestant Churchmen," just issued, we read: "An effective protest can only be made in the following way. Let a few earnest men take the first step and engage a room or hall, and then assemble at the time of morning and evening prayer. Let them use the Prayer Book, and appoint one or more of their members to read the service, and to preach a sermon, if they cannot afford to provide a clergyman. Along with such congregations will soon grow up Sunday-schools, Bible classes, missionary working parties, and other forms of Christian service.

"The aim of the Society is to encourage the formation of such organisations with advice gathered from experience in various places, and, wherever possible, with pecuniary aid, and the occasional services of godly clergymen. The movement is forced upon us, and is set on foot in order to meet the 'present distress.' Nothing will so help to rouse up the Protestant feeling of the country, or to show the world the condition into which the bishops have reduced the Church by driving the loyal members to such extremities, as the existence of a large number of these separate protesting congregations."

The secretary of the Society is Rev. H. C. Downman, 60, Cornhill, E.C.

POVERTY AT PONTYPOOL.

Some of the tin and ironworks are closed and deserted, others in full swing day and night, sending forth vast volumes of steam and smoke to the skies, and train-loads of material to all parts of the world. And on all the hillsides are rows of cottages, in which exist the toiling thousands of men and women, whose work makes the land productive, and provides the marketable commodity. These are standing about in thousands waiting for employment, envying the favoured few who have got work to do. And the children! What words can describe the sufferings and privations they must endure? Hundreds of them get no meals but what are given by Mr. Wintle. Of the bread given to the fathers and mothers a goodly portion is reserved for the bairnies, the parents denying themselves heroically that the stress of hunger may not prove more than the young ones can bear.

After an interview with Mr. Wintle, I went amongst the people and made inquiries. The general opinion is that "if it hadn't been for Mr. Wintle, we should ha' clemmed at our house long ago." "Two months idle, and ten children, and nothing but what they got from Wintle's place." "Only three weeks any work, and that short time, and then no money, the company kept it all for rent." I trust many will help Mr. Wintle in feeding the souls and bodies of the suffering poor of Pontymoile, and the five other centres of his mission. W. H. H.

BIBLE CONFERENCES IN U.S.A.

Dear Mr. Editor,—Since my inauguration of Bible and Prophetic Conferences on this side, they have proved thus far of great spiritual value to pastors and people. The stormy week at Brooklyn did not quench the ardour of those who attended. The final service called out a splendid congregation. At Baltimore all of the services were well attended; nearly 1000 persons often present. Harrisburg opens most auspiciously. Mrs. Needham and myself held five services yesterday; the churches were crowded. At 3 o'clock I addressed nearly 1500 men, while she at the same hour talked to 1000 women. Nearly thirty pastors of this city are co-operating with us in the movement. We are expecting a large delegation of country preachers and their people day by day. I have a loving and loyal band of Bible teachers, including the well-beloved Erdman, who is a teacher of teachers.

Next week (D.V.) our Conference will be held in Philadelphia. Forget us not in prayer.—In best bonds, Geo. C. Needham.

STREET HAWKERS IN WINTER.

As the weather of the latter part of January and the beginning of February has been exceptional in severity, so also has been the privation among certain classes, and certainly none have felt the pinch more than the flower girls, very many of whom are nobly striving to live respectably and to earn what suffices for their humble maintenance. Mr. John A. Groom, of the Flower Girls' Mission, Clerkenwell Close, supplies heartrending accounts of the distress which prevails around that centre at the present time, and he makes an earnest appeal for funds. A large proportion of the needy cases are those of widows who are struggling to keep a home intact, and who have children dependent upon them. Children suffer terribly, but the cocoa breakfasts supplied at such times are a great boon to them. So also is the plain early morning meal provided for the poor flower girls at the Covent Garden Breakfast-room, where a good Christian word is also spoken, which often finds lodgment in the heart. Mr. John A. Groom, 8, Sekforde-street, Clerkenwell, will supply all information.

STRANGERS' REST, RATCLIFF.

The monthly workers' meeting on Friday last was a very bright and stimulating occasion. Mr. J. T. Isaac, the honorary secretary, had good tidings to impart of the blessing which has attended the meetings for the sailors recently, and Rev. Dr. Gritton gave an address full of spiritual help for those who in practical service are following in the footsteps of Him who came to be the servant and Saviour of men.

An interesting account was given by Miss Annie Sanderson of the work in which she has been engaged for several years, as principal of the school for girls carried on at Chefoo, under the auspices of the China Inland Mission. There are separate schools for the girls and boys, which were opened specially for the children of the missionaries, to obviate the necessity of their being sent home to Europe to be educated, thus involving long periods of separation between parents and children. Miss Sanderson was able to show how valuable the schools have proved for relieving the missionaries of the great difficulty of having to attend to the thorough mental equipment of their families, and at the same time carrying on their mission work in its full efficiency. Besides this, the schools are a training-ground for many who, it is hoped, will themselves be future missionaries.

Mr. F. J. Rayner followed with some particulars of the operations of the Zambesi Industrial Mission.

THE LATE REV. JAMES A. WYLIE.—A communication has been received by Provost Wylie, Hamilton, from the British Consul, Newchwang, informing him that the sum of 7000 taels (equivalent to £1000 according to the present rate of exchange) has been paid to him by the Chinese Government, and lodged in the Hong Kong and Shanghai Bank, as compensation for the murder of his son by Chinese soldiers in August last. Immediately on receiving this intimation, the Provost wrote to the Rev. James Buchanan, Foreign Mission secretary of the United Presbyterian Church, stating his desire that the whole sum should be handed over to the Mission Board for the purpose of erecting a mission chapel and hospital at or near Liaoyang as a memorial to Rev. James A. Wylie, the district where he laboured as a missionary and died as a martyr.

Letters to the Editor.

"ADVANCING APOSTASY."

Dear Sir,—I did not see the letter of "An Evangelical Clergyman" upon the above subject, but I gather from the correspondence this week that the alleged apostasy is due to what a correspondent is pleased to term "the Ritualistic conspiracy."

There are many hard and unkind words spoken against that portion of Christ's Church who are termed "Ritualists," and who are said to be "Romanising our beloved Church of England." Now, sir, I think it would be showing a far more Christian spirit if, instead of denouncing High Church people as Ritualists or traitors, or their teaching as "the Ritualistic conspiracy," your correspondents would inquire into what is really the teaching of these so-called "conspirators."

Mr. Eugene Stock holds up as high standards such men as Canon Fleming, Prebendary Webb-Peploe, Prebendary Eardley Wilmot, and others. I have every reason to believe that these are holy and devoted men of God. But are there not holy and devoted men of God to be found in the ranks of the so-called "conspirators"? Who can estimate the work done by that saintly man of God Bishop Walsham How, who, for his work's sake, was beloved by the people in the slums of East London? or, of Bishops Mackenzie, Patteson, Smythies, and many others, who were ready to lay down their lives for their Divine Master? or of Canon Knox-Little, whose burning, soul-stirring earnestness brings together such vast crowds in St. Paul's Cathedral at the mid-day services in Lent, and many others I could name?

Oh do not, I pray you, attempt to stand in the place of God to judge your fellow-men, and denounce them as "conspirators." Never was our beloved Church doing a greater work for God than she is doing at the present time, and the so-called "conspirators" are having a very large share of that work.

I attend a church where there are altar lights, altar cross, processional cross, eucharistic vestments, and such like, but I challenge any who have attended that church at any time to say that they have ever heard a word from the pulpit that was contrary to the Gospel of Christ.

In conclusion, I would ask you and your correspondents to exercise the grace of Christian charity, and not to be too severe in your judgments on those who differ from you. May God give us each more of the Spirit of Christ, and in our worship, however much we differ, may we seek solely the honour and glory of God. C. W. Hawes.

Uxbridge, February 3.

Dear Sir,—I have read with interest the letters in your last number from Mr. Eugene Stock and Rev. James Mountain. There is much in Mr. Stock's letter which is a cause of thankfulness; at the same time one cannot shut one's eyes to the fact that the Evangelicalism of which he speaks is not the Evangelicalism of former days. Things are being done to-day by the bulk of Evangelical clergymen, and practices are being introduced by them in their churches which would have been utterly repugnant to men like Simeon, Scott, John Newton, and John Venn, who were among the leaders of Evangelicalism in the early days of this century, and also by men like Canon Hoare, Canon Jackson, of Leeds, Rev. George Lea, of Birmingham, and a host of others I could name who have died comparatively lately.

For instance, which of these men would have introduced a credence table into his communion rails, as I know more than one of the present day Evangelical clergymen has, or had a surpliced choir, or intoned the beautiful Church prayers, or asked the congregation to stand up when he and the choir entered the church?

The fact is a large proportion of the successors of the men I have named may be Evangelicals, but they are not, as their predecessors were, Protestants and this makes all the difference. If they were they would stand in the old paths of those standard-bearers who went before them, and then we should not have to lament the increase of Ritualism and general "apostasy" as we have now.

Again, the doctrines of grace are not preached by the modern Evangelicals, or at least by the majority of them, as they were by the well-known Evangelicals of former days; nor is separation from the world preached as it used to be. This is another cause why Ritualism, which is a worldly religion, is so much on the increase, especially among our young people. If the "advancing apostasy" is to be arrested, the modern Evangelicals must, by God's help, go back to the doctrines and practices of their predecessors, and to that of the Reformers, and they must not pander to Romanism in their services as too many of them are doing. The late Rev. George Lea once said to me, "Surpliced choirs are the thin edge of the wedge," and he was right.

There is much in the letter of my friend Mr. Mountain with which I agree. "There is a good deal of scarlet in the Prayer-book," beautiful as the book is, but I fear the day has not yet come when the Evangelical clergy, as a body, will rise up and insist upon that scarlet being taken out. This means a new Prayer-book, if not a new Reformation, and from what I know of the Evangelical body (and my knowledge is pretty extensive) the bulk of them are not prepared for these drastic changes. Mr. Mountain must wait awhile. Things will have to get worse; more people must be led by Ritualism into Romanism; the Church will become more worldly still, and then the godly Evangelical Protestants will be forced out by God Himself, and a real Protestant Church will be formed, probably on the lines of Mr. Mountain's suggestions.

Meanwhile, let us thank God for what is being done by good and true men and women, and let us keep our eye fixed upon the Master and see what He would have us to do.—Yours faithfully,

Eastbourne, Feb. 4. C. B. Cooper.

THANKSGIVING AND REVIVAL.

Dear Sir,—I have been deeply interested in watching the developments connected with the "Thanksgiving and Revival" movement, and have hoped to see some practical outcome. From some of the letters published, I gather that there are not a few of God's servants who, from overwork or other causes, are unable to engage much in active service.

This is my own case, and my object in writing is to suggest to such that we should agree together to spend every Sunday evening during the time of services and meetings on our knees pleading with God for revival. I have been doing this now for over four years, and have seen many wonderful answers to prayer, and have become increasingly confident that there are times of revival before us such as have never yet been seen. Can we not, as Moses did, stand upon the mountain top with hands uplifted, while God's people are fighting his battles in the valley below? Moses and his companions were but three, and yet the success of the battle depended upon their unwearied intercessory attitude.

Dr. Prime, in his book, "The Power of Prayer," describing the rise and progress of the Revival in America in 1857-8, says, on page 2, "This revival is to be remembered through all coming ages as simply an answer to prayer." And yet how imperfectly have God's people learned this truth. "The weakest saint upon his knees" is a mighty power, but, after all our experience, how few there appear to be that really believe this. And yet the promises of God to prayer are so plain, so large, and so boundless.

I would suggest that those who are kept at home on Sunday evenings should spend the hour from seven till eight on their knees before God, and who can say what mighty results would follow? Certain it is that God's word of promise is absolutely sure, and He says, "According to your faith be it unto you."

Who that saw anything of the wonderful times of power and blessing during those memorable years from 1859 onward, but are sick at heart at the state of things in this day, and long intensely to see such times again. May God grant us this and much more than this. W. W. Ashby.

P.S.—It is now five years since I began, and my custom is to spend from 7 to 8 alone in prayer without a break. Sometimes the hour is very short, and has become so blessed that I look forward to it with the most joyful anticipation.

[We last week had an interview with the writer, and were deeply interested in his experiences. Prayer which brings answers from God is the most unanswerable argument for the truth of the Gospel.—Ed.]

MEDICAL MISSIONS.

Dear Sir,—You do a good service to the mission enterprise all over the world in emphasising, as you do in the recent article by "W. M.," the power of the medical missionary to open the way for the entrance of the Gospel. The opening up of Formosa in our own generation was mainly effected, e.g., by the work of Dr. Maxwell, the energetic editor of the journal from which "W. M." draws his facts. May I ask you to note that in quoting the list of schools of medicine from which the medical missionaries have proceeded, he stops short at the Universities, and does not indicate that the Royal College of Surgeons of England supplies 25, the Edinburgh Colleges of Physicians and Surgeons 62, the Society of Apothecaries 3, and the King's and Queen's Colleges of Ireland 3.

That such a large proportion of the medical missionaries have come from Edinburgh is largely owing to the circumstance that for more than half a century the Edinburgh Medical Missionary Society has recognised the importance of this branch of Christian service, and has had as a leading feature of its work the training of young men, and more recently of young women also, as medical missionaries. The last report (of which I send a copy) will show you that between seventy and eighty of the missionaries now in the field were associated with that society during their student days.

The Society does not lay itself out specially to support missionaries or mission stations abroad, as its object is rather to train men for all the different churches and missionary societies, and its Indian Missionary at Agra, Dr. Valentine, is carrying out a work on the lines of the parent society in training natives to do medical mission work among their fellow-countrymen.

I am glad to add that I hear of some of our students getting good at Mr. George Clarke's meetings, and that there is good evidence of spiritual energy among the members of our Christian association this winter.—With best regards, I am, yours always faithfully, A. R. Simpson.

ARE SUNDAY-SCHOOLS NEEDED?

Dear Sir,—In a recent issue you report the opinion of a Sunday-school teacher "that Sunday-schools in the South of England are a failure, because the scholar had already "learned her lesson at the Board school." I do not know if this lady is truly representative of the "Sunday-schools in the South of England," but will you allow me to give some testimony on the other side, lest the energy of Sunday-school teachers should fail under the idea that their efforts are not needed.

I have examined many children belonging to Board schools in a Midland town. I had been told repeatedly that they had not been taught the Ten Commandments in the Board school, and some Board school teachers acknowledge that they do not teach them. Some others do, but it seems to depend upon the teacher, and only rarely upon the rule of the school; in some Board schools in other parts they may not be taught, I am told.

Passing from the Moral Law to the Gospel, my experience goes to show that Board School "Scripture Education" is frequently, if not usually, so extremely limited that it can hardly be said to include either the truths or the historic facts that are the essential elements of the Gospel of Christ.

If Sunday School teachers will teach these, they will generally find that Board-school scholars have something left to learn.

Another educational evil is, I fear, growing among us. The Sunday-schools are in too many cases less effective than they used to be in teaching the facts and words of Scripture.

Vast numbers of our scholars in day and Sunday-schools are growing up with very little acquaintance with Bible truths. What will the result be?—Yours sincerely, E. Seeley.

Y.M.C.A. SMOKING ROOMS.

Sir,—I trust that the question of providing smoking rooms in connection with the Y.M.C.A. will speedily be decided in the negative. I think that it will be most generally agreed that smoking, if it be a luxury, is a most expensive one; that its cost lessens the means of helping every good cause; that it is needless, and, when habitual, most injurious. It is now seventy years since a young man, a devoted Christian, who offered me his friendship, said, "If you wish to be my companion never let me see you with a pipe in your mouth." Of course he meant a cigar too. I took him at his word, and now, at more than eighty years of age, I feel truly thankful that I have never smoked at all, and am in excellent health.

REQUESTS FOR PRAYER.—For blessing on a mission in St. Saviour's, Fitzroy-square, Feb. 9-19, to be conducted by Rev. J. O. West.—For blessing on special services from Feb. 3 to 10, at Duckpool-road Chapel, Newport, Mon.—For a mission being held by Mr. Monro Collings in Corn Hall, Fakenham.—For blessing on Gospel meetings by Gipsy Smith, at Conference Hall, Eccleston-street, S.W., Feb. 10 to 17.—For a special mission at Wootton, near Canterbury, by Messrs. P. R. Hurditch and F. Hutchins, Feb. 9 to 18.—For a mission in Belfast, commencing Feb. 10, conducted by Mr. James Wharton.—For a mission at the Primitive Methodist Chapel, Nancledra, Cornwall.

A CHOICE PICTURE.—Seldom has a more beautiful or effective picture been presented to the lover of modern Christian art than The Resurrection Morn, by Herbert Schmalz, now on view at 160, New Bond-street, W. Not only is the subject one which endears itself to the follower of our Lord, but the execution itself is an inspiration. The look of tearful surprise, mingled with fear, of the faithful women, who find the tomb guarded by kindly-faced angels, is depicted with infinite delicacy, especially, perhaps, in the countenance of Mary Magdalen, the character of whose former life adds special force to her anxious wonder. This is only one feature of many. We have not space to describe the picture in the rich fulness of its varied detail, but we heartily commend it to the attention and personal inspection of our readers.

UNIVERSITY NOTES.

[FROM OUR OWN CORRESPONDENT.]

CAMBRIDGE.

THE University sermon on Sunday was preached by Bishop Barry, who in closing paid touching tribute to the memory of the late Professor Cayley.

Principal Handley Moule commenced a course of sermons in Holy Trinity Church on Sunday evening last, his subject being "The New Covenant."

The speaker at the weekly meeting of the Church Mission Union on Friday last was Mr. Eugene Stock, who has also addressed several meetings held in different men's rooms in College.

The annual meeting of the Cambridge British and Foreign Bible Society was held on Monday afternoon in the hall of St. Catherine's College. Addresses were given by Bishop Barry and Professor Macalister. Rev. Professor Lumby presided.

The annual meetings of the Cambridge Branch of the Society for Missions to Seamen were held on Monday, January 28. The afternoon meeting was held in the Henry Martyn Hall, and was presided over by the Master of Corpus, supported by many of the professors and masters. The evening one was held in the Guildhall, when Mr. Penrose Fitzgerald took the chair, Sir Robert Ball, Professor Stokes, and others being present.

Rev. A. J. Harrison, the lecturer of Christian Evidence, met with a very hearty reception on Sunday evening, his first address being listened to with rapt attention by upwards of a thousand members of the University and others. The lecturer afterwards answered questions put to him by his hearers. He is holding meetings every evening this week except Friday, and it is hoped that they will be used by God for the strengthening of many men's faith.

THE Y.W.C.A.

THE annual meeting of the Carlisle Y.W.C.A. was held on Thursday evening last in the large hall of the Y.M.C.A. Mr. W. A. Boyd, of Dublin, addressed the meeting. There was a very large attendance of members and friends.

In connection with the pledge-signing crusade, secretaries are asked to give as much prominence as possible to the subject of total abstinence at all their meetings during February. Special meetings are being arranged at a number of centres. Mrs. Hind Smith, hon. secretary of the total abstinence department, will be grateful for the co-operation of all secretaries, workers and members.

The committee of the Blackburn Association are praising God for much blessing granted during a mission held from Jan. 13 to 23, by Miss Hanbury and Miss F. Jackson, of Richmond, Surrey. Ladies' meetings were held in the afternoon, and largely-attended meetings in the evenings, at which nearly 100 women and girls professed to find Christ as their Saviour. Christians also were greatly blessed.

The Y.W.C.A. monthly letter for February contains some helpful thoughts by Miss Ethel R. Boddy on Isaiah xli. 10. "What a beautiful thought, that God will indeed hold our hand through life! And yet the promise is for each one of his children." The thought is then worked out that if God holds our hand we shall not want for strength, keeping, help, companionship, safety, rest, communion, and guidance.

The work at Princess House, 106 and 108, Brompton-road, is just now encouraging. It was felt to be a serious loss when Miss Bethune and Miss Collins decided to go out to the home in Calcutta, but an excellent worker has been found in Miss Pavey, and the members are heartily rallying to her support. A considerable loss of funds involved in Miss Bethune's leaving has been made up, the membership is increasing, and there are many evidences of blessing. At the same time tidings are to hand of a hearty welcome having greeted Miss Bethune and Miss Collins at Calcutta. Princess House has been quite a recruiting ground for Foreign Mission volunteers.

A meeting of heads of Y.W.C.A. departments was held last week by invitation of Miss Morley, at 47, Grosvenor-street. The Hon. E. Kinnaird explained a plan for reporting the departments to the council. Miss C. Hope urged that more interest should be taken in the question of emigration by Y.W.C.A. secretaries. Many girls go unprotected to the colonies when they might go with an emigrant party in charge of a matron. Lectures or descriptive talks about our colonies are desirable. Miss Ballard stated that the "Loving Service League" is nearly able to support a mission station at Jaunpore. Miss Dashwood reported that the Nurses' Union (consisting of hospital nurses) is endeavouring to raise £10 annually to support a native nurse in India. Other interesting topics were discussed at the meeting and during the tea which followed.

THE Y.M.C.A.

THE Shrewsbury Y.M.C.A., which has just issued its annual report, has a membership of ninety.

The East Grinstead Association is in the midst of negotiations for new premises. Mr. Gatty has been elected president.

Captain Tottenham closed on Feb. 3rd a successful special mission to young men under the auspices of the Leicester Y.M.C.A.

A social reunion of old and new members was held in the Bury Y.M.C.A. on Tuesday evening, January 29. There was a large gathering of members and friends.

The committee of the Cork Y.M.C.A. have invited Mr. W. A. Boyd, gen. sec. of the Dublin Y.M.C.A., to fill the vacancy in the secretaryship of Cork.

The Association recently organised at Omagh, has had a good increase in membership consequent upon entering their new rooms, and a library is now being started by the society.

As the result of a special canvass, £465 of the £650 required to clear off the debt on the Cork Y.M.C.A. new building has been promised on condition that the entire amount is raised.

Mr. W. H. Omura, the Japanese merchant from Tokio, is lecturing on "Japan and the Japanese," at the following Irish Y.M.C.A.'s: Kingstown, Cork, Dublin, Belfast, and Coleraine.

The Bishop of Sodor and Man is announced to deliver an address at the Central Young Men's Christian Association, Exeter Hall, on February 16th, at 8 o'clock, on "Protestantism."

Mr. R. McCann, the travelling secretary of the Irish Union of Y.M.C.A.'s, will visit Tralee, Kiloylin, and Listowell in co. Kerry, also Limerick, Waterford, New Ross, Ballina, Athlone, and Dublin during the month of February.

The Hackney Y.M.C.A. is doing an excellent all-round work under the direction of Mr. F. L. Porter, gen. sec., and renders much valuable service in its spiritual department. On January 31st there was a public meeting at the Association in connection with the pledge-signing crusade.

The annual meeting was held at the Y.M.C.A. Rooms, Ventnor, on Monday, January 28. The president, Mr. Hackley Bacon, was re-elected. It was resolved to devote Tuesday evenings to religious and spiritual work, and Thursday evenings to social and general subjects. Addresses were given by the Revs. Hall, Shaw, Basset Kerry, Osborn, Mr. Jacobs, of Ryde, and the secretary.

The annual social meeting of the Manchester Y.M.C.A. has been held, when some 3000 members and friends crowded the building. The special speakers were the Bishop of Manchester, Rev. Charles Moinet (Presbyterian), Rev. Dr. Goodrich (Congregational), Rev. Arnold Streuli (Baptist). The president, Mr. W. J. Crossley, occupied the chair. The sec., Mr. W. H. Newett, reported that 837 new members and associates joined last year.

The Wakefield Association has great cause for thankfulness for the way in which God has owned and blessed their work amongst young men, especially. On Jan. 22nd Mr. Oatts, of Glasgow, gave an address in the rooms of the Association, since when four young men from one warehouse have accepted the Lord Jesus as their Saviour. For some time a great awakening has been taking place amongst the associates, many of them being transferred to membership.

The annual meeting of the Ipswich Association was held on Tuesday night and passed off very successfully; the general secretary, Mr. Alfred Lambert, having an excellent report to present, of work both in the town and in the surrounding district. Canon Garrett occupied the chair, and Mr. W. H. Mills, secretary of the National Council, attended as a deputation, and delivered an address on "Y.M.C.A. Work in Many Lands." There was a good attendance of members and friends.

A fortnight's evangelistic services have been held by Mr. W. D. Dunn, in the hall of the Edinburgh Association. Most blessing was apparent among the Christians, many of whom were led to renewed consecration. Some also have found the Saviour for the first time. The mission was brought to a close by a conference in St. Paul's Established Church, the principal speakers being Mr. Dunn, Mr. Ferrie, of Glasgow, Rev. John Robertson, Glasgow, Rev. Lancelot Holland, Edinburgh, and Rev. Thomas Miller, the earnest pastor of St. Paul's.

The Leeds Y.M.C.A. reports a considerably increased financial deficiency. At the beginning of 1894 the deficiency was £145; at the end of the year it was £327. The committee appeal for increased support. During the past year a great variety of work has been done. The young men's Sunday Bible class has been well attended, and started the new year with a membership of 175. The Cyclists' Mission Corps is a new feature, and has a membership of about a score. The distribution of tracts, and other religious work, forms part of the duty of these cyclists. With a view to interesting the members in missionary work, what is termed a Missionary Parliament has been formed. About thirty youths attend it. The training classes for Christian workers and services for girls have been much appreciated.

Friday last was a busy day with the representatives on the National Council, many of whom, despite the severity of the weather, journeyed considerable distances to Exeter Hall, in order to attend the monthly meetings of that body. Gratifying reports were presented by the travelling secretaries of the work in various parts of the country. An interesting discussion, arising out of a kind and sympathetic letter from the Bishop of Carlisle, took place upon the subject of the relation of Y.M.C.A. to the churches in regard to the conduct of general missions; and the executive took occasion to re-emphasise the fact that from the commencement it has been a principal endeavour of the association to carry on every department of its work in the fullest possible co-operation with all the churches of Christ. The question of the appointment of a young man's evangelist for work amongst the Associations was also considered and was referred to a committee for further consideration. Subject to the consent of local Y.M.C.A.'s, it was agreed that each member of the Commercial Travellers' Christian Association, should, on production of his card of membership, be entitled, by courtesy, to the use of reading rooms and other advantages offered by Y.M.C.A.'s in places visited en route.

CHRISTIAN ENDEAVOUR.

IN Weybridge a vigorous senior society has been started.

The sixth anniversary of the Argyle society, Swansea, proved full of life and enthusiasm.

Two Sunday-schools in Pembroke, Presbyterian and Congregational, have combined in forming a C.E. Society.

The first anniversary meeting of the High-street society, Deptford, was held on Tuesday, January 29, with much spirit.

There are affiliated to the Leeds Union thirty-two societies, with a membership of over 2,500, a gain of fourteen societies, and about 700 or 800 members, as compared with the preceding year.

"Endeavour Day" was very generally observed on Saturday (Feb. 2) by the Endeavourers all over the land, and many special meetings were held. In the United States, according to our exchanges, great preparations were being made to celebrate "Endeavour Day."

Dr. F. E. Clark, in his first letter, on his return to Boston, says:—"The new year-book and almanac is an invaluable publication, it seems to me, for every Christian Endeavourer, and the charming Christian Endeavour Day exercise will, I hope, be used by millions. Everyone that uses it will see 'the good of it' at once; and our missionary treasuries, and our churches, as well as our Endeavour societies, I believe, in all denominations, will feel 'the good of it' in all the months to come."

IRISH NOTES.

THE Baptist Church in Ireland continues to prosper, and baptisms have recently taken place at Lurgan, Tandragee, Tubbermore, Lisnagleer, Belfast, and Dublin.

At a meeting held in Belfast last week, under the presidency of Bishop Welland, in aid of church extension in the city, the sum of £6000 was promised to the project. At least £4000 is needed.

During the past year, the sum of over £2000 was subscribed in this country towards the funds of the Irish Church Missions to Roman Catholics, and of this amount over £300 was for special missions, chiefly those of the Dublin University Mission to Chota Nagpore.

The manner in which Protestantism in the South of Ireland is decreasing, mainly through emigration, can be inferred from the fact that in the parish of Killarney, according to the rector, Archdeacon Wynne, there was in 1889 a total church population of 268 persons, while last year there were in same parish only 178 church people, or a decrease of over 66 per cent. in five years.

THE ABERTILLERY CHRISTIAN MISSION, carried on by Mr. B. G. Barker, has been the means of rescuing many bad characters and others. The report states that there are now about forty members, most of whom are the fruits of work since the Mission started. A small branch is open at Brynmawr. Various well-known Christians speak warmly of the usefulness of this Mission. The secretary is Mr. Henry Hall, Abertillery, Mon.

EVANGELISTIC NOTES.

Mr. Moody has left Northfield for Texas, where he will conduct a series of revival services during the winter.

Ireland.—A successful series of Gospel services has been conducted by Mrs. Amanda Smith in East Wall Methodist Church, Londonderry.

Dr. L. W. Munhall has closed a blessed work in Jersey City, and begun a campaign in Iowa City. The Lord is honouring his servant's testimony as never before.

Mr. Henry Smith, late of the London Evangelisation Society, has concluded a three weeks' mission in the Wesleyan Chapel at North Seaton, which has been attended with good results.

Mrs. Horton and Miss Parker are conducting services at Sandy, in connection with the Baptist Church in that town and the Primitive Methodists at Girtford. Large congregations have assembled nightly. Many have professed to come out of darkness into light.

Rev. R. Balgarnie closed on Sunday a nine days' mission at Sutton, Surrey, Rev. J. Jones, pastor. The seventeen services held have been fruitful in spiritual blessing to many. On one of the evenings a free tea was given to the poor, who afterwards remained to the meeting. Mr. Balgarnie begins a mission at Huddersfield on February 9.

Mr. Henry Thorne began his second month at the Edinburgh Castle on Sunday last. In spite of the severe weather large numbers came to hear the "old old story," and many were dealt with in the inquiry rooms. Much interest is manifested in the series of addresses Mr. Thorne is giving on Thursday evenings on the Pilgrim's Progress. S. E. B.

Mr. Charles Inglis has been greatly owned of God in services held during the last week at Bethany Hall, Caterham Valley, in connection with Mr. Fegan's evangelistic work. Notwithstanding very severe and inclement weather, many people attended the services, numbers were brought to a saving knowledge of the Lord Jesus Christ, and believers were greatly strengthened and refreshed. G. C.

Mr. James Wharton has concluded a fourteen days' special mission at the Gospel Hall, Boaler-street, Liverpool. Much blessing has been the result, there being many striking cases of conversion. He has now proceeded to Belfast for a special mission there. Prayer is asked for him, that God may be pleased to bless him very abundantly, and that he may save many more precious souls for his hire.—G.

Stockwell Orphanage.—Mr. Newton Jones, of the Sunday School Union, held a mission amongst the orphan children from January 26 to 31, attended with most gratifying results. Many voluntarily stayed to the after-meetings for prayer and counsel with their teachers. A large number decided for the Saviour. On the Thursday, Madame Annie Ryall sang the Gospel very sweetly, and this largely helped to deepen the impression already made.

Mr. Matthew Burnett concluded a mission in Horsham, Sussex, on Sunday evening. The mission was held under the auspices of all the churches in the town, representative ministers being present at most of the meetings. There have been remarkable cases of conversion, and many signed the pledge. The mission altogether was a great success. Mr. Burnett is conducting this week a United Gospel Temperance Mission at Kettering, Northamptonshire, for which he asks prayer.

Surrey Chapel.—Since the New Year came in, there have been showers of blessing upon the work at Surrey Chapel. Beginning with the watch-night service, at which twenty men and women professedly gave themselves to God, the converting power of the Divine Spirit has continued to be manifested. Rev. J. Tolefree Parr, the pastor, has concluded a twelve days' mission, in which nearly forty men and women have sought Divine mercy. A midnight-service was held during the mission, and was a most impressive one.

Leicester.—Commencing on Sunday, January 27, and concluding on Sunday, February 3, Captain Tottenham, of London, conducted a special mission to young men in the rooms of the Y.M.C.A. The attendance on the whole has been very satisfactory. Captain Tottenham's earnest addresses were listened to with close attention, and it is confidently expected that much fruit will be the result of the special effort. Each afternoon during the mission the Captain gave Bible readings to Christian workers.

Rev. E. P. Hammond has had a stirring mission in Chatham, Ontario. According to The Weekly Planet, the mission was made memorable by the great gatherings and the numerous conversions. The editor says: "The revival rolls grandly along. Last night was another special children's meeting. It was marked by deeply fervent exercises, in which the whole vast audience was profoundly stirred. Several noteworthy religious experiences were given during the services, and many signified their desire to start on the better way."

Mr. H. Bray, of the Evangelisation Society, has been holding a three weeks' Gospel mission at the Free Methodist Chapel, Downton, from January 6 to 27. These services have given the greatest satisfaction. Many have decided for Christ, principally amongst young people apparently. The good seed has been sown, and we shall yet see more fruit. Mr. Bray visited Downton last autumn, with a tent, when he attracted large numbers, and the results were very gratifying. Many were led to Christ, and are to-day members of Christian churches.

Mr. Newton Jones at Portsmouth.—In connection with the Portsmouth Sunday School Union, Mr. Jones has concluded a very successful series of evangelistic services. The meetings were held in the school attached to Buckland Congregational Church, of which Rev. W. C. Talbot is pastor. Special meetings for prayer and consecration preceded the mission. The addresses of Mr. Jones were characterised by lucid presentation of Gospel truths and intense earnestness, and naturalness of delivery. There were many inquirers, and much blessing resulted to young and old. Mr. Newton Jones has also visited Netherton with very encouraging results.

Boys' Home, Southwark.—There has been a real work of grace going on during the last few weeks, especially amongst the elder lads. On Sunday evening, January 20, there was a great sense of the Lord's presence, and it is believed many were born again in that solemn hour. The change in the lads' hearts has been evidenced in the general tone about the place, and the manifest blessing has caused much rejoicing before the Lord. Mr. Fegan has been living at the Home during the last six weeks, and although at times he has suffered much in body, he has been able to personally conduct the Sunday-evening services, and has found great joy in renewed service for the Master.

Church Parochial Mission Society.—The following missions, among others, have been arranged for February. It is hoped they will be made a subject of prayer:—Rev. W. Hay Aitken, Feb. 3—18, Christ Church, Worthing; Feb. 23—March 11, St. Matthew's, Hammersmith, W.—Rev. Preb. Askwith, March 9—19, Parish Church, Kentish Town, W.; Rev. J. S. Barrass, St. Paul's, Lisson-grove, N.W.; Rev. T. E. Cleworth, Feb. 9—19, St. Luke's, South Kensington, S.W.; Rev. J. P. Cushing, Feb. 16—26, St. James's, Fulham, S.W.; Rev. Canon Grant, Feb. 16—26, Parish Church Fulham, S.W.; Rev. A. J. Harrison, Feb. 3—8, Guildhall, Cambridge; Rev. J. H. Haslam, Feb. 9—19, St. Andrew's, Haverstock-hill, N.W.; Rev. P. Oakley Hill, Feb. 9—19, St. George's, Kensington, W.; Rev. Canon Honeyburne and Rev. J. F. Andrewes, Feb. 16—26, St. Thomas's, Shepherd's Bush, W.; Rev. E. H. Jones, Feb. 9—19, St. Philip's, Kensington; Rev. Canon Lester, Feb. 16—26, St. Luke's, Uxbridge-road, W.; Rev. T. J. Madden, Feb. 10—18, Thame, Oxford; Rev. J. Morris, M.D., Jan. 26—Feb. 11, Holy Trinity, Langley, Birmingham; Feb. 16—26, St. Mary's, Stamford Brook, Hammersmith; Rev. M. Foster Pegg, Feb. 3—13, St. Philip's, Kennington-road, Lambeth, S.E.; Rev. L. G. Peter, Feb. 16—26, St. Peter's, Hammersmith, W.; Rev. F. E. Rogers, Jan. 30—Feb. 5, St. George's, Oldham-road, Manchester; Feb. 9—19, St. Mark's, Notting-hill, W.; Rev. E. Bacheler Russell, Feb. 8—12, Throwley, Faversham; Rev. James Stephens, Feb. 2—15, Lonan, Isle of Man; 16—22, Lindale, Carlisle; Rev. F. S. Webster, Feb. 9—19, St. Paul's, Onslow-square, S.W.; Rev. J. O. West, St. Saviour's, Fitzroy-square, W.

PERSONALIA.

Dr. Williamson, of Belfast, has started for a three months' holiday tour in Palestine.

Mr. T. A. Denny and Lady Hope have left England for the months of February and March.

Pastor Archibald Brown, we grieve to learn, has been bereaved in the loss of his beloved wife, who died at Hastings on Tuesday morning.

Mrs. Grattan Guinness, sen., we are glad to learn, is enjoying fairly good health. The February issue of Regions Beyond states that Dr. Guinness is completing his new book "Creation Centred in Christ."

Mr. W. A. Smith, secretary of the Boys' Brigade, will sail from Liverpool on Saturday, Feb. 9, by the Servia, on a two months' visit to Canada. He will be the guest of Lord Aberdeen, hon. president of the Brigade.

Rev. M. Nachim, of the British Jews Society, is about to undertake work among Hebrews in East London. He will reorganise the mission hitherto conducted by Rev. E. O. C. Roeder, who is no longer connected with the society.

Rev. G. C. Grubb arrived at Alexandria on Thursday, Jan. 17. On the following Sunday he preached in All Saints' Church, Ramleh, to a crowded congregation. Rev. T. R. Lawrence, incumbent, who is also superintendent of the Sailors' and Soldiers' Institute, writes:—"I am so thankful to have Mr. Grubb here. We have prayed for him for months past."

Rev. Dr. Miller, Madras.—The Indian mail has brought intelligence of the illness of Dr. Miller in South India; and a telegram confirms the fear that "the doctors absolutely forbid" his attempting the exacting duties next May of the office of Moderator of the Free Church of Scotland's General Assembly. Dr. Miller had, with much hesitation, accepted his unanimous nomination, when recruiting at the station of Oerkand, on a favourite plateau of the Shivarai Hills. His return to the city of Madras to take part in the annual celebration, by his many native students, known as College Day, seems to have proved too much for his strength, after a generation of constant service of the highest kind to the people of South India. Freed from his numerous duties in the College and the University for a time, and again in the Shivarai Hills, Dr. Miller is expected to recover strength.

OBITUARY.

MR. GEORGE HEFFORD.

This earnest evangelist went into the presence of the King on Sunday last. That he was true to the good old Gospel is abundantly proved by his long connection with the Evangelisation Society and by his numerous small books and tracts. He was a regular contributor to a large number of Gospel magazines. Now the pen is laid down, and the voice so loved is used in higher service. F. H. D.

REV. H. S. B. YATES.

Many will hear with sorrow of the death, at the age of forty-one, of Mr. Yates, the editor of The Sunday School Chronicle. On Tuesday week, while at the offices of the Sunday School Union seeing his paper to press, he was seized with severe spasms of the heart. About noon he was removed to his residence at Ilford, accompanied by a friend, but on the way there he died. Mrs. Yates was absent when the body reached Ilford, and the sad news had to be broken to her on her return. Mr. Yates was a supernumerary Wesleyan minister, having entered the ministry in 1877. He served in various Scotch circuits, and also at Birmingham, and at the Old Town Mission in Hull. Though connected with the Chronicle for less than two years, he had succeeded in winning his way to the hearts of his wide circle of readers. His deep interest in the work of Sunday-schools, his tireless energy, his facility for work in various directions, his sincere faith in God, and his genial, warm heart, all combined to endear him to his great constituency. But to those who knew him personally, who were warmed by the glow of his enthusiasm, cheered by his ready smile, and his unselfish loyalty, to them the loss is one they cannot easily express.

REV. W. J. PATTON, DROMARA, CO. DOWN.

Very deep regret is felt by a wide circle of friends at the death of Rev. W. J. Patton, of Dromara, who has just passed away, aged sixty-six years. Deceased was a native of Donaghadee, and entered the ministry in 1852. Probably no minister in the Irish Presbyterian Church was more widely known or more sincerely loved. Ever about his Master's business, he won for himself a name which will not soon be forgotten. A thorough evangelist, there are few places of any importance in Ulster where he did not at some period or other conduct a Gospel mission, and in each of these he was instrumental in leading many souls to immediate decision for Christ. Indeed, his spiritual children are in all parts of the earth, and his ministry was pre-eminently a fruitful one. Not only, however, did he use his voice in the cause of God but also his pen, which was ever busy in the same direction. For twenty-eight consecutive years he issued at the beginning of each year a New Year's address, each of which was most popular with young and old, and had a wide circulation. He was also a contributor to some of the best-known magazines of the United Kingdom. He had been ill for some months, and his death was not therefore unexpected, but his end was peace.

MARTYRS' MEMORIAL HALL, DARTFORD.—The time has now arrived when it is absolutely necessary to make further additions to the building of the Dartford Young Men's Bible Class. We are unable to find accommodation for the Lads' Bible Class, the Sunday School, Juveniles' Mission, etc. Neither can we make any provision for the Lads' Institute on week-day evenings. It will be a source of much regret to all concerned if these branches of our work are to be brought to a standstill. To carry this object out it is estimated that a sum of £500 will be required; of this amount about £200 has already been promised. Recently this institution has suffered a very heavy loss in the death of Sir Arthur Blackwood, who laid the foundation-stone, was one of the trustees, and was the chief counsellor and adviser of the president in carrying on the work. We have decided to carry out this extension, and to place an organ in the large hall as a memorial to his memory. We appeal to all interested in Christian and Protestant work to help us in raising the £300 required to carry out the above objects. The freehold ground is already purchased, and we wish to commence building during this month.

J. Lawrence Mitchell.

Gayly House, Dartford.

TEMPERANCE NOTES.

Mr. Tom Horrocks has conducted a special mission in Crawley.

The Leytonstone Total Abstinence Union reports vigorous aggressive work.

A great pledge-signing demonstration has been held in Bermondsey Town Hall.

Mr. David A. Thomas is again about to introduce a bill into Parliament for the abolition of grocers' licences.

An interesting series of meetings, conducted by Mr. William Forbes, has been held in the New Temperance Hall, Croydon.

A vigorous pledge-signing crusade has been in progress in Waterford and in Agnes-street, Belfast. The results have been encouraging.

The Manchester and Salford Temperance Union reports good work during the year, there being in connection with the Union 66 affiliated societies.

A recent judgment of the Supreme Court of Canada decides that provincial governments cannot enact prohibitory legislation, but may pass local option bills.

Miss Alice Palmer, who recently passed through London on her way to America, reports satisfactory work already accomplished in South Africa, where the W.C.T.U. is well established, and the membership approaches to nearly 2000.

The Secretary of State for War, Mr. Campbell-Bannerman, recently expressed much interest in army temperance work to a deputation, and promised to consider whether a subscription to the Army Temperance Association could be included in the Estimates for the year.

Rev. C. Silvester Horne, of London, lecturing in St. Andrew's Hall, Glasgow, asked particularly why the licensing authorities, who say that Kelvinside and Hillhead are too respectable to have public-houses, do not put forth an effort to make the rest of the city respectable too.

The third biennial convention of the World's Woman's Christian Temperance Union is to be held in Queen's Hall, Langham-place, on Wednesday, June 19. By way of preparation, May 18 and 19 have been set apart, to be devoted all over the world to meetings for prayer, temperance mass meetings, or temperance sermons.

Dealing with progress, the Temperance Record makes a pointed remark that "the closing of gin-palaces and tap-rooms could not be called progress, if hotels and railway refreshment bars and clubs were left to supply all the demands. Progress in temperance reform is only to be measured by the extent to which the drinking of alcoholic liquor is reduced."

"The Law and the Liquor Trade" is announced as the subject of a meeting to be held under the auspices of the British Women's Temperance Association (Crouch End branch) and the Hornsey Licence Watch Committee, on Monday evening, February 11, at the National Hall, Hornsey, N. The speakers announced are, Mrs. K. J. Barney (of Rhode Island, U.S.A.), Dr. Napier, L.C.C., Rev. S. Buss (Vicar of Shoreditch), and Mr. A. W. Elliot (National Temperance League).

In connection with the pledge-signing campaign, further meetings have been held by the Women's Total Abstinence Union, with satisfactory results. At the Kensington Town Hall Mrs. Atherton presided, the speakers being Miss Richardson, Mr. J. H. Roberts, and Rev. C. E. T. Roberts. At the Hackney Town Hall, Mrs. W. S. Caine in the chair, the speakers were Mrs. Atherton, Messrs. A. W. Elliott and Raper, and Dr. Montagu Miller. At the Wheatsheaf Hall, Kennington, Miss Ashworth presided, the speakers being Mrs. Dixon and Dr. Corbett. At the Battersea Town Hall an enthusiastic meeting was addressed by Mrs. Atherton, Mrs. Servanté, and Major John Smith.

BARCELONA.—Miss Lawrence writes from Calle Mayor, 42, Caldas de Montbuy, Barcelona:—"Shortly after our father's decease, we were enabled to secure more suitable premises for our work than those we had formerly occupied. The number of our scholars rapidly increased, and we have now a flourishing day and night school. The Gospel services and Bible classes also continue to be well attended, and we believe the Lord is working in the hearts of many of our hearers. Recently we had the joy of seeing nine persons—the first fruits of our sowing here—confess Christ openly by being baptized into his name. Some of these are marvels of grace. Several whose constant haunt hitherto had been the tavern and gambling-den, now rejoice in Christ as their Saviour from sin, and their friends and neighbours marvel at the change in their lives. In households where discord and discontent reigned, songs of praise and the reading of God's Word are now constantly heard."

The Book World.

Children's Sermons, by Nathaniel Wiseman, is a volume of discourses that are models of their kind. Thirty in number, the sermons cover a wide field, and every page is brightened with some parable or narrative such as youthful minds can follow. (R. D. Dickinson.)

From the Exile to the Advent, by Rev. William Fairweather, M.A., is an addition to the very useful series of "Handbooks for Bible Classes and Private Students." A large amount of information has been admirably digested in the preparation of this volume. (2s. T. & T. Clark.)

Addison's Selected Essays is the latest addition to the "Christian Classics" series of Messrs. Bagster & Sons. (1s.) The little volume contains nearly thirty pieces, ethical and religious, also several hymns. There is a brief account of Addison's life, with notes on him by several distinguished authors.

The Lord's Supper: Its Meanings and Teachings. By George Clarke. (Marshall Brothers.) A helpful meditation on the Supper of our Lord. The writer illustrates his theme by allusions to the usages of the Jews in keeping the Passover. He earnestly contends against the Romish "doctrine of the Mass," and unfolds the true significance and lessons of the feast in a style likely to prove of real service to many young Christians.

How to Read the Prophets is the title of a series of volumes by Rev. Buchanan Blake, B.D. The fifth and concluding part is devoted to Isaiah xl.-xlvi. and the Post-Exilian Prophets. (4s. T. and T. Clark.) The treatment proceeds on "critical" lines, and the aim is to arrange the prophecies chronologically in their historical setting. There are also explanations and a glossary. Whatever his attitude to modern speculations may be, the student of Holy Scripture will find this series of real service.

Souvenir of Jubilee, edited by Rev. A. K. McMurchy. (Perth. D. Leslie.) The Jubilee of the Free Church was enthusiastically observed in Perth; and here, by way of memorial, is an account thereof. To the editor has occurred the happy thought of appending historical sketches of congregations and famous ministers in the Presbytery, and many of these contain facts of very great interest. All who have associations with the "Fair City" on the Tay will find this a delightful volume.

The Moral Conflict of Humanity, and other Papers. By A. C. Kendrick, D.D., LL.D. (4s. Baptist Tract & Book Society.) Here are sixteen very thoughtful essays on crucial points of New Testament study. The title paper is based on Romans vii. 7-25; others deal with "Baptism for the Dead," "Sin and Death in Adam and the Race," the "Renovation of Physical Nature at the Resurrection," and other topics of deep interest. Dr. Kendrick is very thorough; and we have read his book with keen pleasure and much profit.

Shireen and Her Friends: Pages from the Life of a Persian Cat, by Dr. Gordon Stables, is a very attractive work, illustrated by Harrison Weir. It is a companion to "Sable and White: The Autobiography of a Show Dog," by the same author and artist. Young and old will find diversion in its pages, in which some of the author's pets are described from the life, and their ways on sea and land exhibited in such a manner as to influence readers to show more consideration for the cat and other domestic animals. (3s. 6d. Jarrold & Sons.)

The Parchments of the Faith, by Rev. George E. Merrill, is a book from America, the contents of which will interest and instruct those who cannot read more erudite works on the original manuscripts and early versions of the sacred Scriptures. The descriptions are, on the whole, admirable, and there are some choice illustrations and facsimiles of venerable documents. In a second edition the author might, with other corrections, distinguish between Theodotian's Greek version of Daniel and the Codex Chisianus of the Septuagint (p. 93); also show that the Prayer Book Psalter is from the Great (or "Cromwell's") Bible, and not from the Douay version, as is erroneously stated (p. 118). (4s. 6d. Baptist Tract and Book Society.)

Sermons and Addresses on Temperance Subjects. By Canon Ellison. (5s. Wells Gardner, Darton & Co.) If a long life devoted to the service of Christ and active warfare against intemperance entitle any to speak with authority, surely the eloquent and earnest author of this work may claim so to be heard on a subject he has made peculiarly his own. Here we have a series of utterances, extending over thirty years, varying in occasion and theme, but all dealing with clearness and force with the ruin wrought by strong drink and the paramount necessity that Christians should unite in repulsing the common foe. The book is a worthy memorial of past service, and a powerful plea for present effort. Moreover, it abounds in suggestive facts and telling sayings, which temperance speakers will find singularly useful.

The Sacrament of Christian Baptism. By Rev. Wm. Bramley Moore, M.A. (G. J. N. Pitman, 140, Gower-street.) There is much in this pamphlet that deserves commendation. The truths connected with our Lord's Incarnation, with his life of obedience, with his death and resurrection, and with the relation of all these to our salvation, are Scripturally and forcibly stated. But in our judgment the author falls into serious mistake, and becomes a very unsafe leader when he deals with the ordinance of Baptism as the means by which union with Christ is effected. The term "sacrament," as applied to Baptism, is unsatisfactory. Where is it used in Scripture? Our author does not ignore faith. Indeed, he says, "all must acknowledge that faith is a necessary prerequisite to Baptism"; but he seeks to correct the mistake of those who, in teaching that our union with Christ is "a spiritual union," and "is effected by spiritual means," often "disparage all external ordinances." If any are guilty of this mistake, this pamphlet is guilty of going to the opposite extreme. The following are his words: "Unbaptised believers are catechumens, not Christians. Popular evangelists, who make faith the all-in-all . . . only bring their converts to the threshold of Christ's fold, and leave them there to spiritual starvation."

Some very helpful booklets are the Divine Gifts series by T. T. Wade. Six in number, they deal with faith, peace, comfort, and other blessings. (Sixpence per doz. assorted. S. A. Perren, 3, North-street, Bristol.)

In a most interesting and readable pamphlet one of the late Dr. Andrew Bonar's flock pays "A Loving Tribute" to his memory. Many hitherto unpublished incidents are recorded. (Charles Glass & Co., Glasgow.)

Two useful booklets by W. Mortlock, police-court missionary, are: The Christian Soldier, His Warfare and Victory; and Danger! Stop! Mind Where You are Going! (1d. each. The Author: 2, Denmark-terrace, Gloucester-road, Cheltenham.)

Dr. Norman Kerr has published as a pamphlet, with the title, Probationary Curative Detention of the Alleged Insane, a paper which he read to the Psychological Section of the British Medical Association last year. (John Bale & Sons, 87-89, Great Titchfield-street, W.)

The Work of the Lord Jesus and of his Apostles: A Missionary Example. By W. P. Mears, M.A., M.D., late of the Fuh-Kien Mission. Here are two very instructive papers, reprinted from The Church Missionary Intelligencer, showing that our Lord and his apostles combined healing with teaching. (C. M. S. House, Salisbury-square, E.C.)

DISTRESS IN HACKNEY.

Dear Sir,—We have, in consequence of the severe weather, great suffering and privation among the families of the poor of Clapton Park and Homerton. The Hackney Vestry and the Board of Guardians are endeavouring to grapple with a portion of the distress, but there is a large amount that is left for Christians to deal with. We have this week given 2700 free breakfasts to poor children, 1000 dinners to men, 1352 soup dinners to starving families, and helped the most pressing cases with coal and clothing. We ask the readers of The Christian to repeat their kindness as of previous years.—Yours faithfully,

Thomas Jackson.

RULES FOR DAILY LIFE.

1. Never begin the day without prayer.
2. Learn to accept everything as permitted by God.
3. Seek to learn the needed lesson in each disappointment ("his appointment").
4. Never look at others, but be ever "looking unto Jesus."
5. Cultivate the habit of living your life alone with God.
6. Whenever the devil tempts, get down on your knees as soon as possible, and wait upon God.
7. Accustom yourself to take everything to God.
8. Never lose time in idle self-pitying, or excusing yourself, when God waits to show you it is you who are wrong.
9. Be earnest, sincere, faithful, and true at all costs.
10. Let Christ live out his life in you at all times and under all circumstances. Amen.

The promise of God:
"My grace is sufficient for thee."
"The Lord reigneth." A. M. A.

Missionaries on Furlough.—Mrs. Osborn-Howe writes:—I direct the attention of missionaries on furlough to the comfortable house, 16, Upper Hamilton-terrace, Maida Vale, opened for the reception of missionaries arriving from abroad, or those visiting London for short periods. During my visits there from time to time I have much appreciated the quiet and spiritual tone of the house, and also the kindly attention given to visitors.

"READY," the organ of the Portsmouth Soldiers' Institute, is now edited by Miss Robinson, who, though laid aside from active work, will, it is hoped, perform a blessed ministry through its pages. The February issue reports the progress of Institute work, and contains a number of stimulating items in prose and poetry. The "Yarns," are a feature which soldiers and sailors are sure to read. (1d. monthly. Soldiers' Institute, Portsmouth.)

GATHERED GOLD.

I would be quiet, Lord,
Nor tease nor fret;
Not one small need of mine
Wilt Thou forget.
—Julia C. R. Dorr.

The only disturber of men, of families, cities, kingdoms, worlds, is sin. There is no such traitor to any state as the wilfully wicked man; no such enemy to the public as the enemy of God.—Wogan.

Lord, for the erring thought
Not into evil wrought;
Lord, for the wicked will
Betrayed and baffled still;
For the heart from itself kept,
Our thanksgiving accept.
—W. D. Howells.

We must be childlike enough to trust our Father . . . . as well with his refusals as with his gifts, his silence as his speech. What need to scrutinise or understand his ways? It suffices that they are his, and we are sure that all is well; that love is there, and the fruits of love not far away.—E. F. Russell.

HOLD FAST!

Cling fast to the hand that is leading you, though it be in darkness, though it be in deep waters—you know whom you have believed. Yield not for a single moment to misgivings about future storms. Infinite love, joined to infinite skill, shall pilot the way through every strait and temptation.—T. Alexander.

How sweet communion is with saints,
For soul can soul inspire;
The brand that soon goes out alone,
With others makes a fire:
So 'tis our Father's will that we Should Heavenward march in company.
—John Dickie of Irvine.

KEEP CLOSE TO GOD.

Keep close to God, and then you need fear nothing. Take time for duties in private. Crowd not religion into a corner of the day. There is a Dutch proverb—"Nobody will get by thieving, or lose by praying." Spend no time in forehand contrivances for this world; they never succeed.—John Eliot (the Apostle of the Indians).

CHRISTIAN CONFIDENCE.

We have not to mourn as they that have no hope; nor to be cast down towards the earth as they that have not a heaven to look up to; nor to be as they who have a servile yoke upon the neck: but rather as they that bear the cross after Christ, and are able to fix their eyes upon Him going before, and thus by the love of Him constraining them, have ever in tribulation a joy of which the world knoweth not.—Isaac Williams.

DIVINE TRUTH.

Not more necessary are constant supplies of water to the growth of vegetation in the sultry regions of the East, than the influence of Divine truth to the existence of human happiness. If a tree, planted by the margin of a refreshing river, is proof against the heat of the sun, or the unfavourableness of seasons, he, also, who into a well-prepared heart receives continual infusions of religious wisdom, is flourishing and happy amidst all the inconveniences of life.—Bishop Jebb.

RESIGNATION EXEMPLIFIED.

The famous Oriental philosopher, Lokman, while a slave, being presented by his master with a bitter melon, immediately ate it all. "How was it possible," said his master, "for you to eat so nauseous a fruit?" Lokman replied, "I have received so many favours from you it is no wonder I should, for once in my life, eat a bitter melon from your hand." This generous answer of the slave struck the master so forcibly that he immediately gave him his liberty. With such sentiments should man receive his portion of suffering at the hand of God. —Bishop Horne.

NOON PRAYER MEETINGS.—One subject of the Christian Workers' Convention last October at Rochester, N.Y., was the Fulton-street Daily Noon Prayer Meeting. A sketch of the history, methods, and future purposes of Fulton-street Prayer Meeting was given to different audiences during the convention, and also some illustrations of the Holy Spirit's power as manifested in those devotional services to the up-building of soul life throughout Christendom. Monday, January 14, saw the beginning of Noonday Prayer meetings in the city of Rochester, near the business centre of the city; twenty persons were present. Word has come from Denver, Colorado, that there, too, has been begun one of these holy conventions. C. F. Cutter.

One of the oldest and best known clergyman of the West has just passed away in the person of the Rev. Reginald Hobhouse, fifty years vicar of St. Ive, and seventeen years Archdeacon of Bodmin. The work at Highgate-road is reported on as in healthy and vigorous condition, the hand of the Lord being evidently with the pastor, Mr. James Stephens. The present membership is 679. It is in every sense of the word a real missionary church, helping actively in missions at home and among the heathen. The branch mission at Fortess-road, Kentish Town, is being much blessed among the poor.

The first annual meeting since the settlement of Mr. Wm. Lawrence Tweedie, of the Pastors' College, was held at King-street, Cork, on Wednesday week. After a few remarks by the pastor, the secretary read an encouraging report, special mention being made of the Christian Endeavour Society and the Young Men's Weekly Ship-visiting Band, both of which give evidence of good work attempted and done for the Master. THE SALVATION ARMY.

Mr. Ballington Booth, of New York, has recovered from his recent severe illness.

A new rescue home is about to be opened in Western Australia by the express wish of several influential friends of the Army, who have promised to subscribe towards its support.

One of the leading magistrates of Edinburgh has written Mrs. Bramwell Booth, requesting that a Salvation Army officer shall be appointed for police-court work there, to meet the women coming out of jail and deal with them in accordance with S.A. methods.

General Booth is still in Canada. His last meeting in the States was at Seattle, where his reception equalled, if not surpassed, any which had gone before. Thousands of people welcomed his arrival. The route of the procession was illuminated with electric lamps, and the mayor, on behalf of the citizens and municipal authorities, gave a kindly and sympathetic address of introduction in the open air. Meetings were held in the Armoury and the Rev. Clark Davis's church.

MR. RICHARD WEAVER AT WOOLWICH.

Mr. Weaver concluded a fortnight's mission at Woolwich on Friday, February 1. The Sunday evening congregations in the Drill Hall were between 2500 and 3000, and during the week nights Parson's Hill Chapel was well filled. Considering the weather the attendance was remarkable, and numbers, mostly men, have professed a desire to serve the Saviour. At one of the meetings Mr. Weaver asked for a collection on behalf of the widows and orphans of the entombed colliers, £9 10s. 4d. was contributed by the church at Parson's Hill; the Mission at Beckton sent £1 3s.; Joseph-street £1; one of the members collected 14s. 9d. from the wheelwrights' shop, and two others collected from the Torpedo Factory £3 10s. 11d., making £16 in all, which has been sent to the Lord Mayor for transmission to the bereaved families. Many who were brought to Christ through Mr. Weaver's ministry twelve months ago were amongst the most earnest workers in the present mission. We have had seasons of refreshing from the presence of the Lord.

CONSUMPTION, AND ALL CHEST DISEASES.

INTERVIEWS WITH OLD PATIENTS, AND NEW CASES.

By MR. CONGREVE'S COMMISSIONER.

EIGHTY-THIRD INTERVIEW,

With Mrs. HARTLEY, Wife of Rev. J. G. Hartley, 2, Albert-street, Shrewsbury.

CASE OF CONSUMPTION FOLLOWING PLEURISY.

Which has not been published before.

Mrs. Hartley's illness dates back to about ten years ago, at which time she took a severe cold at a meeting. Pleurisy followed this, and the lungs became diseased. She had all the symptoms of Consumption—too well known to need recapitulating—and the verdict of the medical man who attended her was that tubercles were forming. Although a long time under local treatment, she received little benefit; the cough and pain still continued; and as she herself admits, her condition, when she first applied to Mr. Congreve, was a very serious one indeed.

I asked Mrs. Hartley what was the result of the treatment prescribed for her by Mr. Congreve, and she replied:

"I soon found benefit, and gradually got well. Still I am never without the medicine, and often take it if I have the slightest touch of cold."

In a letter of Mr. Hartley's, which I had in my possession, was a remark to the effect that it had probably added many years to his wife's life, and I asked Mrs. Hartley whether she agreed with that.

"Yes," was the reply. "When I was ill I told my husband that if anything would do me good it was Mr. Congreve's medicine, of which I had heard so much, and so the result has proved. I ought to add that I have been thoroughly examined since, and the doctor's report was that my lungs were now quite sound."

In course of conversation—after according me full permission to publish this Interview—Mrs. Hartley told me that she had written for medicine for many persons, who had been benefited by its use, and also gave me some particulars of a case at Barrow-in-Furness, where the patient's recovery was little short of marvellous.

The Rev. J. G. Hartley was present, and added his testimony to the efficacy of Mr. Congreve's remedies. He too had known of many cases where great benefit had been derived.

MR. G. T. CONGREVE'S work on CONSUMPTION, &c., in which are detailed THE CAUSES, SYMPTOMS, PROGRESS, AND SUCCESSFUL TREATMENT OF THIS SCOURGE OF ENGLAND.—WITH NEARLY FOUR HUNDRED CASES OF CURE. ALSO ON COUGH, ASTHMA, BRONCHITIS, &c., &c. The Book will be sent, post free, for ONE SHILLING by the Author, Coombe Lodge, Peckham, London, S.E.

Notes and Comments.

☞ When the meetings for Thanksgiving and Prayer were held (by kind permission of Mr. Charrington) in the Great Assembly Hall last April, the hope was expressed by many that they would be repeated. This desire has been frequently reiterated during the intervening months. We make this early announcement, therefore, that in all probability similar meetings for Thanksgiving for the mercies of the past year, and Prayer for a great Revival of the work of God, will be held (God willing) in the beginning of April. Some friends have urged that they should extend over two or three days. This is under consideration. More definite information will be given next week.

Miss Macpherson said, in a letter to a friend last week :—

I wonder whether you have ever felt that the time has come when our East-end missions would be greatly blessed by another gathering something like the Thanksgiving held in April, 1894. God seemed to be very precious, and came with the enlarging powers of the Holy Ghost.

Doubtless this gives expression to the desire of many earnest Christians in and beyond the East of London.

The determination to appoint a Government committee to inquire into the problem of the unemployed has caused considerable gratification in many quarters; the practical advantages to the unemployed—and that is the main point—will, we fear, be doubtful, and very long delayed. The patient is dying while the doctors examine into the nature and causes of his complaint. That one district of London alone, West Ham, should have as many as 10,000 unemployed—and this has been proved by a painstaking census, taken by capable and reliable persons—is a fact full of terrible suggestion of hardship and misery. How many wives, mothers, and children suffer in these sufferings of the men? To a kind-hearted man the sharpest thorn in his lot is, that his wife and children cannot have such food and clothing as he would like to give them. Meanwhile, how do these idle men and those dependent on them manage to live? For the workhouses could not contain them if they applied for admission, and they do not apply. The problem is solved, as a worker among the poor said to ourselves, by the poor aiding the poor. The man in work helps the man out of work. The spirit of comradeship, if nothing deeper, prompts the unselfish deed.

The continuance of this Arctic weather all over Europe is causing a great amount of distress. Two hundred thousand men connected with the building trade alone, in London only, are thrown out of work; indeed, we have a temporary paralysis of a great industry all over the country. Some small compensation, of course, comes in the revival of certain other industries, but the present stoppage is a national calamity. To our other troubles are to be added the number of deaths from the severe frost. One is forcibly reminded of the question, "Who can stand before his cold?" With all our scientific conquests, we are very dependent on the elements being propitious; in other words, "God is He in whose hands our breath is." The appeal of these hard days and bitter nights is to everyone to think on his poor neighbour.

The Paris correspondent of The Standard draws an extremely dark picture of the social and religious condition of that city. He is of opinion that moral degradation and wickedness have greatly increased during the last fourteen years. Drinking habits are growing worse; the proportion of divorces to married couples is one in sixty-four; suicide is the last resort of people who have known better days; thousands of hopeless citizens are arming themselves against society; a large proportion of the million and a-half sterling voted for poor relief goes into the pockets of poor law officials; the army and the railway services are honeycombed with Anarchism. If all these things are so, are there no counterbalancing facts of a different kind? What about the effect of the wider diffusion of the Gospel in France?

Latest information bears out to the full what was said months ago by American missionaries, that there is an Armenian revolutionary party which is deliberately seeking to stir up the bigotry and violence of the Turks to commit the worst of outrages, in order that European sympathy may be evoked and Turkish domination broken. These men themselves commit barbarities in the hope of provoking retaliation. Such a policy can never succeed. The news now coming may aid in turning the tide of sympathy. Not that the Armenians have no just ground of complaint, for their ordinary life is one prolonged misery; but the apathy of men will find in this revolutionary policy an argument for doing nothing, and an extenuation of wrong-doing. To suffer for well-doing surely brings relief; to retaliate causes delay.

For half a century after white men had made acquaintance with the fierce and murderous disposition of the Samoans, the island of Samoa was left to itself. Traders shunned it. Yet within twenty-eight years of the landing of the missionaries the islanders were importing goods from England, Australia, and America valued at £35,000 per annum—not a bad market for so small a community. How many more markets have missionaries created for the trader? The mere money return that England has had from her missions has more than compensated for the outlay on them. Were traders wise they would send liberal contributions to missionary societies, and do their utmost to prevent the sale of intoxicants and of gunpowder and deadly weapons. It is evident in what direction their advantage lies.

Miss Ida B. Wells continues, in a new pamphlet, "A Red Record," her terrible indictment against the United States for brutal treatment of the negro. She alleges that in thirty years 10,000 negroes have been done to death without any trial; only three white men have been executed for these murders. In 1894 132 men were executed according to law, but 197 negroes were lynched. In the time of the war white families, women and children, were left with perfect safety in the charge of negroes; yet now the shameful charge is always made against them of outrages perpetrated on white women. White female missionaries and teachers have for thirty years gone about among the coloured people, teaching them and their children, yet not one has suffered. It is impossible to avoid the conclusion that the negroes have proved good citizens in the main, and that this wicked treatment of them is due to the hatred which is always felt by wrong-doers against those whom they have wronged. The bitter contempt of generations is finding vent for itself. But America cannot afford to let this lawless violence proceed: it means the dissolution of society. Every negro lynched is an attack on the life of the country.

The Times has given prominence to a letter from Mr. Kenelm Vaughan, who has travelled much in Madagascar, against the war which France is just opening with that country. He deems it unjust and cruel, and likely to be most disastrous in its consequences to the cause of Christian civilisation. He contends that the Malagasy have never sanctioned annexation, nor given the French any ground of complaint. "The light of the Gospel is spreading far and wide its healing influence, dissipating the Pagan darkness which once covered like a black pall the fair island of Madagascar." The Manchester Guardian is indignant at this "shameful quarrel," and at the Englishmen "who, for a price, are willing to help a great Power to overwhelm the brave little people to whom Englishmen of another stamp have played the part of friends and elder brothers."

At the quarterly meeting of the Society of Friends at York, where a discussion was held on "Are the Churches in touch with the people?" there was some plain speaking on the causes which keep persons away from the Churches of Christ. Mr. Edward Grubb, whose speech is said to have made a great impression, averred that in many cases, "Some of the most slippery customers, some of the hardest and meanest employers, some of the most selfish workmen, were men who were making the loudest professions of personal salvation, and were high in posts of honour in the Churches to which they belonged." The Churches dare not repudiate them because of their money support. Plain teaching on duty, he thinks, is wanted, and the Churches must keep their eyes open for more light from the Bible on such questions as capital and the land. Quite so; but let us not forget the danger of delay. Young men by the score are being made bitter in soul by the unjust remuneration paid to them by masters who give large subscriptions to religious objects. Where is the next generation of men-Christians to come from?

The progress of "the Catholic movement in Scotland" is sketched by a correspondent in The Church Times, who says that he lived twenty years in Scotland. Its inception was "æsthetic," in the introduction of organs; next came liturgies; then it was discovered that prelacy was not necessarily identical with Popery." Dean Stanley's influence in his repeated visits to Scotland was "largely, if not wholly, intellectual and amicable in its results." But Canon Liddon was the great power; he "refused to occupy a Presbyterian pulpit, and uncompromisingly upheld the necessity of valid Episcopal ordination to constitute a true church"; his learning, confidence, and sincerity produced the deepest impression. Now the movement has reached the stage of questioning the validity of the whole Presbyterian system; in other words, all this is a boast of how one system has ousted another, and there is never a word about the truth as it is in Jesus turning men from Satan to God. A sorry business all through, the steps of which are suggestive.

Gradually, if slowly, temperance principles are working their way into public institutions; thus some asylums are conducted in accordance with them. One of the last to adopt them partially is the large Surrey County Asylum at Brookwood, where the committee have made a beginning by discontinuing the supply of intoxicating drinks to the whole of the attendants, male and female. It is thought that once this regulation has become established the daily supply of ale to the patients will also be discontinued. To us it seems incredible that governors and managers of such institutions for the poor and the insane, which are largely filled with the victims of intemperance, can go on giving drinks which have done most of the mischief to the patients.

Street preachers are not to be despised, though some of them may not have had a good education. Passion for souls and love of the truth can supply wonderful force of thought and expression. An admirable example of happy address is given in the Leisure Hour in an article on "The Wit of Common Speech." The preacher was addressing suppositious atheists, and one of his sentences ran thus: "You may blow out a candle, but you can't blow out a star, and you'll never blow out the Light of the world." We pass the good saying on.

UNION HALL MISSION.

The Lord continues to bless the labours of his servants in this mission. A work of grace is going on among the young in the Sunday-school. Some of the most trying of the boys and girls have been brought to Christ recently. There are also other encouraging signs of blessing among the adults.

There is a large amount of distress and suffering among the poor, and we desire to render some temporal help to these during this inclement weather.

ASSISI.—In a deeply-interesting article in the current issue of The Baptist Magazine, Mr. F. A. Freer describes a visit to Assisi, a town whose fame is almost entirely dependent upon the fact that it was the birthplace of the founder of the Franciscan order of monks. Through the energy of Rev. J. Wall, of Rome, and his helpers, the Gospel has been preached in the place, and an Evangelical church formed, the members of which are standing firm amid much persecution. Remarking upon the spiritual condition of Italy, Mr. Freer says: "Among the poor Roman Catholics the need for Gospel teaching is as great and pressing as among the so-called heathen. The idolatry of the people of Italy is of the same kind as that of India, and is justified by those who practise it on exactly similar grounds. The superstition in which the people are brought up is shocking and degrading, sometimes even utterly ridiculous."

The Poor and the Frost.

AN APPEAL TO THE YOUNG AND STRONG.

"Twenty to thirty degrees of frost" means for the young and vigorous, properly fed and well clad, a pleasant and mirthful time. Theirs are the delights of the season, and the ice-bound waters ring with the voices of thousands of skaters, whose pleasure none will grudge. But what is fun to them is death to others; and surely those who find in the keen frost fresh enjoyment ought to remember that there are others—alas! how many—to whom it brings but misery and woe. Think of it, you who sit over glowing fires, in seasonable garments clad, what this cold means for the many to whose fire is but a few embers, and others who have none at all: who have no warm clothing, and whose normal powers of endurance are diminished by want of food. And what of the little children? Thinly clad and weakened by hunger, in ill condition to withstand the biting cold; how intense must their suffering be. Workers on every hand, of every denomination, are saddened by the appalling misery around them. They know the people, among whom they are wont to go out and in; they know the pitiable state of things in many a home; they know the families which outwardly wear a respectable look, but are face to face with want and grim despair.

Besides the "ordinary unemployed"—numerous enough, unhappily — there are thousands whose trade is paralysed by such weather. Many, having a little laid up for a rainy day, are able to manage, but hosts are not; and their destitution intensifies the general pressure of poverty.

The present distress is not confined to the East End; it is as pressing on the South side and in the Central, West End, and South-west as in the East. In short, wherever the humbler classes are found there are now hundreds in pitiful straits. For all these we are anxious to awaken sympathy and gain help, prompt and liberal. We cannot insert the numberless appeals which reach us, while a selection might omit many as deserving as those published. No great central fund is to be expected, or, indeed, wished for; experience having abundantly proved that relief is most carefully and usefully administered by local agents—clergymen, ministers, mission workers—who, being on the spot, know the people and can thus guard against the abuse or misuse of the money entrusted to them.

Here are cases typical of the dire need:—

Our helpers and lady workers have been very busy during the past month or so, visiting and relieving the large numbers of applicants who come to us asking help. When the cases prove to be thoroughly genuine, relief is given in coals, food, and clothing; besides which soup kitchens have been opened for the free distribution of soup among the poverty-stricken and destitute. The following are a few of the many instances where relief has been rendered:—

Husband out of work about four months; five children—one boy twelve years old, an imbecile; room almost bare; clothes pawned for food; a few chips burning in the grate; no food.

Husband out of work for nearly fifteen weeks; five children; mother delicate; no food, no fuel, tools in pawn.

Husband in consumption; eleven children; one girl deaf and dumb; very destitute.

Husband (painter) out of work five months; three children; never asked for relief until everything had been pawned, even to the wedding ring; no food; no fuel; eldest child very delicate; ordered strengthening medicine and nourishment.

Husband (labourer) out of work three months; five children; wife paralysed; no coal, food, clothing, or bedding.

Husband (labourer), out of work three months; two children, youngest three months old, wrapped in an old shawl, its only covering. No food or coal.

Husband and wife, hardworking people; two years ago both were taken ill, not able to do anything since; spent all their little savings; husband been obliged to go to the infirmary; wife and son live together; son cannot get work.

Husband coachman; eldest son, eighteen years, groom; both out of work; not earned a halfpenny for nine weeks; five young children; mother implored for employment of any kind.

Man and wife, both over seventy years; husband suffering from asthma; wife cleans offices or does washing; scarcely any fire, and no food in house; most grateful for coal, bread, and soup tickets.

It must be remembered that amongst the sufferers at present there are hundreds of aged ones—many of them true saints—whose small pittance has failed, and who in attics and cellars may be found shivering without fire or food.

In view of such facts let all who find in such weather health and pleasure, make some thank offering on behalf of those for whom we plead. Let gifts of money, food, and clothing be sent to accredited mission agencies among the poor, such as those which appear from time to time in our columns or Donation List. But let it be done quickly, for now is the need especially pressing and pitiful.

"LIVING OR DYING."

A year lies straight before me;
Dear Saviour, let it be,
In suffering or in waiting,
A year that pleaseth Thee.

My hopes fly ever heavenward,
As 'midst the throng in white
I see a loved one's image,
Her face all radiant light.

Oh, that I could but join her,
And find the needed rest,
Where she, long since, has found it,
Upon the Saviour's breast.

It may be I must linger
Another year on earth,
Living in pain and anguish
'Midst others' joy and mirth.

'Tis hard to see my comrades
Working in busy field,
While I, with idle fingers,
The fruits of patience yield.

But even in the stillness
God may give work to me,
That others far more busy
Have not the time to see.

Some word to help the careworn,
A smile to cheer the sad;
And oh! the thought of labour
Makes even my spirit glad.

But whether work or suffering
Is portioned out for me,
Help me to do thy will, Lord,
And bring me nearer Thee.

THE SUPREME COURT OF CANADA has been called upon to decide whether the power to prohibit the sale of liquor rests with the Dominion or with the provinces. The judgment, in effect, is that the Dominion can prohibit, but not regulate, while the Provincial Legislatures can regulate but not prohibit. Pending a final decision, the provinces of Ontario, Nova Scotia, Manitoba, and Prince Edward Island have voted by plebiscite in favour of prohibitory legislation.

MUST I REFRAIN?—A missionary, writing from Brazil to Medical Missions, touches as follows a question which is exercising the mind of many:—"I am as careful as I can be about my health, but when there are souls around that long to hear of Jesus, and others who need to hear even if they have not a longing after it, must you refrain from telling them even if the effort does tell upon you? If those would come out who can, and who ought to come, then the few out here would not need to live at the rate of a year per month trying to overtake the work of a dozen men. Many have died from fevers, and the climate is blamed; many have suffered the cruelty of Rome, and we blame the natives and their teachers; but who is to blame when missionaries die from sheer overwork?...The sad thought to me is that many missionaries are martyrs, but not so much martyrs to the cause of Christ as to the sinful negligence and disobedience of their comfortable brethren in the homeland."

The Power of Suggestion.

By Mrs. MERRILL E. GATES.

A century ago twenty-eight men in England agreed upon a co-operative movement in purchasing supplies for their families, the idea being suggested to a few. They invested at first only £10.

But from this suggested thought, turned thus into a practical matter, tried at first only tentatively and with no certain knowledge of its results, has grown up one of the great moving forces now acting on society, and millions of pounds are passing through the hands of vast co-operative associations.

All movement and action in the world has been caused by the suggestion of some mind. Ideas move from mind to mind by suggestion, and without it the world and its busy life would soon come to a standstill. Some minds are eminently receivers of thought. Others have power to originate and set in motion ideas. Each one varies in his ability to initiate or to impart thought at different times.

To the importation of ideas, no matter how received, is due all that we see of all kinds of human activity.

If some morning we should rise and there were to be no communication of thought, no issuing of orders, nothing said, nothing suggested, the world would indeed run on for a time from mere force of inertia, and because all was in running order; but how soon in the nature of things, if suggestion stopped, would the world's life stop. The banker, the merchant, the grocer, the manufacturer, the student, the child, hang upon the word which conveys the thought, suggesting action or modes of action for each one. What the power of suggestion does in one day would be the world's history for that day. It is almost magical when we stop to think what Thought, so invisible, does if it is only spoken out and falls into another mind.

It is to this power of suggestion that we owe every good institution we have. An idea suggested by some one mind, or by several minds acting simultaneously, has formed the beginning of every good thing. How greatly are we indebted to those men who have had this power of initiation by the suggestion to others of good thoughts first occurring to their own minds. To be quick to take a good suggestion is the next best thing to making one.

Because we know that mind acts on mind, the spirit of one man on the spirit of another, and because we know that we owe so much in human matters to suggested thought, it is natural and easy to go further and believe that God is able to suggest much, very much to the spirit of man. The Holy Spirit acts upon our mind, and while the manner of his action is mysterious, even as is the blowing of the wind, we must believe the fact. Often we are conscious while in prayer that He is giving us a message, and a large part of prayer is listening to hear what God will say to us. Many of our best thoughts come then. Many of our better intentions seem then to be lighted up with a holy and attractive illumination. This is no doubt because we are in direct communion with God in prayer. Good suggestions entering our hearts then, are not meant to be purposeless. If they are impulses of the Holy Spirit's breathing in our hearts, it will be good for us to follow them out.

"It is not more remarkable," says Westcott, "that man's spirit should be brought into direct connection with the Spirit of God than that one mind should be able to exercise a sympathetic influence upon another."

Surely, we cannot think that God, having created a man's mind, has never thereafter any further power to put Himself into communication with that mind.

If God suggests to us good thoughts of love and kindness to others, and of adoration and thankfulness toward Himself, He will also give us the power to carry them out into noble or beautiful action for Him.

Amherst, U.S.A.

Eternal Punishment.

Dear Mr. Morgan,—I have resolved before the Lord not to accept anything about a servant of Christ unless I hear it from his own lips. So this leads me to write and ask you, Could it be possible that the father of the dear little "Child Minister" could contradict our blessed Lord's own statements (Matt. v. 29, 30; also 1 Thess. i. 10; Rev. xx.), and accept non-eternity? So many false statements are made against God's servants, I feel constrained to write and ask you through The Christian to contradict this. Mr. ——, and men like him, have done such awful harm, and have been so used by the enemy, that one trembles in the present day when the enemy is so busy, and when God's people are accepting the devil's lie, "There is no eternal punishment." Then there is no eternal happiness, for the same word is used for both. May He keep us; may He preserve us blameless. Will you kindly send a line simply denying this?—Yours very sincerely in Christ, ——.

I do not "accept non-eternity." I do accept with reverent, unqualified, and loving acquiescence, every word spoken by the Lord Jesus, every word written by his Evangelists and Apostles inspired by the Holy Ghost.

I have known very good men, whose praise is in the mouth of all who know them, attempt to stamp out this particular doctrine, but by a mistaken method only succeed in stamping it in. I maintain the right of private judgment, so far as interference from others is concerned; always subject to the infallible Word of God. I hold with Paul that those who are weak in the faith we are to receive, but not to judge their doubtful thoughts.

I would suggest the repudiation of such vague phrases as to "accept non-eternity." The existence of such an expression, in view of the awfulness of the subject, indicates the thoughtlessness with which it is often talked about. But I know that this does not apply to my present correspondent.

I believe that God, because He is God, never did, never will, never can, say any but the right word, do any but the right thing, at the right time, in the right way. Because He cannot deny Himself, it is impossible for God to act or speak otherwise than in the harmony of his Divine nature, all whose attributes are in everlasting equilibrium, and constitute Him God.

He never could do anything in the past but what He has done; He never can do anything in the future but what He will do. For there are no degrees of comparison in God. I dare not say He will do his best. There is no best in God. The good is absolute. Abraham, his friend, understood his Friend, and said, with a confidence that made him the father of believers, "Shall not the Judge of all the earth do right?" Jesus knew Him, for He and the Father are one, and He declared, "There is none good but One, that is GOD." As the white light is the harmony of all the colours, so love is the harmony of all the attributes of God, "for God is Love." Love is the positive and absolute good and right. That is what God does, for that is what God is.

When God's judgments are made manifest, every one of them will prove to be, like that of Solomon between the two harlot mothers, a simple appeal to the nature of things; and against it no soul, redeemed or lost, no angel, elect or fallen, in all the universe, will move a tongue. All heaven will declare, all hell will confess: "Love did it. He hath done righteously." Such is my belief.

But if, on the other hand, Anti-Non-Eternity or anything else is made to occupy in our Gospel or in our scheme of doctrine the place which belongs to God (and this is not uncommon) we are "unsound." If the keystone be not in its place the arch falls into a heap. Let us worship God, as He is manifested in the Word made flesh, and revealed by the Holy Spirit: God, who raised up Jesus our Lord from the dead: and if we will to do his will we shall know whether the doctrine which anyone teaches is from man or God.

ROSS BIBLE CARRIAGE.

I have been engaged in the Lord's happy service for the past fifteen years in Bible Stall, Bible Carriage, Gospel Tent, and all kinds of evangelistic work. During that time we have travelled thousands of miles, and have often been weary in the service, but never weary of it. During 1894 we travelled upwards of 1550 miles, and in company with fellow labourers had the joy of holding 119 special mission services, not a mission closing without evident tokens of souls being blessed. By the means of our village tent many have been reached who otherwise would probably have remained in ignorance of God's way of salvation.

We have been encouraged by the large numbers that have come together in every place visited. In some of the darkest villages we found a ready reception, both of the tent, the Gospel, and the preachers; and the greatest regret was expressed in each place when the meetings came to an end and we moved on. We are now, during the winter months, reaching outlying places, holding meetings wherever there is an open door. Recently we held a mission in a dark neighbourhood nine miles from Ross. We accomplished the journey of eighteen miles for six nights in succession in the frosty weather, the horses having to be roughed nightly for the journey. We are now looking forward to the spring. Our village tent has become too small for our requirements, and a friend in London has just offered our mission, for £30, a tent nearly new, which makes up into three sizes to suit the district visited. The tent has only been used for six months. We are therefore anxious to secure it at once, and feel sure that the need of our mission has only to be made known for the amount to be forthcoming.—Yours etc.,

BOSTON MONDAY LECTURESHIP.

Dr. Joseph Cook has opened his twentieth course of lectures in Park Street Church, Boston. The prelude was on Turkish atrocities in Armenia, and he characterised the situation as "between the Russian morass and the Turkish tophet." The dilatory action of the English Government was criticised, also the attitude of the New York Herald, which alone of American newspapers has refrained from censuring the Sultan and his government. Incidents of the horrible massacres were given at length, and these three suggestions offered as remedies: Insistance upon treaty rights, the appointment of Ministers and consuls who will command respect, and more consuls in the interior of Asia Minor. Dr. Cyrus Hamlin read the resolutions drafted by Dr. John Hall, which were presented recently in the mass meeting held in New York to express sympathy for the Armenians, and Dr. J. K. Greene, of Constantinople, offered prayer.

The lecture proper on "The Holy Spirit in Scripture, Science, and Life" aimed to show the identity of Biblical and scientific theism. Among the propositions laid down were these: (1) Christ regarded the authority of the Spirit more sacred than his own. (2) The presence of the Spirit in men was, and is, more important than Christ's own personal presence.—Congregationalist.

THE SOUTHSEA MISSION reports that last season's Gospel tent work on Southsea Common was much used of God. The village tent work was also well maintained. Mr. Denning's evangelistic labours in and around Southsea have been much blessed in many a dark corner. The report of the Mission may be had of Mr. John Denning, Myrtle Cottage, 91, St. James's-road, Southsea.

THE UNVEILING.—7.

THE LETTERS TO THE CHURCHES.—II.

Consider the striking and grievous contrast between the ideal of the Church in the Lord's intercessory prayer for his people (John xvii.) and the actual condition, as depicted in these letters; and compare the glorious description of "the Church which is his body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all" (Eph. i. 22, 23), with the loathsome description of the Church in her last stage, as seen in Laodicea. The former is the Israel of God; the latter the great mixed multitude that fell a-lusting. The comparison and contrast are painfully instructive.

As the cause of all the subsequent failure is the lapse from first love, so the character of that failure is indicated by the repeated reference to "the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes, which thing I hate." The word signifies the "subjugation of the people," just as Balaam, to which it is similar, signifies "seducer or destroyer of the people." It reminds us of the words of Jeremiah: "A wonderful and horrible thing is committed in the land; the prophets prophesy falsely, and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so." And of Jehovah's protest against their burning incense to other gods, "Oh, do not this abominable thing that I hate" (Jer. v. 30, 31; xliv. 4). We may trace this Nicolaitanism through all the succeeding churches.

Smyrna is affected by it in the form of those who say they are Jews and are not (like Sanballat and his fellows in Nehemiah), who, whether Jews or Gentiles in the flesh, profess to be Jews inwardly, to be circumcised in heart, but are really of the synagogue of Satan. But Smyrna is content to eat her passover with bitter herbs; and, bruised and suffering, she is as sweet-smelling myrrh to Him who died and is alive again for evermore.

Pergamos has also known persecution, and Antipas, Christ's faithful witness-martyr, has there been slain. But Pergamos has not been faithful unto death; it has them "that hold fast the doctrine of Balaam, who taught Balak to cast a stumbling block before the children of Israel, to eat things sacrificed unto idols, and to commit fornication." (Observe how the Old Testament symbolism is maintained.) So also it has "them that hold fast the doctrine of the Nicolaitanes in like manner, which thing I hate." The words "in like manner" show the connection between Balaamism and Nicolaitanism. The one seduces, the other enslaves. First, eating things sacrificed to idols—that is, to self in its many forms; then, committing fornication with the world, leads on to subjugation to the priest through the confessional. "And my (professed) people love to have it so," that they may go and sin more and more.

In Thyatira the woman Jezebel, which signifies chaste, teaches and seduces Christ's servants to commit fornication with the world, and to eat things sacrificed unto idols, instead of heeding the Apostle's tender warning, "Little children, keep yourselves from idols." And that of Paul, "Flee from idolatry." Thyatira has, not without reason, been regarded as representing Popery, with its professed celibate chastity, but its actual motherhood of harlots and abominations of the earth.

Sardis, having a name to live, but dead, remarkably answers to Protestantism, none of whose works have been complete before God. No words could better describe the facts. The testimony of Wycliffe and Tyndale, the Reformation under Luther and Melanchthon, were splendid so far as they went, but they did not go to the bottom of the evil; none of their works were completed before God. For He who commanded Moses to "make all things according to the pattern shown thee in the Mount," never relaxes a tittle of his demand. Through David He gave by his Spirit the pattern in writing of the Temple which Solomon built. By Ezekiel He gave the pattern of another Temple, of which the specifications by measurement and number are described to the most minute details.

Five times in the Old Testament and twice in the New, the command to Moses to make all things according to God's pattern, or the fact that he had done so, is recorded; and when all had been completed the Book of Exodus ends with a summary of all the arrangements, under seven heads, with a refrain, like the chorus of a hymn, that it might be held in everlasting remembrance,

"AS THE LORD COMMANDED MOSES."

Israel did not obey them, but God did not therefore abrogate them. Korah and his company rebelled against God's appointed king and priest, and went down alive into the pit. Ahaz removed the altar of burnt offering, and put the heathen altar from Damascus in its place, and cast away the vessels of the Lord; his name is covered with everlasting contempt. "This is that king Ahaz."

Listen to Jehovah protesting in a voice like a trumpet, through Ezekiel (xliii.) against "their setting their threshold by my thresholds, and their post by my posts, for a wall between Me and them. Shew the house to the house of Israel that they may be ashamed of their iniquities; and let them measure the pattern. This is the law of the house upon the top of the mountain: THE WHOLE LIMIT thereof round about is most holy."

Philadelphia, the church of brotherly love, has a little strength, and has not denied the Master's name. An open door is set before her to evangelise the world, by Him who has the key of David; and He will make the synagogue of Satan, who falsely say that they are Jews inwardly, but are full of dead men's bones and all uncleanness, He will make them to bow down and worship at her feet and know that He has loved her. Compare Ezra vi. 6-16.

The Philadelphia stage represents a little reviving in the Church's bondage (cf. Ezra ix. 8, 9), but it passes away, and the Laodicean condition is the worst of all. The leaven of Nicolaitanism has leavened the whole lump. "The prophets prophesy falsely; and the priests bear rule by their means; and my people love to have it so; and what will ye do in the end thereof?" The ruling powers in the Church have assumed the priesthood which is the Christ-given service of all believers (Rev. i. 5, 6); they have lorded it over God's heritage (God's clergy), claiming the title for themselves.

The Lord Jesus spoke of the Temple of his body. In the Epistles to the Corinthians and the Ephesians the Apostle shows that the body of each believer is a temple of the Holy Spirit; that the Temple prefigured the Church, which is Christ's body, the fulness of Him that filleth all in all. And in the Epistle to the Hebrews the Tabernacle and all that pertained to it are declared to be types and shadows of things in the heavens. If God laid so much stress on making the copies of spiritual things exactly according to his pattern, surely it is because He will be exact in requiring that the things typified shall also be according to his pattern. For copies are nothing as compared with their originals.

But what, even in Protestantism, is faithfully according to the New Testament pattern? The bishops, the overseers of individual churches, have been parodied and burlesqued by the "Historic Episcopate." The simple ordinances expressive of life out of death, and the sustentation of that life, have been degraded into sacraments or charms. Every gift—of pastors, teachers, and evangelists, helps and governments—has been transferred to an "order" of men of whom, as an order, the New Testament knows nothing. In Nonconformity the title of pastor is applied to him who is the correlative of the New Testament bishop, and in whose training everything has been cultivated rather than the pastoral gift, so that this has almost become a lost art. Repudiating the blasphemous assumption of "Our Lord God the Pope," Protestantism is nevertheless replete with lordly titles; and with more than questionable taste has adopted a title which exclusively belongs to God, as the professional prefix of a humanly-devised order of his servants. Less astute and worldly wise than Pagan or Papal Rome, Protestantism has allowed herself to be split into fragments, each labelled with the name of some man or doctrine; whereas the Divine "Pattern" is the human body, where, with every conceivable variety of function, all is under the direction of the ruling Head. Protestantism will never overcome Rome, except as the Romish spirit is exorcised from herself.

But while the prophets and priests have undertaken the exercise of every gift, instead of "perfecting the saints unto the work of ministering, unto the building up of the body of Christ" (Eph. iv. 11, 12, R.V.), this has not been against the will of the people. They have willingly yielded up their responsibilities to "the pulpit," and taken their position as "the pew"—eulogising or criticising the pulpit, according to their taste. "Ephraim is oppressed and broken in judgment, because he willingly (or waywardly) walked after the commandment," when "the King [Jeroboam] took counsel, and made two calves of gold, and said unto them, It is too much for you to go up to Jerusalem"—where God was worshipped after the manner He had appointed (Hosea v. 11, 1 Kings xii. 28).

Why, when prophets prophesy falsely, and priests bear rule by their means, do the people love to have it so? Because, by this arrangement, they think they transfer their responsibility from themselves to the Church, so that while in Romanism they can confess and sin again, in Protestantism they can sit in their pews and do nothing.

What is the remedy? A new denomination? A new Evangelical Church? In the next generation it would take its place among the rest. The remedy is given by the Lord Himself: "Behold I stand at the door and knock. If ANYONE will hear my voice and open the door I will come in to him and sup with him, and he with Me." "I will share with thee thy sorrows (thy failures, thy sins), and thou my joys (my grace, my righteousness, my peace) with Me. And to him that overcometh, to every single individual, who, in the midst of Laodicean self-pleasing and self-complacency, spiritual sloth or spiritual pride, overcometh the self within him and the world without, will I give to sit with Me in my throne, even as I also overcame, and am set down with my Father in his throne. He that hath an ear, let him hear what the Spirit saith unto the churches."

So far from the Reunion of the Churches of Christendom being possible upon th false foundation of recognising each other's posts and thresholds as equivalent to those of God, the Spirit shows that the exchange of first love for Balaamism, Jezebelism, and Nicolaitanism has produced a loathsome compound, against which the nature of the Amen, the Faithful and True Witness, heaves. His prayer of love that they all may be one, shall be fulfilled, when this body of our humiliation shall have been fashioned like unto the body of his glory, in the City which is the bride, the wife, the true yokefellow, of the Lamb as it had been slain; the City within whose narrow gates of pearl nothing unclean, none but the Chosen Generation, the Royal Priesthood, the Holy Nation, the Peculiar People, shall by any means enter. Meanwhile, the tender appeal of John, our brother and companion in the tribulation, and Kingdom, and endurance in Jesus, has fallen upon the Church's ear and heart through all her earthly sojourn: "Beloved, let us love one another."

Money.—1.

"Have you ever observed," asks Ruskin, in "Time and Tide," "that all Christ's main teachings, by direct order, by earnest parable, and by his own permanent emotion, regard the use and misuse of money?" We might have thought, if we had been asked what a Divine teacher was most likely to teach, that He would have left inferior persons to give directions about money; and himself spoken only concerning faith and love, and the discipline of the passions, and the guilt of the crimes of soul against soul. But not so: He speaks in general terms of these. But He does not speak parables about them for all men's memory, nor permit Himself fierce indignation against them in all men's sight. The Pharisees bring an adulteress. He writes her forgiveness on the dust of which He had formed her. Another, despised of all for known sin, He recognised as a giver of unknown love. But He acknowledges no love in buyers and sellers in his house. One should have thought there were people in that house twenty times worse than they; Caiaphas and his like, false priests, false prayer-makers, false leaders of the people, who needed putting to silence, or to flight, with darkest wrath. But the scourge is only against the traffickers and thieves. The two most intense of all parables: the two which lead the rest in love and terror (that of the Prodigal, and of Dives) relate both of them to management of riches. The practical order given to the only seeker of advice, of whom it is recorded that "Jesus loved him," is briefly about his property: "Sell that thou hast."

One of the most eloquent and fearless sermons with which St. Paul's Cathedral ever rang was one of the latest ever preached by Canon Liddon, and it was a denunciation of the worship of wealth and of the consequent degradation of married life and social life which it never fails to inflict. The fame of the preacher and the distinction of the pulpit attracted passing attention, but only passing attention, to his theme. Thousands of sermons of a similar kind are preached every year from the pulpits of all churches. From the days of Chrysostom till now congregations have been made to tremble under the fiery indignation of mighty preachers who have exposed covetousness and denounced upon it the wrath of God. But they trembled only for a moment; a little nervous fear shook them, not the fear of God.

DR. JOHN HARRIS'S PRIZE ESSAY, "MAMMON."

Fifty-eight years ago the "original advertisement" of a certain book began with these sentences:—"Many of the wisest and best of men are of opinion that there is no sin so prevalent among professors of the Gospel as the love of money, and yet there is no subject on which so little has been written well." Thereupon Dr. John Harris attempted the task of exposing "the selfishness of men in money-making, and of pointing out the tremendous consequences of accumulating property, as this sin is associated with the vilest of crimes, which exclude from the kingdom of heaven." Mark the words—"the sin of accumulating property." Whether the book touched that vital point we shall see. Dr. Harris's description of things in his time makes you turn to the date of his book to see whether he did not write in 1894 instead of 1837, so exactly are the periods alike.

"Money," he says, "is our idol." "The selfishness of the Church has, in every age, threatened the Gospel with failure." "When competition rises to a struggle in which neither time nor strength is left for higher pursuits; in which every new competitor is looked on in the light of an enemy; in which every personal exertion and practicable retrenchment, in the mode of conducting business, do but barely leave a subsistence, there must be something essentially wrong in our ruling spirit or social constitution." Dr. Harris avers that the way in which business was then conducted involved all the risk, uncertainty, and unnatural excitement of a game of chance. More strongly still he speaks—"This is the age of reckless adventure.

THE SPIRIT OF THE LOTTERY IS STILL UPON US."

Every word of his is true of to-day, true both of the Church and of the world, with greatly increased emphasis.

Perhaps the most painful feature of his time and ours is the one which he thus describes, "The consequence of affixing the highest worldly rewards to wealth is, that to be rich is accounted a merit, and to be poor an offence. Nor is this the worst, a false standard of morality is thus created, by which it is made of less consequence to be wise and virtuous, than to be rich."

Now we want to ask, why has there been apparently no improvement either in the world or in the Church in respect of this one sin, which Andrew Fuller thought would probably prove "the eternal overthrow of more characters among professing people than any other sin, because it is almost the only crime which can be indulged, and a profession of religion at the same time supported?" Notwithstanding general censure, it is never grappled with in the determined manner in which we deal with sins of the flesh; it is spared. But why? Are we not sufficiently conscious of its prevalence and its danger? Have ministers of the Gospel not been faithful in declaring the whole will of Christ? If so, is this because they have not fully grasped Christ's teaching on the subject of money? Is money a subject on which a few choice spirits only have, in all ages, seen the mind of God, while the majority of church members have been in the dark, most of them, happily, free from danger, because dwelling in lowly places? Has God more light to shed forth from His Word? Have most of us, somehow,

MISSED THE VITAL POINT OF OUR LORD'S WILL?

Our next business will be to inquire what is the teaching of the New Testament, and then to show where man's teaching has generally deflected from it. Thus we shall see how it is that the Church has failed to create a new conscience and a new life.

We take, first, the Sermon on the Mount, in which our Lord says: "Lay not up for yourselves treasure upon earth, where moth and rust doth corrupt, and where thieves break through and steal; but lay up for yourselves treasure in heaven, where neither moth nor rust doth corrupt, and where thieves do not break through nor steal: for where your treasure is there will your heart be also. The light of the body is the eye: if therefore thine eye be single, thy whole body shall be full of light; but if thine eye be evil, thy whole body shall be full of darkness. If, therefore, the light that is in thee be darkness, how great is that darkness! No man can serve two masters: for either he will hate the one and love the other, or else he will hold to the one and despise the other. Ye cannot serve God and mammon." We can see no other tenable, and, in view of the prevailing worldliness, no other efficient, meaning of the words but the literal one: we ought not to save money, to amass capital. Commentators do not generally take that view, yet it evidently presented claims to the minds of some of them. The extremeness of the view frightened them—its contradiction of that worldly prudence which has always been held in such high esteem among men.

But we have only to find out what is true. If the literal meaning be true, is the saying a counsel of perfection, intended only for those who are able to receive it? Certainly no other meaning suits so well the remainder of the chapter, which teaches us that our eye is to be single, not fixed on earthly goods and on heavenly treasures, and that we are not to try and serve two masters, God and mammon.

Next come the beautiful encouragements to trust daily in a gracious Father, who knows what things we have need of before we ask Him. "Take no thought for your life—consider the lilies—watch the sparrows." These exhortations would appear to be useless to him who has thousands laid by. Again, our Lord adds, "Seek ye first the Kingdom of God and his righteousness, and all these things shall be added unto you." Then again, as if anticipating our thoughts and objections, He adds, "Take, therefore, no thought for the morrow; for the morrow shall take thought for the things of itself. Sufficient unto the day is the evil thereof." No less than one-seventh of the Sermon on the Mount is devoted to the statement and enforcement of the position, that we ought not to lay up treasures here.

TEXT-CARD MISSION.

Dear Sir,—Since the letter you kindly put in The Christian, about £35 has been sent for the Text Card Mission. I have forwarded, by kind help in packing on the part of the Bible Society, a tin-lined package, 70lb. weight, to Nyanza, with 1000 large and 10,000 small cards. Large numbers have gone to Mexico and South America. Forty congregations in one place "send sincere thanks for the great impulse given to commit the Word to memory."

The Malagasy said, "They come as a ray of sunshine and encouragement." A pathetic appeal comes from Gantok, Sikkim. From Tibet, "The Tibetans still keep their land close from the children of God, but we have sent many cards. They are God's Word." Now I have only one edition of Tibetan, ten varieties. I want a new one of forty. Who will help? From Ceylon comes an almost indignant appeal. "I have seen beautiful large cards in Tamil, printed by you. I believe there are no such in Sinhalese. It is a great want among our Christians, for whom we can obtain no texts for walls. We will buy them if you will only have them done."

From Trevandrum I hear: "In the awful leper hospital, where 150 are severed from their kind, and it takes all my strength to keep from fainting outright, it is pathetic to see them all trying to spell out the words week by week." So writes a loving Christian woman.

From Mombasa: "Our people like the Swahili cards; even poor readers can spell them out, and they are such a pleasure to these simple souls. One or two prayed so earnestly that God would bless those who thus send to hungry souls the bread of life, broken, as it were, into crumbs." This blessing I pass on to the donors of the £35. About 8000 cards have gone out as its result.

For the fresh needs about £200 will be required, but I mean to go on, believing it will come. The "cruse" has not yet failed, nor do I believe it will till the Lord sends abundance of rain upon the earth.

—Yours in Him, Emma Grimké.

Wellington House, Higher Broughton, Manchester.

AT HAMPSTEAD various temperance organisations have held three meetings in the Drill Hall under the presidency of Messrs. Hugh Matheson, Miller, and Marnham, and addressed by Mrs. Atherton, Mrs. Durrant, Dr. Norman Kerr, Mr. T. Whittaker, J.P., Mr. Ogram Webb, and others. A series of meetings for women of all classes have also been held in different halls and drawing-rooms in the neighbourhood, at which numerous pledges have been the result of individual appeal.

THE CALEDONIAN CHRISTIAN CLUB.—The rooms of this institution, 5, Southampton-street, Holborn, were taxed to their utmost capacity a few evenings ago, when a large gathering of young men and women, by no means all of them Scotch, but mainly recent arrivals in London, listened to a musical programme provided by members of the Brockley Presbyterian Choir. The conductor, Mr. Pellatt, rejoiced in the happy blend of nationalities, and Mr. H. L. Millar, of Charing Cross, suggested that other church choirs might follow the kind example of the Brockley friends. The churches generally being so far from the centre of London, such deputations of earnest and accomplished singers would do something to win fresh arrivals to the membership of their respective churches.

TEMPERANCE PROGRESS.

Some are despondent at the slow progress which the temperance cause has made, but when it is considered that some sixty years ago the "Seven Men of Preston" were a much-despised minority, and that abstainers are to-day some million-fold in number (albeit a minority still, though not by any means despised), we should be encouraged to fresh effort and more consecrated service. The organisation whose work has perhaps most deeply impressed the public mind and conscience is the

which came into existence some thirty-eight years ago by the union of the National Temperance Society with the London Temperance League. It early devoted its attention to influencing the Christian Church by sending to 10,000 clergymen copies of Mrs. Wightman's "Haste to the Rescue," the direct outcome of which was the formation of the C.E.T.S. The Wesleyan, the Congregational, and the Baptist societies were formed by the initiative of the League, which has by such efforts as these undoubtedly diverted from itself revenue which would have enabled it more extensively to prosecute its operations amongst other influential bodies.

The League has been successful in reaching leaders of thought in both the medical and teaching professions by means of the popular breakfast meetings at their annual congresses which have been carried on for many years. The first medical gathering, some twenty-five years ago, was small, but the number of medical men who now avowedly, and the still larger number who practically, treat disease without alcohol is almost entirely owing to their education by the League; the Cantor Lectures of Sir B. W. Richardson at the Society of Arts twenty-one years ago at the request of the League, and his subsequent adhesion to total abstinence from the force of scientific fact alone, gave great impetus to the movement and deeply impressed the public mind, as has also the earnest persuasion of Christian medical abstainers who have dealt faithfully with their patients.

The struggle of the school against the drink has been materially assisted by the League's work amongst the teachers, the pioneer agent of what has now become a great and well-organised movement having been deputed by the League to visit elementary schools in London over thirty years ago. The late Prof. Cheshire delivered 2100 lectures in London Board Schools alone, and during the last year of his life carried on an effective work in the pupil-teachers' centres. The League has also sought to influence those engaged in municipal affairs leaders of industrial progress, and members of the legal profession to consider the position of the temperance enterprise towards their respective departments of national life.

WORK IN THE ROYAL NAVY

has been carried on for twenty-one years on behalf of the League, by its honorary superintendent, Miss Agnes E. Weston, well known to readers of The Christian, who will sympathise with her in the deep sorrow she is just experiencing through the death of her mother. The League has spent some £5000 on this work, and it is a gratifying fact that Miss Weston's Naval friends have shown their appreciation of it by contributing to the funds of the League over £800. The valuable work done in the training ships is shown by the fact that forty to fifty per cent. of the lads transferred to Naval duty are pledged abstainers; from this source alone, 2746 pledges were taken last year.

The League also carried on for many years a valuable work in the Army. Assisted greatly by Miss Robinson in its early days, it owed much in later times to the late Samuel Sims, shortly after whose death, however, the Army Temperance Society was formed, under the sanction of the War Office, and, with a Government grant of £500, is carrying on an effective organisation; the League being represented on its council by fifteen members. The Bands of Hope carried on in the Greenwich Royal Hospital Schools and on the training ships in the Thames may be considered

EFFORTS OF A NATIONAL CHARACTER.

Perhaps one of the most important enterprises, however, is the extensive circulation of literature bearing upon the question—from bulky volumes to leaflets at 4d. per hundred—which has taken place during fifteen years by the National Temperance Publication Depot; the sales have amounted to £120,000 since the department was taken up by the League. The spread of educational temperance and an enlightened public opinion combine to indicate a great future for this branch of effort, if, in the meantime, sufficient funds are forthcoming to place increased capital for its development at the disposal of the committee, who have assiduously given their careful thought and attention to this end. The Temperance Record is the organ of the League. The necessity for sowing the country "knee-deep in literature" on the question still exists, and can only be supplied by the provision of sufficient funds, which are also required to carry on the pledge-signing crusade which the League successfully inaugurated by a series of public meetings last month, designed to increase the number of individual abstainers by the personal effort of those already in the ranks. One of its latest meetings was held at Mildmay Conference Hall on the 29th ult., and the following words from an earnest address by Dr. Monro Gibson on that occasion serve to emphasise the foregoing facts:—"The whole drift of Scripture was in favour of their position. They were told not only to avoid that which was wrong, but to choose the more excellent way, and that no man liveth unto himself or dieth unto himself. There was one old Jewish custom, that of pouring out wine upon the altar in sacrifice. That is what was meant in the passage about wine cheering the heart of God and man. If it was appropriate to pour wine upon the altar in sacrifice in olden days, how much more appropriate was it in these days and in this land? That is what the abstainers had done, and they said to everyone to-day, 'Give it up. Sacrifice it upon the altar of God.' This was the best use they could make of it, and if only all England would do that, they could without irreverence speak of the sacrifice as cheering to God and to man."

The Secretary of the League is Mr. R. Rae, 33, Paternoster-row, E.C.

AMONG JEWS IN EAST LONDON.

The Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel, conducted by Revs. D. Baron and C. A. Schönberger, has opened an important centre of work in East London. In the presence of a goodly assemblage of friends, the new mission house, 114, Whitechapel-road, was dedicated to its sacred use on Wednesday afternoon last week. Situated in a thoroughfare much frequented by Jews, the mission-house provides a preaching hall on the ground floor, and a reading-room above. A helper in the work, Mr. P. Dressler, with his wife, will reside on the premises, and inquirers will be welcome at all times. A Bible class will be held every evening, and varied effort will be put forth to enlighten the Jewish population, and win them for Christ.

Rev. James Stephens, of Highgate, who presided over the dedication meeting, spoke of the obligation of evangelising Israel, and the growth of sympathy therein which comes of careful Bible study. Though God has a controversy with Israel, yet his purposes endure, and He will yet do great things for and through his people. Mr. Stephens referred to the widespread operations of the Hebrew Christian Testimony to Israel, in behalf of which Mr. Baron, during last year, visited Austria and Hungary, and laboured among rich and poor in London, Scotland, and Ireland. For mission work it was inevitable that the London centre should be in the East-end. The well-to-do Jews are spread over the West-end, and other districts, and not concentrated, as are the hundred thousand poor in the East-end. Though there are several missions already, yet they are not so numerous as the agencies for a similarly large population of Gentiles. Mr. Stephens expressed the conviction that the many foreign Jews that have found a home in England, had, in God's providence, been brought here for a great purpose. They have left countries where little or no effort is made for their evangelisation, and now that they are with us all that is possible should be done to tell them of Christ. The work has been started in entire dependence on God, and without any spirit of rivalry with existing missions.

Mr. Baron told of lectures delivered to West-end Jews, and outlined the general work of the Mission; and Mr. Schönberger described the principles which will regulate the Mission. The various addresses were pitched in a high spiritual key. The modesty and boldness of the workers were duly recognised, and the heartiness with which friends have come to their help was readily acknowledged.

VICTORIES IN HAVRE.

Fifteen years ago God put it in the heart of some English Methodists to arouse their Protestant brethren in Hâvre. Rev. William Gibson, who had already begun work in Paris, and other places, was led to Hâvre. Hiring a cab, he ordered the driver to take him through some of the lowest quarters of the city. What he saw impressed him so forcibly that he made up his mind to start at once. Finding a room to let in the Rue de l'Hôpital (now Rue Bazan), he engaged it on the spot, and Mr. Godel, a student for the French Methodist ministry, was temporarily put in charge.

Into this room soon crowded drunkards, thieves, gamblers, wastrels, all the scum and terror of the neighbourhood, not to hear the Gospel, but to abuse the foreigners who dared to bring it to them. The following year Rev. Geo. Whelpton volunteered to take the charge of the work. His aggressive spirit could not content itself with the small and stuffy mission-room, and so he started at once a search of more suitable premises. At the other end of Hâvre was a low café and dancing saloon of the worst description, the French counterpart of "Paddy's Goose." It was only possible at first to hire it for one night in the week. Those who took part in these earliest meetings will never forget their experience. A few ladies had volunteered to help with the singing. Upon arriving at the hall they found it packed with men and women, smoking, swearing, singing coarse songs, and filling the place with tumult. The moment the ladies tried to sing a hymn, the crowd struck up with the "Marseillaise." The mention of prayer was met with derision and laughter. It was only possible to pray silently, and trust that God would restrain the violence of the company.

At last relief came in the person of the "Commissaire de Police," who speedily cleared the hall, and generously escorted the workers down the street to protect them from the fierceness of the crowd. Superficial observers would have pronounced this meeting a failure. Not a word was spoken, not a hymn was sung, not a prayer was offered audibly; yet who shall say how the Spirit of God works? Of those who composed that disorderly assembly, one is to-day a class-leader, and another is poor steward. One night of such experience would have satisfied most men, but Mr. Whelpton bought the place, and defied the devil in his veriest stronghold. For some time the rowdyism continued, but gradually the mob got tired of their occupation, and the hall became almost deserted. Then the real struggle began. Again and again there were only from six to a dozen people at the services. All the efforts in the world seemed unavailing to bring the people in. Romish bigotry and hatred, worldly indifference and the general moral degradation, were barriers only to be overcome by much prayer and patient toil. Anyone now visiting the hall in Rue Henri IV., and seeing the orderly and devout congregation, would little guess through what storm and stress, and hopes deferred, the present results have been achieved.

Meanwhile the work commenced in the little room situated in Rue de l'Hôpital was progressing. English services had been added to the already numerous duties of the minister, but the inadequateness of the premises and its heavy rent were a serious hindrance to progress. In 1891 a large warehouse, situated close by in a very prominent position, was bought. Extensive alterations having been completed, the place was dedicated to God's service in December, 1892. Two public services are held in it every Sunday for English residents, and three for French ones, besides Sunday-schools and prayer-meetings in both languages, and week-evening services. God has sealed it as his house; not a week passes without someone crying out for mercy within its walls, and going home rejoicing. Friends passing through the town are always welcome. The premises, which are situated at 21, Place Gambetta, are open on Sundays from 9 a.m. to 10.30 p.m., with services proceeding at almost every hour. Unfortunately, the purchase money has not all been paid yet; a debt of £2430 hangs upon the Mission.

Rev. P. H. Ellenberger, B.A., 11, Rue Mare, Havre, will be glad to answer any inquiries regarding the work.

AT NANTWICH a week's temperance mission has been the means of securing 130 pledges.

"After the Thousand Years."—2.

Dear Sir,—A correspondent ("T. R.") has raised an interesting question as to the word "dispensation" in Eph. i. 10. The Greek word is oikonomia, answering to our "economy." On page 97 of the book I say, "It is not eternity which is excluded by the first word, dispensation," etc. How, then, does this word exclude eternity? To answer this we must refer to the other Scriptural uses of the word, for admittedly it is hard to translate (see Alford in loco). In 1 Cor. ix. 17 it is used for stewardship; the Gospel was Paul's trust, stewardship, or commission. Eph. iii. 2 contains an exactly similar use of the word. It is Paul's stewardship of the grace of God to the Ephesians. Col. i. 25 is identical. The analogy of these uses therefore points to a commission, or trust, or stewardship, in which our Lord Jesus Christ is the oikonomos. But what is an oikonomos? He is a governor in Gal. iv. 2, a chamberlain or manager of the city in Rom. xvi. 23, and a steward in all the other occurrences of the word. Now, all these appeals to Scriptural evidence point to the Manhood of the Lord Jesus Christ, to his official Headship under God—in short, to his human Kingship, which, as we know from 1 Cor. xv., is to be terminable, and delivered up to the Father at its end.

Then as to "fulness of times" in the same verse. My critic claims that this must mean eternity. But the words are plêrôma tôn kairôn, "the fulness of the seasons." The "seasons" are to "eternity" as the lakes to the oceans. How can the fulness of the lakes ever mean the fulness of all the oceans? But the fulness of the kairôn conveys, indeed, as we have shown, an age "magnificently prolonged." Nothing less would explain the use of that grand word plêrôma. Nothing greater within the limit of time is conceivable. But the kairoi and oikonomia exclude eternity. For "seasons" will cease ere eternity begins, and the stewardship of the fulness of the seasons is to be "delivered up."

There is room, no doubt, in the word oikonomia for the idea of plan or "providential arrangement" in addition to that of stewardship, and this also seems to me to be temporal. Dean Alford treats the whole phrase as temporal, not eternal, in its meaning.

In 1 Cor. xv. 23 we read, "Christ the first fruits, afterwards they that are Christ's at his coming. Then (eita—afterwards) cometh the end." We have shown that the intervals between these several events are not mentioned, the order being the question, not the intervals. But in verse 28 it is written, "And when all things have been subjected unto Him (that is, at the end of the millennium, then, tote—at that time) shall the Son Himself be subjected to Him that did subject all things unto Him, that God may be all in all." It has been argued that the "then" in this case admits of no interval, and that this is against the view of a post-millennial reign. But it is not so, as verse 27 shows, "But when He saith?" or rather, when He shall have said, "All things are put in subjection," when that proclamation is made by the Father to the universe, as a call to all to own the sceptre of the Son, "it is evident that He is excepted which did subject all things unto Him." That is to say, as verse 28 immediately declares, that at the moment of the Son's investiture with the sceptre and crown of Universal Monarchy, He will, as it were, bow his human knee (perform an act of homage) in reverence to his God, who has thus exalted Him, and thenceforth reign as God's vicegerent, owning his kingdom to be the kingdom of God (as in the Lord's Prayer "Thy kingdom come") his throne to be his Father's throne, Himself indeed supreme over all creation, but God supreme over Him in his human nature though not in his Divine.

On page 27 it is stated that apart from Israel, "the one redeemed nation," the earth will be peopled in the millennium by "a multitude of tribes, tongues, and peoples, whose obedience as to the great majority will be unreal, and their hostility merely veiled." How, it has been asked, is this to be reconciled with Isa. xi. 9: "The earth shall be full of the knowledge of Jehovah as the waters cover the sea"? The chapter itself in which the passage occurs answers the question, and reconciles the two statements. Verse 14 explains that Israel will "fly down upon the shoulder of the Philistines on the west; they shall put forth their hand upon Edom and Moab, and the children of Ammon shall bey them." "And Jehovah shall with his scorching wind shake his hand over the river, and utterly destroy the tongue of the Egyptian sea." That is, Christ will command recognition of his name by miraculous judgments, and his people will subdue their ancient enemies by force. The knowledge of Jehovah that shall cover the earth is not by conversion, but by coercion (see Psa. lxxxiii. 13-18). "Persecute them . . . fill their faces with shame, that they may seek thy name, O Jehovah. Let them be confounded and troubled for ever, yea, let them be put to shame and perish." What for? "That they may know that Thou alone whose name is Jehovah art the Most High over all the earth." In Ezekiel thirty-two times the words (or their equivalents) occur: "That they may know that I am Jehovah," and this always as the result of judgments. The knowledge of Jehovah referred to in Isa. xi. corresponds with that of Christendom. Idolatry ended "before the terror of Jehovah," and Divine worship observed in an external and formal manner" (Isa. ii. 18-22).—Yours in the blessed Hope,

Ardfert. Geo. F. Trench.

"AT THE CROSSING."

By Mrs. HARVEY-JELLIE.

The day was cold, the sharp wind whistled through the high buildings, and the people seemed selfish and irritable. In one of the busiest parts of the crowded city there stood a man whose pleasant words and ready hand to help had made him a blessing to many.

They called him "Policeman!" Thomas Vengern was his name, and he could tell how years before, when a young man, he realised that change of heart we call regeneration. The joy of salvation being his, he dedicated himself to his Saviour, henceforth to be and do everything for Him. Therefore the over and above, in all his performance of duty, and his painstaking care and self-denying efforts.

For years he had been as a tower of strength to weak and trembling ones, as they sought to cross that dangerous way. Always a bright assuring look, and the right word at the right time. Not few were the prayers he had sent up for young men on whose lips he heard language that told of a depraved heart, and in the coming time of open revelation, many a life will trace back its start to a new career from a word in passing that policeman.

On that cold day he was thinking of his little May, the one sweet child, who had been a bright summer blossom in his happy home. Something in the day reminded him of the morning, more than a year gone, when he left her ill, and heard the loud wheezing on her chest as he went down the stairs. He remembered how she used to sit on his knee, when duty was over, and listen as he told of children he had seen, of narrow escapes, of dangers he had saved many from. He recalled the last words he heard her say, "Father, take care of the children to-day, and tell May all about them when you come home." But she was still and lifeless before he got back, and no bright little eyes looked up for his story.

"I'll tell her, bless her, when I go up yonder," he said, as he raised his hand to stop the traffic; and if it passed first across his eyes no one would guess, for he was "Policeman," and on duty. The crowds were great all day, and but for his vigilance many would have been injured. Yet all went well till just as evening closed in, when a terrible accident occurred. Two vehicles collided, and the horses kicked and dashed about in a furious manner. In the rush a lady with a child fell under the horses' feet. Like a flash he heard, "Take care of the children, and tell May when you come home"; and in reckless haste he dashed into the danger, seized the child in his strong arm, and clutching the distracted mother he placed her on the pavement with her child by her side.

The panic continued, but he slighted no chance of saving, while he could, though growing fainter, and almost unable to keep his stand. He thought the blow he received in his side had not been severe, although he knew the horse struck him twice, but now the way was clearer he began to reel. What followed, he did not know until he became aware of it, as he lay in his own bed.

"It is two days ago, Thomas," said his anxious wife.

He slowly remembered, "I saved the child, though; I'll tell May soon," he said.

"Complications! poor fellow; and all for sake of others," said the doctor.

"Unto Me," said another voice, for that child saved was to be a saver of many.

"He will die," wailed the wife in her agony.

"He that believeth in Me shall never die," said a truer voice.

Days of weakness followed; the policeman knew his task was ended. Sometimes he grew confused in thought, sometimes he talked anxiously of his post of duty.

"Wife, what will they do at that crossing? Some are so fearful." Then he would talk of little May, and the hope of seeing her soon, On the last morning he slept quietly, then all at once he called her, "Ellen, see, the crossing is blocked, they wait for me; my hand is heavy, I cannot raise it to clear the way."

"It's all right, Thomas; someone is there," she said.

Just before he died he became quite conscious, and his thoughtful eyes looked at her.

"I'm waiting to cross now," he said, "not in the noisy streets, but the dark way that leads into light. Jesus guards that crossing. His hand is lifted up to remove the hindrances. When your turn comes He'll lift it again. Look, He raises his hand; I shall be safe, and you. What could we do at that crossing if his hand was not lifted up?"

Presently she saw the satisfied look on his face, and knew he recognised the hand that signalled him away, and the faithful policeman received his "well done."

Fellow Christians, amid the whirl and perplexities of life it is well to remember God's hand is lifted up to guide, as surely as to his people of old (Ezekiel xx. 5, 6), and when we stand at that crossing, we need not fear the darkness, but trust the hand that has guided all the way, for it will be lifted up to take us safely to the glory side.

GONE TO BE WITH JESUS.

We had often heard her singing of the sweeter "by-and-by,"
Of the sweeping through the City, of the "over there" on high;
Do you think that she is silent? She is singing, singing still,
In the summer of the dawnlight on the summit of life's hill;
Singing praises in his presence, who has brought his singer near,
In a voice that knows no quiver, in the Saviour's loving ear.
She had spoken of her Saviour; she is speaking to Him now,
In the near and inner beamings of the glory on his brow.
Will she tell Him we are coming? Will she tell Him how we fare?
Oh that precious talk with Jesus; without one sad word of care,
With no fear of interruption, or distraction. And He talks
With her sweetly of his glory, as in Paradise He walks.
She was precious to the dear ones who had loved her as their own:
She is precious, far more precious, with a preciousness unknown,
To the Saviour who redeemed her with his own blest precious blood.
He has met her, and received her, on the other side the flood.
All He wanted, all she hoped for, is completed on his breast:
He has found the gem He purchased—she has found love's perfect rest.
We are coming, happy sister, we shall meet again some day!
You have left us in the shadows, but we wait a breaking day.
We are serving the same Master, who promoted you so soon,
From the darkness of sin's gloomland to the everlasting noon:
Singing, speaking, serving, precious, we will serve, and speak, and sing,
Till with you we join the worship in the presence of the King.

NOTES ON DAILY READINGS.

SUNDAY, FEBRUARY 17.—ACTS XVI.

Paul's Second Missionary Journey (1-10).—He had a wonderful power over young men. Timothy, Titus, Mark, bore his impress. Circumcision was a matter of complete indifference so far as saving grace was concerned, but it conciliated Jewish prejudice; when, however, it was insisted on as necessary to salvation, no one more stoutly refused to admit it than the Apostle. (6) God's guidance often consists in closing doors right and left, leaving us no alternative but to go straight forward. "The Spirit of Jesus" was leading the Apostle in a way that he knew not. He started to visit his first churches, he was led much beyond his first plan to Europe. (9) This vision voiced the yearning of Europe. Grecian wisdom, and Roman materialism were unable to satisfy the human heart.

The Gospel's Introduction to Europe (11-18).—When we obey Christ we have a straight course, calm seas, and fair winds. Luke has joined the little band, hence the "we." This was an epoch-making moment, but how quietly it is recorded. There was no welcome for the Gospel, the need for it was unspoken and unfelt. It stole into Europe like morning dawn. (14) Lydia was a woman of enterprise, else she had not emigrated from Thyatira, or been in business for herself. What a contrast between her and her poor sister demon-possessed!

The Scene in the Prison (19-40).—Some are converted by the gentle opening of the heart, others amid the convulsions of a storm. The first knowledge of salvation may have come to the jailor through the raving of the girl. When Christ touches the gains of men He arouses their direst opposition. This first anti-Jewish riot has its counterpart still. When the heart is right with Christ it can sing in the dark. The circumstances were very startling. The doors all open; the prisoners not using their opportunity of escape; the strange care which the new prisoner took for his gaoler's life; the moral power which was so prominent in the bearing of these two men: all these made God seem near, and took the gaoler back to the girl's strange cry about the way of salvation. Paul's answer is blessedly simple. There is nothing to do except to trust in what has been done, or better still in Him who does all. Accept eternal life, confess your Saviour, and live a manly, self-respecting life among men.

MONDAY, FEBRUARY 18.—ACTS XVII.

Thessalonica (1-9).—"It behoved the Christ to suffer." This was the stumbling-block of the Jews, that their Messiah should be crucified, and that the humble man of Nazareth could be the long-expected Deliverer. They spake truly. The world is wrong way up. The Gospel puts it right by turning it upside down. With what indifference they spoke of Jesus, one Jesus. But they said truly that He was King. Hast thou enthroned Him?

Berea (10-15).—The Gospel was baptized in the fire of persecution from the first. Thus it spread, and its exponents were purified. The open heart of the inquirer, and the comparison of Scripture with Scripture, are the certain path to the clear knowledge of God. How unutterable the loneliness and sorrow of the Apostle as he reached Athens! Did the doubt ever enter his mind whether he was on the appointed track? If it did, he at once dismissed it. His motto was to forget the things behind. When you have once taken a path in dependence on God, dare to believe it is right, whatever appearances there are to the contrary.

Athens (16-34).—One purpose consumed him. "One thing I do" was a thread on which the many beads of his experiences were strung. Persecuted and rejected to-day, he is at his favourite work to-morrow. How different this intense earnestness from the trifling of the so-called philosophers of Athens. In dealing with men, recognise all of good you find in them. The art of preaching is to find texts in the streets and objects of daily life. The more deeply-taught heathens have always recognised that there is an unknown abyss beyond their idols, and have felt after God. The one converting force is the story of the Man who died and rose; in a word, the Cross, which to the Greeks is foolishness. How blessed to know that our Redeemer will be our Judge! The Man Christ Jesus, whom God hath appointed Judge.

TUESDAY, FEBRUARY 19.—ACTS XVIII.

Corinth (1-4).—He entered in weakness, fear, and much trembling, and did not try to attract by adapting his words to his hearers, but began to preach Jesus Christ, and Him crucified. Similarity of trade threw him and his new friends together. In his epistles to Corinth, Paul repeatedly refers to his independence of their contributions, because of the practice of his handicraft. Sitting with them at their common toils, he won them for Christ.

The House of Crispus (5-11).—"Constrained." He was weary of forbearing. The word was like a fire shut up in his bones. Where men obstinately refuse the Gospel, it is better to turn from them for awhile to others. Very few of us can say that our hands are clean of the blood of men. Paul baptized Crispus (1 Cor. i. 14) as an exception to his general practice, and an acknowledgment of the importance of the new departure from the synagogue, to work amongst the Gentiles.

Gallio.—"Cared for none of"; more correctly, "had not the care of." His action implied desire to shirk responsibility, rather than indifference. The matters in dispute did not come under his jurisdiction, but belonged to another court or department of the administration. He was judge of the civil law; these were matters ecclesiastical. A similar case is that of Festus in ch. xxv. 17-20. How like human nature, from Cain downwards, to shift the burden from our shoulders. But God will judge, and will righteously apportion to each his responsibility.

Apollos (18-28).—How marvellously our life dovetails! First, Paul wins his friends for Christ; then takes them with him to Ephesus, whither after he has left, the eloquent Apostle comes whom they in turn lead into the way of the Lord. Learned, mighty in the Scriptures, fervent in spirit, bold in utterance, all the conditions of an efficient evangelist combined in his case. But he needed to know the death, resurrection, and ascended glory of the Saviour; and to experience the baptism of power. Humble disciples may perform an immense service to the Church and the world by leading such men to a deeper insight.

WEDNESDAY, FEBRUARY 20.—ACTS XIX.

The Twelve Disciples (1-7).—Paul had planted at Corinth. Apollos went there to water. Large numbers became his devoted followers. This, however, excited no jealousy in the heart of Paul. Apollos and he were only instruments through whom God wrought. Meanwhile he had work to do on souls whom Apollos had missed in Ephesus. They, like Apollos, knew only of John's baptism. Their knowledge of Christ was limited to the dispensation of John. They had only heard of Him as the Lamb of God. The death and ascension of the Lord and the descent of the Spirit were alike unknown. Evidently it is the prerogative of every Christian to receive the Holy Ghost. He must be in us, on us. All the salient points of Pentecost may be ours to-day. Note the remarkable fact of their double baptism. How much may twelve men do when God is with them in power.

The Mighty Prevalence of the Word (8-22).—Again the religion of Christ is spoken of as The Way (9 R.V.). It was a brave act to start a separate cause. But how much better than to spend the time in wrangling with those who definitely refused and were disobedient. The evil spirits know the voice of the true servant of God. A very powerful revival set in, measured by the magnifying of the name of Jesus, the forsaking of magical arts, the sacrifice of immense wealth, the stirring up of violent opposition. Oh for similar spectacles amongst ourselves.

Tumult (23-41).—As soon as religion touches men's pockets they resist. When men cannot argue they attempt to overpower the truth by noise. The town clerk is a model of officialism and worldly prudence. There are times when it is better to be quiet. Paul was well advised to abstain from this assembly in which He could have done little. Be valorous, Christian soldiers, but be discreet. Do not throw yourselves down from the mountain's brow, unless God clearly calls for it.

THURSDAY, FEBRUARY 21.—ACTS XX.

Journeyings Oft (1-6).—In these few verses brief notes are given of far-extending efforts for the Gospel. How busily filled and how usefully employed were these months of Christian toil! They left their trace on many a struggling church. The devil defeats himself by persecution. He forces the Christian missionary further afield. The efforts to extinguish the fire only scatter the coals.

Hurrying to Jerusalem (7-18).—The apostle desired to give in the contributions to the poor saints of which he speaks so often in his epistles. How interesting to hear that long discourse into which the apostle probably crowded much that we have in his epistles! The accident to Eutychus could not interrupt it. Day broke before he finished. (14) What blessed intercourse with Christ he must have enjoyed when rounding the headland in that lonely walk to Assos! Too hurried to stop at Ephesus, or even visit it. The presbyters or elders of the infant church met him on the sands of its port.

Parting Words (22-35).—How bravely he looked out on the future. He knew there was danger, but steered a straight course. He desired only to fulfil his allotted work, and his ministry. Oh to look away from men and things to the Lord Jesus, with no other purpose than to realise his peace. (28) The presbyter is not only over the flock, but in it (see R.V.). Those who have the charge of others, must be very watchful for themselves. We are the property of the Son of God, purchased by his precious blood. (31) The beloved teacher goes, but the Lord Himself remains unchangeable. He builds up and incorporates with the saints. God's blessedness consists in giving. The Lord Jesus finds his heaven in labouring to help the weak, and in giving grace for grace. This is a sacred addition to the beatitudes of Matt. v.

FRIDAY, FEBRUARY 22.—ACTS XXI.

Farewell on the Shore (1-6).—These partings come to us all. Beloved spirits visit us for a few hours, and then press forward, urged by impulses which are their only but sufficient law. How eagerly we would keep them by us, but it may not be. We can do little else than accompany them to the beach and wave our last farewell. Prayer is our best resort in these moments of heart-anguish.

The House of Philip (7-14).—Thus Philip had quietly lived through these busy years, usefully filling some smaller corner in the great vineyard, but equally faithful as in the days when chosen to be a deacon, or when concerned in the great revival at Samaria. How touching must those tears and entreaties have been to Paul, and how masterful his sense of Christ's will. Let us live in the inner circle of our Lord's presence, always getting our injunctions at first hand. Let us not allow our eye to become double. It is the single eye which is ever full of light. Friends may hinder instead of helping us, in prosecuting the path of duty, by allowing personal feeling to influence their counsels.

Jerusalem (15-40).—Mnason was an early disciple (R.V.). He could remember the first days of the Church's story. (19) Note how Paul attributed all to God. "What God had wrought by his ministry." (24) It has been said that this advice was inexpedient, and that Paul would have more wisely kept aloof from thus countenancing the strong Jewish colouring which the proximity of the Temple gave to church life in Jerusalem. But it coincided with his perpetual intention to yield in matters which did not concern principle to the prejudices of those whom he would benefit (1 Cor. ix. 21). (27) It was well that the Roman garrison was in easy reach of the temple-court where this émeute occurred. How forcibly in these agonised moments must Paul have remembered Stephen. "Thy martyr Stephen," was now nearly thy martyr Paul.

SATURDAY, FEBRUARY 23.—ACTS XXII.

Paul's Defence (1-21).—(4) This Way (R.V.). He enumerated the facts of his virulent opposition to Christ, that they might be convinced of the adequacy of the evidence of his Resurrection. (8) Paul was never tired of referring to this moment. It is well to have had a definite experience, but if you never had one, rejoice that he who believeth in the Son HATH everlasting life. (14) These items of God's intention for his servants are very instructive. Is his purpose being realised in us? To know, to see, to hear, to witness. (17) Let us learn from the early Christians to be more in prayer. Paul's epistles abound in references to blessings that came to him as he prayed. (20) That reference shows how Stephen's end was fresh in his mind.

Paul's Protest (22-30).—Again his citizenship saved Paul. He was no coward, and was prepared to lay down his life if needs be, but he did not scruple to avail himself of any substantial ground of protesting against cruelty and injustice. Up to the point of stopping a wrong we have every right to protest and appeal to the uttermost of our power, but when once a wrong is done then we must meekly suffer it, leaving God to vindicate us, as He most certainly will. The peace that passeth understanding kept the apostle's heart and mind, else, with his vehement temperament, he could never have acted and spoken so calmly.

FEBRUARY 24.

CHRIST AND THE MAN BORN BLIND.—John ix. 1-11.

GOLDEN TEXT, verse 5.

THIS miracle was performed in Jerusalem, near one of the gates of the Temple, and on the Sabbath day (14). Read in connection with the incident related at the close of the previous chapter, it is a beautiful testimony to the self-forgetting love of Jesus.

Verse 1.—In the East cases of blindness are common. Dr. Geikie says that "in northern Europe there is only one blind in a thousand, while in Egypt there is one in every hundred." This was a case of blindness "from his birth" (1). We cannot speak of him as having lost sight, for he never had any. He knew nothing of light, beauty, colour; but lived in perpetual darkness. Being blind, he was helpless, and was obliged to beg (8). This is the condition of man spiritually. He sees not his own danger, the remedy at hand, the beauty of Jesus; and is helpless to remove his blindness. But, observe, it was this condition of distress and helplessness that attracted Jesus to him. "He saw"—not as others saw, but with a heart full of compassion. (Compare Exod. iii. 7; Matt. ix. 9; xiv. 14.) It is our need that brings us into contact with Him. There are no persons so greatly to be pitied as those who are self-satisfied.

Vers. 2-4.—How striking the contrast between the disciples and Jesus! The disciples misunderstood the blind man, and like Job's friends attributed his affliction to some special sin (2). The Pharisees were evidently of the same opinion (34). The thought was a very cruel one, and though our Lord corrected it here (3), and in Luke xiii. 1-5, yet it is common with many still. Our Lord's reply does not mean that this man and his parents had never sinned, but that this blindness was not a direct punishment for specially great sin. Do not judge of a man's spiritual condition by the calamities that befal him. Some of the best of saints may endure severest afflictions, while some of the ungodliest men may go comparatively free. This is not the day of Judgment, but of Grace. The disciples speculated, as many do, "How did the evil come?" Jesus is occupied with a much more practical question, "How can it be removed?" The presence of evil in the world is his opportunity for service, in fulfilment of his great mission. And we are to be like Him (4 R.V.); our opportunity is brief. "My candle is burning low, and I have not another," was the needlewoman's excuse for toiling so incessantly. We have but one life-day. Don't waste it.

Vers. 5-7.—The cure is not only a fact, but a parable. It is a physical sign of the truth stated in ver. 5. It was clearly a Divine work. It was not the removal of some film that had rendered the eye useless, but was practically a work of creation. Jesus gave sight where there had been none before; this made the miracle more wonderful (32). The first lesson to be learned is that nothing less than a Divine Saviour can save us. We need to become "new creations." Next, it was effected by unlikely means (6). By means that men despise God does his mightiest works—a serpent uplifted on a pole—a youth with sling and stone, and now, in saving men, a Cross, which the wise men call foolishness (1 Cor. i. 23-25). Yet the cure required the obedience of faith (7). The command said not only "wash," but specified a particular pool for the purpose. This Pool of Siloam is "a small, deep reservoir in the mouth of the Tyropœon, into which water flows from a smaller basin, excavated in the solid rock a few feet higher up; and then the stream is led off along the base of the steep, rocky point of Ophel to irrigate the terraces and gardens extending into the valley of Jehoshaphat below. The reservoir is fifty-three feet long, eighteen feet broad, and nineteen feet deep."—Robinson. John adds the meaning of this name, because its name makes it the symbol of Him who is the Sent of God (4). The rejection of the waters of Shiloah (Isa. viii. 6) brought the Assyrians upon the Jews as an overwhelming flood. The blind man's obedience to our Lord's command was an expression of his faith. (Contrast Naaman, 2 Kings v. 11-13).

Vers. 8-11.—The investigation of this story was most thorough. First, by the neighbours; and next by the rulers (14-34). But the result of the investigation was that the miracle was placed beyond all doubt; the man became a bold witness to Christ, confessing first the name of his deliverer (11), then that Jesus could not be a sinner, as the Pharisees said (25-31), and next that He was a prophet (17). In his interview with Jesus, he went beyond this, and worshipped Him as the Son of God (35-38).

THE BIBLE.

Notes of addresses to children, by Pastor H. J. SHIRLEY, Fulham Congregational Church.

THE Bible is THE BOOK. All good books draw their goodness from the Bible. It is like the earth. How many gardens there are full of beauty, but all must be formed of the earth; so there are many good books, but all must be made from the Bible.

When a new discovery is made in the world of science everyone thinks it to be very wonderful; but finding a thing out is not half so wonderful as first putting it where it is discovered. Suppose when you are going home from school one of you boys notice a stone in the road, and, being of a kind disposition, you go to move it to the side, so that the horses should not stumble over it. When you lift it up you find beneath it a linen bag full of sovereigns. Of course you should take it to the police, but they tell you it was put there on purpose for a kind boy to find. "Here's a splendid find!" you say. "What a lot of things I shall be able to get now!" Home you go to father and mother, and tell them of the wonderful discovery you have made, and invite them to share in your good fortune. "But," father says, "the finding is not much, it's a deal more wonderful to think who put the bag there. I should say the person must be very rich or very funny to be putting money in holes in the road."

And we should say that father was right. Let us think a bit of the wonderful discoveries that are made in the earth. Stones that flash in the ring round a lady's finger; coals to burn; iron for use. Why, there are hosts of things that man could not make, but which he finds when he digs into the ground. The earth with all these wonderful things in it is a very wonderful earth. So with the Bible with its many wonderful storehouses of grace and knowledge which man could never have created. God only can make the diamonds. Man makes a paste imitation. God only could make the Bible. Man's books do not stand the cutting and polishing, and the wear and tear that the Bible has sustained. It has had some sledge-hammer blows, but it is a diamond which has never been chipped.

So remember, boys and girls, that the Bible is the most wonderful Book in the world. It is wonderful in many ways, one of which is the wonderful time that was occupied in writing it. It takes a long time to write a book; perhaps, if you or I were to start, we should only get one or two pages written, and then have to stop. Some few writers can produce three or four books in a year, but books that last take longer. Gibbon was occupied twenty years in writing his "Decline and Fall"; another author spent thirty-six years in the preparation of a dictionary: but the Bible took 1500 years to write from the first book to the last.

Another wonder is the large number of men who wrote the books of the Bible. Usually, on opening a book, we see upon the title-page the name of the author. There is generally only one name; sometimes there are two, and very seldom more. But upon the title-page of the Bible we might inscribe the names of Moses, Samuel, Joshua, Ezekiel, David, Matthew, John, Paul, and a lot of others whose names do not appear—fifty or sixty or more were concerned in writing the Bible. It seems impossible that all these men should have thought alike, and yet the Bible is evidently written on a plan. In a way, of course, these writers thought in different fashions, as when a boy says to another, "I think so-and-so." His companion replies, "No, not that way, this is the better way." "Well, I should say it like this," says a third boy; and yet all the ways may lead to the same end.

The authors of the Bible all thought alike. God told them what to write about, but they each wrote in their own way. They wrote what they thought, but God made them think. Another wonder in connection with the Bible is the many pieces of which it is made up. Usually books are finished at once, but in the Bible we have sixty-six different pieces. These pieces are not put together higgledy-piggledy. Every one is in its right place, and one story runs right through.

Many of you have seen in the Abbey or church a large stained-glass window. The window is comprised of many pieces of various coloured glass, and the fine picture which you see is made up, not of one piece as it would appear, but of scores of little bits put together. In the Bible we have sixty-six pieces put together to make one beautiful picture of God and his love to us. When we remember the time occupied in writing, the men who wrote, and the various pieces which make it up, we are convinced that God made the Bible; because no one else could produce this wonderful Book.

NOTES FROM JAPAN.

THERE is a preaching station in Tokyo just at the entrance to Uyeno Park, that was established at the time of the National Exposition, and has been kept open ever since. In order to attract people to the services as they chance to be passing by, a verse of the Scriptures is copied on a large sheet of paper, and this is suspended in front of the place. Then there is added a notice of the meetings, and perhaps the names of the speakers. It has been the custom to select a new text of Scripture for each day, and a policeman living just across the street began to notice these changes, and was gradually interested in reading these various texts. By this means he became acquainted with the way of salvation; and then he went to the services and professed his faith in Christ as his Saviour. And so in ways that are to us surprising and wonderful, God is making his truth known and followed among the people of this land.

Rev. H. Waddell, of the United Presbyterian Mission (Scotland), reports that some time ago a copy of the New Testament was given to a man connected with the railway service in Tokyo. He did not care for Christianity, and without examining what it contained began to use it for waste paper. But one day he chanced to see the words "Love your enemies," and he was so struck with this new idea that he felt a deep longing to know more of this strange doctrine which he was now convinced must be very good. Then he went to the Uyeno Mission, and asked for another and a complete copy of the New Testament, so that he would be able to learn all that the Book contained. A copy was given to him, and he read it with great care. The result was not only his own conversion but that of his whole family. Not long after his wife died a triumphant Christian death, and he and the rest of the family are connected with one of the Methodist churches in that city. H. LOOMIS.

American Bible Society, Yokohama, Japan.

THE PHILO-JUDEAN SOCIETY, of which Louisa Lady Ashburton is president, was founded in 1826. Since then it has carried on a most useful work amongst Jewesses in Whitechapel. Meetings are held on Tuesday afternoons in the Mission Hall, Old Montague-street, which is hired for the purpose, and from seventy to eighty Jewish mothers attend weekly. These poor women receive sixpence for two hours' work, whilst the Bible is read and explained, and hymns are sung. A Bible-woman visits in the homes, and by this means the work is often a blessing to the husbands and children. Friends of the society should communicate with Miss Wellesley, 10, Granville-place, Portman-square, W.

MR. T. E. MURPHY IN NEW YORK.

When Mr. Murphy consented to a campaign for Gospel Temperance in this city (says the New York Independent), it was not without hesitancy. Few who have not looked into the matter closely realise how many agencies are at work here among the victims of intemperance. There are the Salvation Army, with its superb organisation; a large number of missions, some supported by individual churches, as St. Bartholomew's Mission; others general in their character, as Jerry McAuley's Water-street Mission; besides such bodies as the Temperance Unions, the Christian Alliance, etc. Still, Mr. Murphy never believes in holding back on account of difficulties, and in this instance they seem to have acted as incentives rather than as hindrances. He showed good generalship as well as genuine Christian courtesy in coming in not as an outsider to carry on a work which should be distinctively his own, but as an assistant to agencies already in the field.

At the close of the address, one evening, there came the invitation to come up and sign the pledge. One after another the men left their seats and passed up the aisles. There were young men and old men, strong men and weak men; and the hands that took the pencil to sign the pledge sometimes shook, not always with age or physical weakness, but under the effects, not yet removed entirely, of a debauch. Among them was a young man, well dressed, who yet had taken his sandwich and cup of coffee with an avidity that showed genuine hunger. He sat in the crowd and yet alone, and after the signing turned away still alone.

As the procession passed along there came one man, bent over, unkempt, with furtive glance, apparently unwilling to meet the eyes of Dr. Hamilton and the assistants who sat at the tables. One of them looked up as he passed, and with astonishment recognised him as only a year ago the proprietor of one of the largest and most frequented drug stores in the wealthiest portion of New York city. They had frequently seen him there and read his initials in mosaic in the floor. He had passed out of their sight, and they had scarcely thought of his disappearance. Down, down he had sunk until he was one of those there that evening without a shelter for his head, with nothing except the sandwich and the coffee to satisfy his hunger. He signed, and received the ribbon. But those men could not let him go like that. A strong, hearty hand was reached out to him, and the friendly clasp seemed to give new courage, for the man looked up frankly into the face, smiled his thanks, but apparently could say nothing. "Do you keep track of these men?" "Wherever we can. We follow them here and there over the city. Sometimes they slip us, but we do not lose them often. This man we do not propose to lose." After the men came some of the women, not all signers of the pledge, but some enrolling themselves among the workers and taking the button of the Union, pledging not merely their temperance, but their labour for those who had fallen by the way.

The results have been most encouraging. Notwithstanding the disadvantages of the first week's work, 1000 men signed the pledge, and during the second week considerably over that number. An earnest effort is being made to keep Mr. Murphy in this city, where there is so much need of a work for which he has shown such marked fitness, and in which he has already had such success.

While "Ned" Murphy has been in New York, his father, Francis E. Murphy, has been conducting a temperance campaign in Pittsburg, Penn., where twenty years ago he first came before the country as the greatest temperance orator of the time. Since then he has grown gray and has lost some of the old-time oratorical fire, but his power has not really much abated, as is shown by the experience of this past month. He began his meetings in the East End Theatre, and the second night went to the East End Tabernacle Presbyterian Church. From then until the close of the month the meetings have been held in the Presbyterian, United Presbyterian, and Methodist churches in all parts of the two cities of Pittsburg and Allegheny. The attendance has been large and the interest intense. Although the enthusiasm has not been so great as it was twenty years ago, at least five thousand persons have signed the pledge.

Death of Dr. A. J. Gordon,

BOSTON, U.S.A.

With heartfelt sorrow we have to record the death of our much-esteemed friend and brother Dr. A. J. Gordon, of the Clarendon Street Baptist Church, Boston. He departed this life on Saturday, February 2, at the age of fifty-nine, after a severe attack of illness, occasioned, we doubt not, by his devotion to the service of his Master. The loss to the Christian world by his decease is incalculable. It is no exaggeration to say that he was one of the very best and choicest spirits on the whole American continent. Many of our readers will recollect his visits to this country, and his labours in the sacred cause of foreign missions—a cause that was very dear to his heart. The saintliness of his personal character gave peculiar weight and emphasis to his tender and urgent appeals. We deeply grieve at the thought that we shall hear his gentle voice no more, and that the rich influences of his character and Christian attainments are but a memory of the past. But the memory will be a lasting one, and his written and printed utterances will be a prized possession to all who knew him, and many more.

As to the circumstances of Dr. Gordon's death, we extract the following details from The Boston Post of February 1. It will be seen that the crisis of his illness was then thought to be past. Our contemporary says:—

"Last evening Dr. Gordon successfully passed the crisis of his illness, unless a relapse should occur. For many weeks past he has been ailing. On January 21, he delivered an address on Missions before the Young Men's Social Union at Wesley Hall, Bromfield-street. This was his last appearance in public. The following morning he was unable to leave his home in West Brookline-street, and he rapidly grew worse. Day and night succeeded each other, but he could not sleep. He became delirious, and his family were summoned, in anticipation of his death. The doctor diagnosed his case to a reporter as a bronchial seizure, with complicated pulmonary troubles. Mrs. Gordon, a son, and a daughter, were near him. He calmly announced his conviction that death was imminent, and bade farewell to those about his bedside. But a speedy recovery is now assured; the doctor reports the patient out of danger."

These hopeful expectations, alas! were not destined to be realised; for on February 2, as we have stated, Dr. Gordon passed into the presence of the King. In his case, as much as to anyone we have ever known, the translation from earth to heaven would not be an abrupt one, for he lived daily in the presence of the Saviour; the very light of the spiritual world seemed to shine from his placid face. We can well believe the words of our American contemporary when it states that he had "endeared himself to his congregation, and won admirers and warm friends in other denominations." During the last week of his illness, we are told, his residence was besieged by callers, anxious to know the latest turn in his condition. To his sorrowing wife and family we tender our sincerest Christian sympathies.

To Mr. Moody and the numerous friends who gather around him at Northfield year by year, the loss will be irreparable. From the commencement of these summer conferences Dr. Gordon has taken a leading part in them, and one year when Mr. Moody was prevented, by his Gospel labours on this side the sea, from being present, he entrusted the guidance of the conference to his beloved Boston friend.

We give, on another page, perhaps the latest of Dr. Gordon's published articles. In itself it is a highly stimulating and impressive deliverance on the great subject of missions; it will carry a still weightier message to many a heart, because the hand that penned it has now been stilled in death.

A NEEDY FIELD.

The State of Bastar, India, has a population of 300,000 souls. Two years ago we were moved of God to carry the glad tidings of salvation to Jagdalpur, the capital, and settled there. It had taken us one month to get there, travelling on horseback, in palanquin, and by cart during May, the hottest month of the year in this country.

We received no welcome on arriving. The natives wanted to get us out, but could do nothing desperate, as the State has lately passed under control of the British Government for a few years, the present Rajah being only about ten years old.

Here is an opportunity to take this field for God. The seed is falling into good soil; we have a tiny band of Christians there already. On our arrival in this place we lived in a mud house for a few months, when, on the 1st of March, we suffered the loss of all things temporal by fire. After this our dwelling place was sometimes a tent, sometimes a hut, but we always had a roof of some kind over our heads, food to eat, and raiment to wear. Meanwhile, our brick hospital was in course of erection, and when a half of one wing was completed, we joyfully entered, but, alas! the strain of the past months resulted in illness, and though by then the monsoon had set in, we were compelled to leave for, what we fondly hoped then, would be for a short time only. Difficulties and perils attended our way, but God brought us safely to our journey's end.

Leaving little Evangeline and myself in Bombay, Dr. Batstone started on his return trip. In October, circumstances made it advisable for him to come this way again, and here we have been ever since, in Yellandu, many hundreds of miles from our field of labour. We cannot return as there is no money with which to carry on the work at present.

This Bastar field is to become self-supporting. We represent the Transit and Building Fund Society of New York, America, and are workers in Rev. C. B. Ward's mission. A half of the hospital is already up; the foundation of the mission house is laid. In time we shall be able to complete these buildings as money is promised for them, but there are other needs pressing sore upon us, and we are looking to Him who has promised to "supply all our need." Hardly anything has been done for six months. Won't some of the Lord's people help us? It is his work, and must go on. In a few years the field can be made thoroughly self-supporting, but we need money to make it so. The place is ripe for missionary labour.

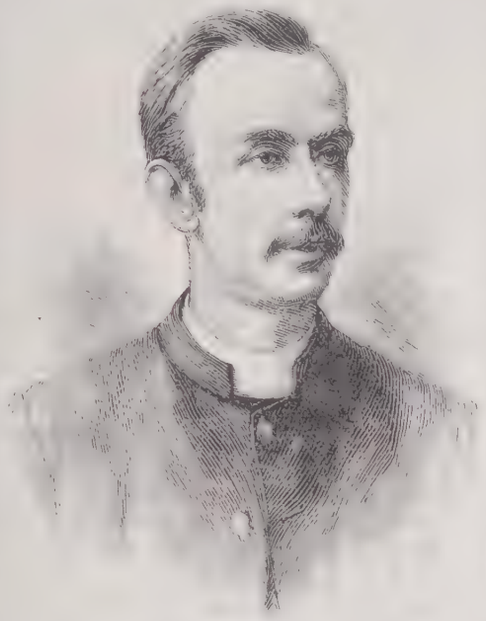
These are the people who only a few short years ago offered upon their altars human sacrifices, and when missionaries dared, for Christ's sake, to attempt what we are now able to do, they were told by the old Rajah (now dead) if they did not leave they might be poisoned, so they had to flee for their lives. They cannot turn us out now, and I believe would not if they could, for during our short stay with them they have learned to love us a little, and often have come to us for help and sympathy in time of trouble. Who will help us to maintain our hold upon these dear souls for whom Christ died? I am the first white woman who has been privileged to live among them, and my heart throbs with sympathy and love for my dark sisters. For the present address me, Yellandu, Nizam's Dominions, India.

(Mrs.) Alice Batstone.

The London Central Mission.

Rev. JOHN E. WAKERLEY, Superintendent.

London's awakening, social, civic, and religious, has been closely allied with the "Forward Movement" among the Wesleyans, which began with the founding of the London Mission some ten years ago, and has since spread to various parts of this gigantic city. The operations of the Central Branch of the Mission have not perhaps excited so much outside stir as some other parts; but for some years now this district has been released from the bonds of ordinary "circuit" routine, with very striking results in the way of advance. When Rev. Edward Smith then came to Clerkenwell as the first superintendent of the Central Division, there were some 120 persons in Church fellowship at the church in St. John's-square. According to the latest report the membership figures show a good sum in multiplication—nearly 1500, including juniors and those on trial, and embracing the whole of the Mission.



The present superintendent of the Central Mission, whose portrait appears on this page, is Rev. John E. Wakerley, a man in every way fitted for the post. He has youth on his side, and a full measure of that spiritual unction which the Methodist system in its best features appears to foster. Mr. Wakerley, in his early days evidently had leanings towards a life devoted to commerce. To the Oxford circuit belongs the privilege of pushing him out into the higher walk of the Gospel ministry. He was trained, theologically, at Didsbury and Handsworth Colleges. Like most of the men to-day in charge of Wesleyan special missions, he had an extra year at college, as if God were preparing him for the special rôle he would by and by have to fill.

His first charge was in Nottingham, where he remained the orthodox term. Then he was invited to Highgate, where his three years' pastorate showed such promise that Conference allocated him to the special post in central London when Mr. Smith returned northwards five years ago. In this large parish, which comprises the whole of Clerkenwell, part of St. Luke's, and part of Holborn, Mr. Wakerley has worked with undoubted success. Of course he has been most ably and zealously helped, and very grateful he is for such backing up. He declares that no minister could have, or could desire, a better and more whole-hearted band of workers than those that follow his lead.

The headquarters of the Mission are the chapel and premises at St. John's-square. The varied branches of the work, with recent extensions, have now quite overflowed the limit of the accommodation there, and the important scheme is now in hand of enlarging the church and its subsidiary places of meeting, so as to house 1550 people at the least. This forward step will cost £7000. It is clearly called for by the exigencies of the work, and doubtless the money will be forthcoming; but there is room for the generosity of all who would oil the wheels of the Gospel chariot in central London.
